"'The Man Who Turned White' was screened last week, and in every respect it was hailed as a 'knockout.' It is one of the biggest and best pictures Robertson-Cole has ever handled for American distribution. Everyone who saw it was enthusiastic about the production.

"Money was spent lavishly, though carefully, on 'The Man Who Turned White,' and the expenditure shows in the finesse of the attraction. An entire Arabian village was built just for this picture, elaborate interiors were erected in the Hampton studios, and the entire country was scoured for the finest type of Arabian horses, which stand out in this offering like the fiery steeds of the chariot rings of old.

Good Supporting Cast

"The supporting cast contains all prominent players, with the beautiful Barbara Castleton as leading woman.

"The most minute detail was attended to in the filming of 'The Man Who Turned White,' and will not be overlooked in any Superior Picture. The smallest feature received the same studious attention as the most prominent episode. Costumes were modeled after the most approved Arabian fashions, houses built to conform in every respect to the abodes of an Arabian village.

"'The Man Who Turned White,' which will introduce Warner, a Robertson-Cole star, is unquestionably the strongest vehicle ever accorded him for screen production, and is regarded by the star himself as one of the finest characterizations he has ever been called upon to make. It is written by F. McGrew Willis, and adapted for screening by George Elwood Jenks, and is a thrilling and colorful story of the desert in which Warner plays the part of an officer of the foreign legion and then the leader of a marauding band of Arab brigands, a scourge to the caravans that start from Mzab.

"As Ali Zaman, the terror of the desert, Warner has an opportunity to again prove that he is one of the most finished actors in America. So true to the type is he in this role that few of his host of admirers will recognize in this fiery, hard riding desert chieftain the fastidiously dressed H. B. Warner of so many Broadway successes.

Story of Desert

"Because he is wise in the crafts of war, the desert brigands adopt the cashiered officer (as Warner proves to be), and follow his command like sheep. He himself does everything to cultivate a hatred for all men, and especially those of his own race. He flatters himself that he has put aside the moral laws of his people and adopted those of the desert Arab, but it is easier to deceive one'e self than the world, and deep down in his heart he was not half as hard and pitiless as he thought. Then comes the crisis when the Arabs capture a beautiful American girl, which results in changing the entire course of Zaman's career.

"There is real body to this story. The self-sacrifice of Captain Rand, also played by Warner, in giving up his career to cover the malefactions of an officer who once saved his life in battle, is a stirring point about the plot.

"Desert pictures are few and far between, and always have a wide appeal. There isn't a single movie fan who isn't interested in the mystery of the silent sands, and that is why Jesse D. Hampton selected 'The Man Who Turned White' to inaugurate the Warner series.

"All the atmosphere of the desert has been faithfully conveyed to the screen by Hampton. Many thousands of dollars were spent in the erection of an entire Arabian village, Mzab in the story. The opening resembled a scene such as one would expect living in the atmosphere of the Arabian Nights.

"Elaborate preparations are now under way for the introduction of 'The Man Who Turned White.' Robertson-Cole have opened an extensive advertising campaign which will continue over a preliminary stretch of six weeks, leading up to release date. This is followed by a nation-wide campaign.

"Red Glove" Episode Described

Universal Company Explains How Many Thrills are Injected Into Serial During the Eleventh Chapter

THE eleventh episode of the current serial, "The Red Glove" is cited as a fitting example of the modern serial chapter and a Universal official describes the running story by taking it up where "Billie" (Marie Walcamp) is closely followed by the "Vulture" in a car, and as she approaches the ferry, she is unable to stop her car which falls into the bay.

In the opening of the eleventh episode she is rescued from the water by ferrymen but realizes that she has lost the Red Glove. The Vulture realizes this also and the two dive for the glove but unnoticed to both, a seagull has snatched up the Red Glove and carried it away.

A fight ensues but the Vulture is afraid to carry on the fight in the public place and escapes.

Meanwhile Billie's absence has caused considerable consternation at the Halstead home. While Mrs. Halstead is accusing her of wrongs, Billie appears and asks to be given fair treatment, telling the family that she cannot explain her actions. Starr Wiley, the villain, overhears her say that a man is in the case and realizes that he is the one referred to.

Billie then tries to phone Tia Juana but gets no answer. Becoming alarmed, she leaves for the cabin alone.

Here she is trapped into the chimney by Wiley and young Vernon who is indebted to Wiley. After Wiley has fired the chimney, Billie succeeds in climbing out but falls to the ground unconscious. Wiley attacks her but Vernon turns upon him and Wiley returns to the Halstead home.

A maid in Wiley's employ obtains the whereabouts of Tia Juana and tells Wiley.

Dan realizes that Billie is evidently trapped and goes to the cabin where it is discovered that both have been fooled into thinking that they have talked to each other over the phone. They rush to the home of Dan's sister where Tia Juana and Jose are hiding. True to their prediction Wiley and the Vulture are there and a fight for life is made by Tia Juana and Jose.

The entrance to the house is chained and a human bridge to Tia Juana's room is formed by Dan, Vernon, and Billie. During the struggle which follows Tia Juana and Jose manage to slip away but Billie is swung into the air four stories from the ground.

First National Managers Vote For Chesters

AT the meeting of First National Managers in the Hotel Astor last week an informal vote was taken as to the sentiment regarding Outing-Chester pictures, which are being handled largely by First National exchanges, and every manager who has them put in an enthusiastic ballot in their favor.

Individual reports from various managers were glowing. Floyd Brown, manager of H. Lieber Company Exchange, Indianapolis, stated that in addition to the contracts now operating, he has a great number which will begin as soon as other contracts have run out, and that his territory is building up rapidly. Lieut. Jim P. Anderson, general manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Virginia, who handles the pictures in nearly all the Southern states, started two months ago with his territory's full complement of prints, and three weeks ago ordered another.

Louis Bache, manager of the Electric Theatre Supply Company, Philadelphia, is one of the most enthusiastic boosters for the travel pictures. In regard to the two startling releases, "Cameraing Through Africa," Mr. Bache writes:

"Cameraing Through Africa," Parts 1 and 2, is the best that has ever been done along the animal line. I thought so much of them that I screened them personally for Mr. Schwalbe and several others and they claimed that they are better and have more action than the pictures Rainey had."

Big Advertising Campaign for "Virtuous Men"

IN order it is said to accommodate the unusual demand by state rights purchasers for twenty-four sheets to exploit "Virtuous Men," S-L Pictures has prepared a special lithograph for this purpose. Worthy Butts, President of Butts Lithograph Co., has been commissioned to design an original and distinctive twenty-four sheet stand for the Ralph Ince Film Attraction starring E. K. Lincoln. Due to the decision of Arthur S. Hyman, purchaser of "Virtuous Men" for Illinois, Indiana and Michigan, H. C. Simeral, buyer of Western Pa., West Virginia and Ohio and other state right men to present "Virtuous Men" as a road show attraction, this twenty-four sheet will be distinctly theatrical in its makeup and coloring.

The illustration has been drawn by R. G. Morgan, creator of posters for the present Victory Loan. It presents E. K. Lincoln, Grace Darling, Clara Joel, Robert W. Cummings and William B. Mack in one of the dramatic moments of "Virtuous Men." The lithograph will be executed in eight colors by the new Iff-set process of lithography which Mr. Butts now controls. An effective color scheme will bring out the title "Virtuous Men" so as to be discernable from a great distance, while the figures in the illustration have been enlarged several degrees above life size.

This special twenty-four sheet stand will be available to state rights purchasers, in addition to a series of distinctive posters for "Virtuous Men" executed by Clarence F. Underwood, Gustav Michelson, R. C. Luders and other well known artists, embracing several styles of one, six and twenty four-sheet posters.

Latest Brentwood Special Claims Strong Story

"Either through design or great good fortune, the main title of the Brentwood second picture, fits in quite strikingly," said an official of Brentwood Films.

"This producing corporation offered 'The Turn in the Road,' with its strongly dramatic story of very real characters and the cheering uplift of its wholesome, practical lesson of love, when the world was nursing its war wounds and the tastes of the public were felt to have changed from the sensational and unreal to the sound, the real and the true. Now it offers 'Better Times,' as though a sequel to those who benefited through the lesson which the first successful picture pointed and as indicating what opens up just beyond 'The Turn in the Road.' 'Better Times,' also under the direction of King W. Vidor, is another wholesome, heart-warming and close-knit story of people whom we all know and has a generous admixture of unstrained 'homey' comedy and a well-threaded theme of the power of that smile-under-difficulties which comes from a heart full of sunshine, determination and grit."

Thomas Announces Cast for Second Picture

Augustus Thomas announces the complete cast for his second play, now in the first stages of production by Harry Raver for Four Star pictures, distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Leah Baird, the star of "As a Man Thinks," the first of the Thomas series, plays the role of a young school teacher. Edward T. Langford is playing his first part since his recent role of captain in the 27th Division, U. S. A. Before Mr. Langford went to France, he played leads with Alice Brady, Gail Kane, Ethel Clayton, and others.

The remainder of the cast includes William H. Gibson. J. Kingsbury, Harry Bartlett, Vera Amazar and Becky Bruce. George Irving is directing the new picture, the title of which is as yet unannounced.

Blackton Buys Rights to Porter's "Dawn"

J. Stuart Blackton has recorded another "scoop" of current interest to the motion picture industry, it is said, in his purchase of the world motion picture rights to "Dawn," the newest "best seller" from the pen of Eleanor H. Porter, author of "Pollyanna" and a score of other famous novels.

"Dawn" is one of the biggest successes in current literature, and is among the new books in greatest demand at the public libraries, it is said.

Edward Burns In It

Edward Burns, who played juvenile leads with Elsie Ferguson in three of her recent Artcraft pictures, "The Lie," "The Danger Mark," and "Under the Greenwood Tree," will have an important role in Bryant Washburn's new Paramount picture, "A Very Good Young Man," which is now in process of production under the direction of Donald Crisp.

Select Releases Three For May

Norma Talmadge and Mitchell Lewis Each Offer One and the Third is "Break the News to Mother"

THE current month's attractions offered by Select Pictures Corporation include a special, "Break the News to Mother," Norma Talmadge in "The New Moon," and Mitchell Lewis in "Jacques of the Silver North," which was previously announced under the working title of "The Gulf Between."

"Break the News to Mother" is described as a stirring drama of love, intrigue and romance based on the famous song of the same name by Charles K. Harris. It is the story of a mother's love which fails to dim, even when her son is banished from his home.

In the cast are Pearl Shepard, Gertrude Berkley, Raymond Bloomer, Alice Gerard, Forrest Robinson, William Baily, Louis Stern, Joseph Smiley and Chester Barnett. The photography is by Andre Barlatier.

Norma Talmadge's Select attraction for May is "The New Moon," a Russian story by H. H. Van Loan which was adapted and directed by Chester Withey. In "The New Moon" Miss Talmadge is seen as a young Russian Princess who falls under the new order for the nationalization of women in Russia.

Norma Talmadge, Select Star

"Jacques of the Silver North" is the title of Mitchell Lewis' Select Picture for May. This is the attraction which was previously announced under the working title of "The Gulf Between." The story and scenario are by Herbert North Bradbury and Frank Howard Clark. It was directed by Norval MacGregor, and is heralded as a production of intrinsic worth.

Fannie Ward Considers the Latest Her Best

"THE Cry of the Weak," starring Fannie Ward, the eighth of Pathe's Extra Selected Star Photoplays, released on May 8, has earned unanimous praise from reviewers who witnessed a special showing. The picture fuly justifies Miss Ward's declaration, before she recently sailed for Europe, that in this story, by Ouida Bergere, "I have done the best work of my entire career, both on the screen and the spoken stage." She considers it even better than "Common Clay," the success records of which are still steadily increasing. The production is made by Astra Film Corporation.

Ouida Bergere has emphasized in an entertaining manner the thory that a great number of the crimes which are committed today are based on vengeance against the harshness of society, and that many criminals if given the proper opportunity may be reclaimed.

From start to finish the story is a vivid page of real life, showing how a girl brought up in slum surroundings rose superior to her environment, and how her weak-minded brother remained in the underworld until reclaimed to a better life by a devoted sister's love.

In Miss Ward's support were selected types who exactly fit the characters—Frank Elliott as "District Attorney Dexter," Walt Whitman as "Judge Creighton," Paul Willis as "Budd," and many other capable screen artists.

George Fitzmaurice has achieved fame as one of America's best directors. "The Cry of the Weak" is one of the finest examples of his art. From the standpoint of direction it is practically perfect, it is said. Much of the action takes place at night, and the night scenes are especially good, giving just that amount of weird and un canny effect to convey the correct "atmosphere" indicated.

Reports Heavy Bookings on Nesbit Feature

Following the unanimous endorsement given "Thou Shalt Not," Evelyn Nesbit's latest William Fox picture, by the reviewers in the trade press, exhibitors throughout the country are showing their appreciation of this picture by giving it extended engagements. It is declared by everyone who has seen it to be the best picture Evelyn Nesbit ever made.

P. F. Shea, manager of theatres in Bridgeport, Conn.; Holyoke, Mass., and Worcester, Mass., has booked "Thou Shalt Not" for a week at each of his houses.

Oil Studies for Titles

D. Anthony Tauszky, the portrait artist engaged by Maxwell Karger to paint interpretative titles for Metro productions, has completed a set of twenty-one oil studies for "False Evidence," the drama of the California redwoods which Viola Dana has just finished.

Simplex Notes

Canadian Distributor in New York

Mr. George F. Perkins of the Perkins Electric Company with offices in Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg, Canada, was a visitor at the Simplex factory this week. The Perkins Electric Company are Canadian distributors for the Simplex Projectors and reports from that section indicate a heavy Simplex business.

Mr. Perkins had just completed a very busy week at Atlantic City where he played an important part at the Electrical Convention, also taking part in the three days' convention at the Society of Projection Engineers at Philadelphia.

It may be of interest to note that Mr. Perkins reports the proposed erection of several large theatres in his territory, in which theatres the Simplex will be part of the projection room equipment.

A Feature at R. I. Movie Ball

At the big movie ball held at the State Armory, Providence, last Thursday, which was declared by prominent men to be the largest civic ball ever held in the state, the Precision Machine Company included in their display the $1,400 nickel-plated prize-winning Simplex Projector, which has been exhibited in all parts of the country.

In place of the regular outside shutter, a revolving fan is substituted on this machine which when in operation produces air current sufficient to keep in motion a complete set of silk Allied flags, which are mounted in front of the machine upon which the lamp rays are directed, producing a very novel effect.

Among those prominent at the Simplex display were W. C. Francke of the Precision Machine Company, Messrs. Harry Asher and Cecil Wood of the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, southern New England distributors for the Simplex and Mr. David Davison and his manager, Mr. George Butler, of the David Davidson studios, Providence, distributors for Simplex.

Pictures as Aid to Insane

A very interesting matter has come to light through the installation of a Simplex Projector at the State Hospital for the Criminal Insane at Dannemora, N. Y.

Dr. Ross, superintendent of the institution in question declared to C. C. Charles, Simplex distributor at Albany, that the use of motion pictures has proven one of the best mediums for controlling unruly inmates, all of whom are very much interested in the weekly exhibition of movies.

In the event of misbehavior on the part of any of the patients, who many times are victims of fits of passion, the privilege of viewing the pictures is taken from them with the result that the morale of the institution has greatly improved since the introduction of the motion picture exhibitions through the use of the Simplex.

Sherry Decides To Send Out Salesmen

Film Clearing House Is to Look After Physical Distribution of Pictures Released Through Sherry Service—Forces Are Completely Reorganized

WM. L. SHERRY, head of the Sherry Service, has decided to again cover the United States with his own salesmen. In addition, he has formed an alliance with the Film Clearing House, Inc., which will handle the physical distribution of all pictures released through the Sherry Service, including the De Luxe Pictures, Inc., productions starring Doris Kenyon, Frank S. Keeney, productions starring Catherine Calvert, and the Edgar Lewis and Gilbert A. Anderson features.

Before the ink was dry on the contract signed by Mr. Sherry and Frank C. Hall, president of the Film Clearing House, Inc., Mr. Sherry had dispatched half a dozen members of the N. Y. office to every part of the U. S., with instructions to engage the best salesmen and managers in every principal city.

Doris Kenyon, De Luxe star, through Sherry Service

Personal Attention

From this date the completely reorganized Sherry sales force will cover all territory under the personal direction of Mr. Sherry, who intends to devote close attention to the needs of the exhibitor and who invites personal correspondence with regard to the same.

"Under the new plan," said Mr. Sherry, in discussing the reorganization, I hope to get away from the atmosphere of remoteness that prevents close co-operation between the head office of the picture play organization and the exhibitor—an atmosphere that hampers both and may easily be dispelled if a little more attention is paid to the human elements involved.

"To insure closer intimacy with exhibitors I am urging them to keep in personal touch with me by letter. If there is reason for criticism of any department of my organization I want to find it out and the best source of information I know of is the exhibitor whose interest that organization is designed to serve.

I propose to reply in person to all such communications and in this way to establish an understanding based on community of interest, which will benefit all concerned.

"If my salesmen do not call on the exhibitor I want to know that. It is difficut to remedy conditions that are not known to exist but easy enough when the condition is once brought to my attention. My policy is to cultivate intimacy with the other fellow's point of view and correspondents will find me in a receptive as well as a communicative mood."

Include Twelve Features

"The productions released exclusively by the Sherry Service include twelve features, five of them new releases which have not until now been offered for booking. These latter include the De Luxe Pictures production "Twilight," starring Doris Kenyon. The play was written by Louis Joseph Vance and Vingie E. Roe, and originally appeared in Metropolitan Magazine. It has received the highest enconiums of the advance reviewers.

"Next comes the new Frank A. Keeney production, "Marriage For Convenience," by E. Lloyd Sheldon, featuring Catherine Calvert. The Keeney play has been hailed by critics as one of the best of the season and certainly Miss Calvert's finest effort.

"'Love And The Law,' an Edgar Lewis production of the highest merit thoroughly sustains the reputation made by the producer of 'The Barrier,' 'The Bar Sinister' and 'The Great Divide.' The author of the story is William Hamilton Osborne who first published it in the Saturday Evening Post under the title 'The Troop Train.'

"'Calibre 38,' another Lewis product is a splendid dashing romantic adventure story, featuring Mitchell Lewis and Hedda Nova, with a wonderful cast.

"Another new one is the five-part western drama, 'The Son-Of-A-Gun,' from the studios of the Golden West Producing Company, featuring G. M. Anderson, famous the world over as 'Broncho Billy.'

Standard Successes

"Standard successes included in the program are 'Wild Honey,' a De Luxe picture in six parts starring Doris Kenyon, being booked in great success and acclaimed by critics everywhere; 'Marriage,' a Frank Keeney release featuring Catherine Calvert and David Powell and Thomas Holden included in the cast; 'Inn of the Blue Moon,' by Louis Joseph Vance, starring Doris Kenyon; 'Street of Seven Stars,' another Doris Kenyon success based on a story of Mary Roberts Rinehart; 'Out of the Night,' in which Catherine Calvert has made one of her most sensational hits; 'Romance of the Underworld,' another Keeney-Calvert triumph and 'Red Blood and Yellow,' a Golden West Producing Company winner, also featuring Gilbert Anderson.

"Further releases by all the above producers will be announced by Mr. Sherry shortly. Miss Kenyon has a new picture in work and a new Calvert feature is among the early future. Gilbert Anderson is also at work on a new five-part drama that will feature him in a novel role."

Griffith Opens Exchange in Honolulu

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company has opened an exchange at 148. S. Beretania street, Honolulu, T. H., under the management of Beverly Griffith, formerly business manager and producer of comedy films at the Universal's western studios.

Griffith joined the colors at the outbreak of the war, rose to the rank of Sergeant-Major in the Air Service, Puget Sound district, and was recommended for commission just before the signing of the armistice. He was released from service January 11. As soon as Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, heard he was on his way south, he wired him instructions to proceed to Honolulu to open the exchange there.

The mail address of the new distributing office is Post Office Box 1414, Honolulu, T. H.

Oswald Stoll is Knighted in England

Oswald Stoll is one of the most important amusement men in England, managing director of the Coliseum Syndicate and distributor of Goldwyn pictures in the entire United Kingdom, has just been knighted for his work during the war which aided greatly in keeping up the morale of the British army. Mr. Stoll—now Sir Oswald—contributed liberally to all the war charities, and did his most important work through the arranging of amusements for the soldiers. In addition to Stoll, Harry Lauder was the other stage celebrity to be knighted.

Realistic Thrill in "Virtuous Men"

"Virtuous Men," a Ralph Ince film attraction, now being state-righted by S-L Pictures, has been hailed by buyers as the greatest "punch" picture ever offered, it is said. Due to its spectacular effects, tremendous mob scenes and innumerable thrills the production starring E. K. Lincoln fulfills, according to territorial purchasers, a long felt want for this type of picture. In addition to the many thrilling scenes, the picture contains a most realistic moment in which John P. Wade and William B. Mack figure.

Miller Starts on First Special Production

CHARLES MILLER, whose productions will be released and distributed by Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation and vice-president and a director of the Miller Company, commenced work Wednesday on the first of the six special productions to be made during the year, at the Bacon-Backer studio. Mr. Miller has not announced the title, but says that the story deals with modern society with the action laid in New York.

Among the popular screen artists cast for parts in the first Miller production are, Herbert Rawlinson who has the lead in Frank G. Hall's late release, "A House Divided"; Florence Billings who has been seen in several Vitagraph productions; Stuart Holmes, the screen's popular villain and co-starred with Ellen Cassidy in Frank Hall's special release, recently acquired from the Warners, "The Other Man's Wife"; Charles Stevenson, Vinden Friedly, Herbert Webster, Maud Hill, Regina Quinn, formerly of the Winter Garden, and Basil Webb.

The production which Mr. Miller starts this week will mark his first venture as an independent producer. During the past few years he has been associated with some of the industries best producers, having directed a series of productions for Select, with Norma Talmadge as star. Previous to taking up the work of a director, Mr. Miller was on the stage, and was one of the Middle West's most popular stock actors. He has been associated with the theatrical profession and industry for many years.

Mr. Miller announces that he expects to have his first independent production ready for release through Independent Sales Corporation and Film Clearing House in about six weeks. The title to his first picture will be announced later.

To Have Important Roles with Bert Lytell

Augustus Phillips and Joseph Kilgour both well-known actors with many difficult character and heavy creations to their credit, have been engaged by Metro for important parts in Bert Lytell's newest starring vehicle, "The Lion's Den," written by Frederick Orin Bartlett, author of Lytell's recent screen triumph, "The Spender."

Goldberg Keeps Pace with Film Development

Joseph Goldberg, proprietor of the Majestic and the Lillian theatres in Clarksville, Tenn., says he owes his success to keeping pace with picture development. It was eight years ago that Mr. Goldberg withdrew his active interests from the furniture business in Clarksville to become an exhibitor.

He thought he saw a bigger future in pictures. Now he is the recognized "picture king" in that part of Tennessee.

Mr. Goldberg had never felt that his patrons wanted a steady diet of the market's biggest features until last winter when he obtained from the Big Feature Rights Corporation, of Louisville, which handles First National attractions, twenty-five features which he played consecutively.

Mr. Goldberg is going to remodel his Majestic theatre, so that it will hold more people. He intends spending several thousands of dollars on it, so that it will be the equal of the best theatre in any town of the size of Clarksville in the country.

"The Unknown Dancer" Is Second Capellani

"The Unknown Dancer" is announced as the production on which Creighton Hale and June Caprice are now at work at the Capellani Studio, Fort Lee. The picture is adapted from the French play, "Le Danseur Inconnu," by Tristan Bernard.

George Archainbaud is directing it under the personal supervision of Albert Capellani.

This production will follow "Oh, Boy" as the second of the series of super-features co-starring Hale and Caprice to be produced by the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., for release through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

First National Gets Lehrman Comedies

It was announced this week that Harry A. Sherman has closed a deal with First National Exhibitors' Circuit whereby the Lehrman Comedies will be distributed by First National. The series of two-reel comedies, according to the announcement, involves a money consideration of over $1,000,000.

The announcement makes it known that the comedies under this contract are to be released every six weeks under the name of Lehrman Comedies. They are to be produced at the new Lehrman studios at Culver City, Cal

Style Expert for Films

S. Zalud, creator of thousands of America's latest styles of hats, capes, gowns and dresses, has succumbed to the lure of the motion picture.

The young New York designer whose costumes have been the talk of the continent since America entered the world war, has been engaged by the Universal Screen Magazine to show how the many designs which have come from his studio are conceived.

The Reason Why

A GOOD many Exhibitors have wondered how it happens that a Universal Special Attraction is always complete in everything that goes to make up an artistic picture. The answer is—the money we save by not employing Grand Opera stars we put into the production. That is why the Settings of a Universal Special Attraction are by far the handsomest to be found on the screen today. That is why the Photography is the clearest—why the Lighting is the most effective—why the Timing of the picture leaves nothing to be desired. Check up these several points in your next Universal Special Attraction—make comparison with any other group of pictures on the market. You'll see the truth of the foregoing and you'll agree with us that ours is the sensible way to make pictures attractive to your audiences.

Special Service Section on

Harry Carey in "Bare Fists"

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture of any others?

IF Harry Carey in "Bare Fists" is one of your attractions make up your mind right now there will be a greater effort to sell this particular offering than you generally exert. This is a western picture and the point that you want to use is the novelty of the plot. Sameness of stories has resulted in weakening the appeal of many of the westerns and here you have a chance to take advantage of that fact.

Of course, you are going to play the name of the star mighty strong to take advantage of the fullest of Carey's following. His figure should dominate all your advertising and you will find that you have a chance to get away from the usual "gun" appeal here by using pictures of him fighting with his fists. Then go ahead with the selling arguments, making them crisp and telling just part of the story without spoiling the suspense of your patrons while they are watching the picture.

The mother element ought to enter into your sales talk, because this part will appeal particularly to the women who otherwise might avoid a western on the idea that it is too much "all shooting." For the same reason the romance with the little Spanish girl and the part the little brother plays should be developed in the longer sales matter.

THIS is the story: Harry's father is marshal of a border town of the old west frequently visited by outlaws and has promised his wife to resign the post that is always causing trouble. Just as he is about to do so a bunch of outlaws come to shoot up the place and Harry and his father go to their duty, "for the last time," as they tell the wife and mother. It is the last time for the father, for he is killed by the outlaws who escape.

The deeply religious mother, shocked by the tragedy, induces her son to promise never to carry a gun again, and finally he yields to her entreaty and then with her and his young brother they move to another part of the state—Kansas—where he becomes a ranchman, grazing his cattle on the open ranges. For the first time in his life he has deliberately run away from trouble.

Soon cattle begin to disappear from his already slender herd and finally he comes on Boone Travis, another rancher, and his Mexican aide, Lopez, branding one of his cows. But he is helpless because they cover him with their guns and instead of being able to drive them away he has to endure their taunts. To make matters worse Harry has fallen in love with Conchita, a beautiful Spanish girl, who returns his affections, but whose mother insists that she shall marry Travis.

THIS incident, however, is too strong for Harry and he goes for his pistol telling his mother: "All bets are off. I'm resuming business at the old stand." But she comes on him as he is about to leave the house and again forces him to yield and to stand by his pledge. Further insult is added when Conchita's mother tells him that he is not welcome—at the suggestion of Travis. But Travis, in turn, gets his when the girl refuses him and tells him that she loves Harry.

It is then that Travis determines to put the man who won't shoot out of the way, and takes advantage of Harry's next visit to the dance hall-saloon. Here there is a little incident at the door when Harry bluffs the Mexican Lopez away by using his hand in his shirt as if he were holding a gun. Travis has arranged for one of his men to lure Harry to one of the private rooms under the pretence of buying cattle and there a fight between the two starts. Harry uses only his bare fists, but then a shot is heard and Harry's opponent falls dead.

Testimony of Travis and the story of the Mexican together with the fact that a derringer such as a man might well conceal in his shirt are found behind the body convict Harry before the frontier court and he is sentenced to die.

AS a final favor the sheriff agrees to go with Harry to tell his mother good-bye, with the fiction that he is going away on a trip. But while they are on that mission Harry's little brother, Bud, comes upon Travis and the Mexican branding more of Harry's cattle and confronts them. In revenge the Mexican brands the child on the breast.

Returning to the jail they come upon the lad, who tells his story. That is too much and suddenly Harry knocks the sheriff from his saddle, seizes his rifle and is off while Bud holds the sheriff at bay. Then following Travis and the Mexican to the saloon there is a tense bit of action with the two men laying in wait for him. But Harry still has the strategy and the quick finger and he gets both of them and then returns to jail to give himself up.

Again behind the bars and resigned to death, Ruby, a dance hall girl, who has learned that Travis had planned to desert her to marry Conchita, comes to the jail and confesses that she saw Travis shoot his own man during the fight with Harry. Then freedom, and wedding bells and happiness.

AS we have suggested there should be a share of the exploitation built around mother love, but be sure to make it clear that in the end Harry triumphed over his enemies, for even for the sake of a mother a whole lot consider it un-American to let a band of crooks defy and taunt one, especially in these days since our boys have gone to the other side and have come back the heroes of heroes.

Attention can be gained for your displays right off the bat by using one of the scenes which shows Harry surrendering his gun to his mother. Then should follow the explanatory selling talk:

"He yielded to the entreaties of his mother—just made a widow by an outlaw's shot—and surrendered his gun, promising never to soot again. He went out with his bare fists to maintain his rights.

"But he saw thieves branding his cattle and was helpless because they had him 'covered.' He had to listen to the taunts of the chief of their band, who sought the beautiful Spanish girl who loved Harry. He saw himself ordered away from her home by her mother.

"Then, though he was unarmed, they convicted him of shooting another man. He was to die—then he saw something and all bets were off. Harry broke his pledge in a way that you'll all applaud. Just how you should see for yourself."

THEN here's another one that recalls the type of pictures in which Carey has usually been seen:

"When you see Harry Carey in a picture you expect to see hard riding and straight shooting.

"Here you see him surrendering his gun to his mother and promising not to shoot again. It was all because of the great love of the son.

"He saw his cattle stolen, listened to the insults of the thieves, even yielded when he was 'framed' and convicted of a murder of which he was innocent.

"Hard to believe that's Harry Carey, you say. Yes, and as you sit in your seat and grip the arms of the chair you'll wonder why the old Harry doesn't come to life and start something.

"And just about that time he does—when he sees the sear of the brand on his little brother's breast—and then more things happen in a few minutes than you ever saw happen on the screen.

"Shoot straight? He gets two of them at once, and you'll thrill anew as you see him do it."

Or this one:

"Can you imagine a man out in the days of the old west who didn't carry a gun. Well, Cheyenne Harry was one, for he had yielded to the entreaties of his aged, widowed mother and promised that he would never shoot again.

"He had only his bare fists and he knew how to use them, yet he was helpless when others had the bead drawn on him. Should he have stuck to the pledge to his mother when the thieves taunted him? He did.

"Should he have surrendered under their threats when he saw them stealing the cattle from his herd? He did. Should he have stood by helpless when their leader was seeking to make him a coward before the girl he loved? He did.

"Should he still have refused to shoot when he was 'framed' and sentenced to die for a crime of which he was innocent, when one touch of the old gun would have given him liberty? And yet he did.

"But there did come a time when the pledge was forgotten and the justice of the plains done. What made Harry shoot them? It's unfair to tell—it'll spoil a real picture for you."

THERE can be another striking cut made for advertising purposes by using the one that we have illustrated showing Harry with the rifle in his hand. It pictures him at the moment when he was administering justice to the cattle thieves.

You can get added heart touch by using this full length figure at the upper left and then dropping in one of the pictures that shows Harry, his kid brother and mother together at the lower right. This will leave you room in the middle for the fuller selling talks that we have suggested. They are a little long, but we believe in really showing how different this picture really is.

But here are a few shorter ones:

"Men thought him a coward because he would not shoot. It was his promise to his aged mother and he endured their taunts and their robberies—was even about to give his own life when something happened that broke all pledges and spelled more action than you ever saw before in a few feet of film."

"He would fight any man in the world with has bare fists. He knew no fear, but those were the days when men fought with guns and when they 'covered' him he was helpless. It was his pledge to his aged mother and he kept it until you'll almost despise him, but when you see the big moment come and see Harry act in the real Carey fashion you'll get the biggest thrill of your history."

"His mother made him seem a coward. She won from him the pledge never to shoot again. Men sneered at him, robbed him, even had him on the brink of the gallows, yet he never swerved. He endured everything himself, but when another was wronged then he forgot every pledge and you'll agree that he got about the speediest justice you could desire for your hero—and the girl he loved."

"They called him a coward because he had promised his mother never to shoot. But the moment came when he had to knock the sheriff down, steal his own gun and administer justice of the west. You'll find the real Cheyenne Harry breaking out in the end after the most amazing western story you have ever witnessed."

"They were two to one and laying in wait for him, but Cheyenne Harry is the quickest and straightest shooter of them all. You can guess what happened, but WHY makes a startling, absorbing story."

Harry Carey Lobby Display Will Get Attention

LAST week we printed a couple of pictures showing how Manager Walter Armstrong, of the Strand theatre, Portland, Ore., got a most effective display by merely using cut-outs of the one and three sheets for the lobby display. There were a large number of these employed and hung from the ceiling of the lobby, so that one looking in could not miss the smash.

We have made one of the cut-outs from the one-sheet that gives a real punch showing the star with his fists ready for action. These should be mounted on heavy cardboard and the use of a score or so of them will do the work. For the display nearer the sidewalk there is a figure of Carey ready for a fight on one of the three-sheets, and this can be similarly mounted. There can be a much larger head of Carey wearing his big hat taken from the 24-sheets, and these will help vary the display

We would advise against anything of the gun sort in the display, for this is contradictory to the title. And always remember that a misleading lobby display is far, far worse than none at all.

F yours was one of the cities in which Harry Carey made his personal appearance on his recent trip through the country you will take advantage of that fact by referring to it in your advertising something like this:

"It wasn't until you saw Harry Carey on the stage of the Empire theatre in person that you realized what a human sort of a hero he was after all. You've seen him at hard riding and straight shooting, and in 'Bare Fists' you'll see him in just such a role—until something happens that would make any man forget any promise and seek the justice of the West——"

Whether they were played at your theatre or some other one, you want to call attention to the success that this actor scored in "A Fight for Love," "Roped," "Three Mounted Men," "Hell Bent" and others. Then add that this is a story that was specially written for him by Bernard McConville and shows him in a wide range of characterization and a variety of action.

This cut-out made from one of the one-sheets is effective for the lobby

If you use the circular letter plan be sure to tell the people that this is a picture that appeals to the entire family.

You should put special emphasis on the matinee business here, because if you get the children in they are very likely to go back home with a selling argument all of their own that will convince their parents that here is a western picture with something more to it than a lot of rough riding and promiscuous shooting.

THERE can be a stronger appeal made to the emotions here by having a male singer as the prelude rendering "Mother Machree." This is one of the most popular of songs with strong heart interest, and then it should be carried into the screening as a secondary theme—for the scenes with the mother. According to the score arranged by James C. Bradford, who has been the musical director of the Broadway, this was first introduced with the title, "With his broken-hearted mother," in the scene at home after the father has been killed. It is brought back again when Harry goes after his gun and then a third time as Harry, condemned to die, tells his mother a white lie in saying farewell.

"Will You Remember" is suggested as the theme, first being played with the title, "I thought," and the only other time at the end of the picture starting with the title, "Another home-coming." There are several humorous scenes, including one where Harry is seen at the side of the creek scrubbing his very bare kid brother. "That Moaning Trombone" will add just a little of the jazz effect here and increase the laughs. Naturally a big part of the music has to be played to action with allegro effects.

We would balance this bill strongly with comedy of the more virile sort, slap-stick preferably. Most of the scenes are out of doors and there is the air of the old west to all of them, so you really do not need a scenic.

WE believe that in case of a star who is so identified with one line of roles that it is better to put all of the selling argument on him, featuring his name and then showing why everyone should want to see him in this particular picture, but some managers like to mention the names of the other players. In this case you have a strong supporting cast:

Betty Schade is the leading woman, and strange to say, she has the part of a Spanish girl. Here you have a chance for a little freak story that will attract attention especially of the women. It is good matter for your house program and should be printed far enough in advance of the showing to cause talk:

"You probably know that Betty Schade, Harry Carey's leading woman in 'Bare Fists,' is a dizzy blonde with green eyes. But in this picture you see her as a dark-haired, black-eyed Spanish character. How can you explain it? After you've seen the picture we mere men would like for you to tell us how it is done."

Anna May Walthall has another prominent part. She is an Alabama girl and a sister of the famous Henry B. She has been in a number of big productions recently and her presence will help southern managers.

Joe Harris, one of the prize villains; Vester Pegg, a well-known character actor, and Mollie McConnell are also in the cast.

"Unpardonable Sin" to Schwerin

Five Southern States Acquired by Prominent Independent Operator on Harry Garson's Big Production

CHARLES F. SCHWERIN, one of the most prominent and successful operators in the independent field, announces that he has purchased from Harry I. Garson, the rights to the Virginia, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, North and South Carolina territory on "The Unpardonable Sin," the screen version of Major Rupert Hughes' novel of the same title, produced by Mr. Garson under the direction of Marshall Neillan and starring Blanche Sweet.

Mr. Schwerin closed the deal for the Southern territory the first of the week, paying the highest figure, it is said, ever recorded for a single production playing this territory.

Immediately after closing the deal, Mr. Schwerin planned a publicity and advertising campaign which will place "The Unpardonable Sin" before the Southerners, in every newspaper and local trade paper in that section.

Mr. Schwerin is said to be known to every exchange man and exhibitor from New York to the Coast. In the eight years that he has been connected with the industry, starting with the General Film Company and later acting as special representative for the Fox Film Corporation and as branch manager for World Film in Pittsburgh, he has covered every important centre in the United States and has handled some of the screen's biggest and most successful independent attractions.

He was Selznick's representative in Pittsburgh and general manager of the First National exchange there, the franchise controlled by Rowland and Clark. In recent years, Mr. Schwerin opened offices in Cleveland, doing business as the Success Film Productions.

Recently he toured the Eastern territory as special representative for Frank G. Hall in the interest of the Rothapfel Unit Programme and in placing the Rothapfel Programme in every city visited, including the largest through the East and Middle West, established a record of one-hundred percent bookings. Mr. Schwerin is generally conceded to be one of the industry's most efficient and capable operators in the independent field and in his new venture he has the best wishes from his many friends.

Friday, May 2, marks the opening of "The Unpardonable Sin" at the Broadway theatre, New York City, for an indefinite engagement.

This day also marks the opening of the Broadway under new management, the well known theatrical firm of B. S. Moss, having leased the theatre for a long term of years.

Robert Warwick Signs Long-Term Contract

ROBERT WARWICK has been signed to a long-term contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to appear as a star in Paramount and Artcraft pictures. And as if this were not enough honor to be bestowed upon an actor-soldier, or soldier-actor, the same day which brought this announcement to New York from the West Coast brought also a telegram to the home office from Los Angeles conveying the news of the erstwhile Captain's promotion to a Majority in the Reserve of the United States Army. The promotion dates from April 8 and is for five years, and is given in recognition of Major Warwick's distinguished service as a member of the General Staff of the A. E. F.

The engagement of Major Warwick as a permanent star of the Paramount and Artcraft players was the direct outcome, it is stated, of his splendid work in the leading role of "Secret Service," the big Famous Players-Lasky special production just completed at the Lasky studio by Director Hugh Ford. So perfect, in the estimation of Jesse L. Lasky, Cecil B. DeMille and other Famous Players-Lasky officials, was Major Warwick's portrayal of the hero of the William Gillette story that the signing of the star for a term of years was inevitable, and the contract was immediately closed by Mr. Lasky. "Secret Service," it is said, will prove one of the big achievement of the screen for the year, according to all who saw it.

Major Warwick will be starred next in a screen version of "Told in the Hills," the novel by Marah Ellis Ryan which, at the time of its publication a good many years ago, was one of the most sensational fiction successes written. In fact, it is still one of the most widely read of American novels. Will M. Ritchey has written the scenario and Hugh Ford will direct, with Ann Little assigned to the leading feminine role in the picture.

Record Bookings for the Stewart Productions

VITAGRAPH this week declares that the bookings recorded for its first Anita Stewart production, "From Headquarters," which was released on March 10, were only a forerunner of what it will achieve with the entire series of Anita Stewart productions as they come along. "Two Women," which is scheduled for release on the 28th of April has exceeded even the write-up on "From Headquarters," says a Vitagraph statement.

First runs have been contracted for all over the United States and Canada. It will be recalled that with the release of "From Headquarters," all of the big Metropolitan circuits in the East, including Fox, Moss and Poli, and the big chain of theatres in the middle West and far West played the picture. This week Vitagraph reports that the Strand Theatre in Montreal has booked the Anita Stewart productions for first run to be followed in that city by the Midway. In Quebec, the Victoria Theatre has booked first run.

Keeney's Theatre in Brooklyn and in Newburgh, New York, have secured the Stewart pictures. The Colonial Theatre in Atlantic City, the Savoy in Wilmington, Delaware, and the T. & D. Berkeley Theatre in Berkeley, California, are prominent in the bookings secured this week.

"The write-up on the Stewart productions," says Vitagraph, "is practically a 100 per cent booking of possibilities the country over."

World Announces Release of Macdon Comedies

World Pictures announce that they will distribute a number of two-reel comedies made by the Macdon Pictures Corporation. Two of these comedies, "Pardon Me" and "Neptune's Step-Daughter," have been finished and work is now progressing on the third. The star is Gertrude Selby, who began her picture career as a featured player and later as a star in the L Ko comedies. Miss Selby was afterward starred by the Universal in five-reel dramas. Following which she was featured by Mack Sennet, under whose direction she appeared in a number of his productions. She was then engaged by William Fox and originated the Sunshine Girl as the star of the Sunshine Comedies.

Supporting Miss Selby are Bobby Connelly, Patsy De Forest and Lew Marks, all of whom are well known. Frank P. Donovan will direct.

The Thanhouser studio at New Rochelle has been secured under a long lease by the Macdon Picture Corporation.

Famous Players Sign Irving Cummings

Irving Cummings, one of the better known leading men, has been placed under contract by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to appear in pictures made on the Pacific coast, starting July 1st.

Mr. Cummings has completed work in "Secret Service," doing a heavy role, under the direction of Hugh Ford. Prior to that, he appeared in Ethel Clayton's picture, "Men, Women and Money," for Paramount. Among the screen stars Mr. Cummings has supported may be mentioned Clara Kimball Young, Nazimova, Florence Reed, Pauline Frederick, Hazel Dawn, and Ethel Barrymore. He also played an important part in Maurice Tourneur's production, "The Whip."

Winter Hall to Support Dorothy Phillips

Winter Hall, who has been seen in a number of de Mille productions, who supported Mary Pickford in "Captain Kidd, Jr." and who was most recently seen opposite Helen Jerome Eddy in "The Turn in the Road" has been engaged by Universal to support Dorothy Phillips in her next Universal super-drama now being produced at the West Coast studios by Allen J. Holubar. Maxine Elliott Hicks, well known to Broadway theatregoers because of her many appearances on the stage in juvenile roles, has also been given a prominent part in Miss Phillips' production. Other members of the Phillips cast are William Stowell, Robert C. Anderson, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Thurston Hall and Margaret Mann.

Big Start in New York for Select Picture

With bookings in twenty-six New York houses, including twenty-five Loew theatres and the Mount Morris, Select Pictures' special superproduction, "Bolshevism on Trial," has been given a big start on what promises to be a triumphant tour of first-run theaters in every town and city in the country.

Dates on the feature at the Loew houses commenced last week and run into the second week in May.

The theaters and length of run at the Loew houses include the New Rochelle, three days; Hoboken, three days; Metropolitan, three days; De Kalb, three days; Fulton, three days; Palace, three days; Delancey, three days; Lincoln Square, four days; Greeley Square, four days; Victoria, four days; Boulevard, four days; National, four days; Circle, two days; West End, two days; Burland, two days; Eighty-sixth Street, two days; 116th Street, two days; Forty-second Street, two days, and the Bijou, one day.

Williams Feature Breaks Saturday Record

William Brandt, president of the Brooklyn, N. Y., Exhibitors' League, who also runs the Carlton theatre in Brooklyn, reports that Earle Williams' picture, "A Gentleman of Quality," broke every Saturday record when it played his theatre this month.

"A Gentleman of Quality" was directed by James Young and was made at Vitagraph's Hollywood studio. It is a picturization of the sensational novel of the same name by Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey.

Ralph Ince Makes One for Vitagraph

The release of Gladys Leslie's next picture, "A Stitch in Time," marks the return of Ralph Ince to the staff of Vitagraph directors, by special arrangement for this one picture.

"A Stitch in Time," which was a Broadway stage attraction early this season, featuring Irene Fenwick, has been done into a photoplay in typical Ince style.

Tate Assists Cruze in New Reid Picture

Cullen B. Tate, who has returned from France, after over a year's service in the Camouflage Corps, will be assistant director to James Cruze in the production of Wallace Reid's new picture, "You're Fired," on which work was begun last week at the Lasky Hollywood studio.

Mr. Tate was employed at the studio for several years before he enlisted.

"Virtuous Men" Reports Sales

Lincoln's Feature is Biggest Box Office Attraction Acquired Since "Hearts of the World" Says Exhibitor

Ralph Ince, director of "Virtuous Men," Conversing with William Black, Photographer. The Picture Is a S-L Feature

A RECORD breaking series of sales was announced this week in connection with "Virtuous Men." The S-L Picture made under the personal supervision of Ralph Ince and which stars E. K. Lincoln, was acquired by Arthur S. Hyman for the states of Illinois, Michigan and Indiana. Mr. Hyman, General Manager of Hyman Film Attractions of Detroit, Michigan, is one of the largest territorial distributors in the United States. Upon the consummation of the sale Mr. Hyman had the following to say:

"Virtuous Men" is the biggest box office attraction I have acquired since I bought "Hearts of the World." I have been waiting for many months for a production of this quality and size to offer to my exhibitor as a profitable successor to the D. W. Griffith's masterpiece. "Virtuous Men," from the standpoint of magnificence, punch and spectacular effects is the greatest picture I have viewed in months. I feel sure it will be one of the biggest money makers I have ever handled.

Mr. Hyman plans a most extensive exploitation campaign in behalf of the S-L feature. He has already evolved an eight page advertisement announcing the acquisition of the film in a leading Detroit film magazine.

Following the consummation of this sale, Sawyer and Lubin disposed of Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio to H. C. Simeral, General Manager of Co-Partner Attractions, of Pittsburgh, Pa. Mr. Simeral believes the picture will be hailed as a box office winner by the various exhibitors in his territory. He will present it personally in many of the large cities as a special theatrical attraction. The unprecedented number of ten prints has been ordered by Mr. Hyman for Illinois, Indiana and Michigan in order to take care of the extensive bookings which he expects will be placed for the production. Bids for "Virtuous Men" are being received from every section of the United States. It is expected that the production will break all records in the matter of quick disposition of territory, it being the general opinion among buyers that the picture is one of the biggest features offered on a territorial basis in many years.

Exploitation Campaigns For Raver Pictures

W. W. HODKINSON CORPORATION announces that the first Harry Raver-Augustus Thomas-Four Star Picture, "As a Man Thinks," starring Leah Baird and directed by George Irving begins its career by being booked in the principal first-run theatres of the country, preceded by exhibitor-conducted campaigns of exploitation seldom equalled in recent months.

In Denver a campaign of two weeks of advertising and publicity served to introduce "As a Man Thinks" to Colorado audiences. In Cleveland a powerful well-devised campaign designed to challenge the interest of the city has been carried on for two weeks, it is said, and similar campaigns are being waged, backed by liberal newspaper advertising, in Cincinnati and Columbus, in San Francisco and Los Angeles, and with a campaign now beginning in New York, Boston, Providence, Philadelphia, Chicago and Pittsburgh.

Exhibitor Talbot in Denver, began what is generally known as a "teaser" campaign in which he makes use of clever rhymes, using these as paid advertisements in the four local newspapers and duplicating them on mailing cards for his house lists. These include:

This is the Wife—

In Olden Times, if a Girl made a Mistake before Marriage, and did Not Confess to Her Husband, She Was Stoned to Death.

Society and Religion still Deny Woman the Liberty Enjoyed by Man.

Augustus Thomas Tells Why in "As a Man Thinks."

This is the Man—

True, He could Bask in the Sunshine Of a Siren's Smile and Sin Away His Idle Hours. But, when Ringed About by the Serpent-fire of Suspicion About His Loyal and Trusting Wife, Reason Flees and He Disowns His Own Child.

"As a Man Thinks" (So Shall He Be).

Cassinelli to Capellani

By special arrangement entered into between Dolores Cassinelli and Albert Capellani, he will personally direct and supervise the productions in which Miss Cassinelli will be starred.

These productions will be given the brand name of "Cameo Picture produced by the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc." and distributed by Pathe.

To Build Studio on Long Island

Famous Players-Lasky Plans Huge Plant to Cost Two Million—Complete in Every Detail and Most Modern Yet Built

IT has been announced that Famous Players-Lasky will in the near future break ground for its new studio and laboratory in Long Island City, which will occupy respectively the entire square block bounded by Sixth and Seventh and Pierce and Graham Avenues, and the block front on the north side of Pierce avenue from Fifth to Sixth avenues. The structure will cover all told over 140,000 square feet of ground area.

Owing to the fact that the detail plans and specifications of the laboratory are further advanced, that building will probably be started first. The group of structures as planned will contain every known facility for the making of high-class motion picture productions.

The square blosck will be covered with the latest type of glass-enclosed studio as well as open air stages. The sudio building will be strictly fireproof, of reinforced concrete construction, and will contain dressing room facilities equipped with shower baths, toilets, and all of the latest inventions and conveniences for the artists. Elaborate suites will be provided for the directors and their assistants, and each director will be furnished with indivdual projecting rooms equipped with the most modern type of facilities for properly inspecting productions.

Large scene docks equipped with modern machinery will be installed to handle all scenes and sets mechanically. A light and airy scenario department, casting department, modeling departments, wardrobe rooms, etc., will be installed.

Among the notable features will be a completely equipped modern theatre for the demonstration and showin gof films to executives and artists, a complete and up-to-date restaurant for the exclusive use of artists and employes, a refrigerating plant, a sanitary barber shop, hair dressing parlors, libraries, reading ooms, locker rooms, turkish baths, green rooms, club rooms, gymnasium ,etc.

The studio building will be equipped with the most modern sprinkler system and elevators will be provided for the quick and easy handling of all scenes and properties. The roof of the studio will be so constructed as to provide floods of natural daylight so as to make it possible to take scenes practically from sunrise to sunset without artificial light. Modern ventilating an dair cooling systems will be installed. In fact, every improved invention known to modern science will be employed to make the studio building the most up-to-date institution of its kind in the world.

On the block front adjoining ,there will be erected a three-story building to be devoted exclusively to laboratory purposes. This building will also be fireproof and modern in every respect, and still contain every known contrivances for the proper developing of films.

The entire designing, planning and construction of these buildings will be in charge of the Fleischmann Construction Company, of New York, who have specialized for a great many years in moving picture studios and laboratories ,and who have erected most of the big modern theatres throughout the United States and Canada. The group of buildings and open stages will cost, as estimated, about two million dollars.

Capellani Concentrates on Studio Activity

BECAUSE of the increasing activities of Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., Albert Capellani, president of that concern, has shifted the actual business responsibilities accruing to his duties, as president, to Harry Cahane, treasurer of the company, who, inconjunction with Adolphe Osso, will have active charge of the business end.

Although Mr. Capellani will continue as the president and will be known as such, his duties will be more in the nature and capacity of director-general.

As his reason for this move, Mr. Capellani explained that he found it absolutely necessary to devote all of his time, attention and energy to the studio in order to produce a standard of quality consistent with his past achievements.

"The business end of most picture-producing," explained Mr. Capellani, "affects the studio only in so far as the exhibitor's box-office is concerned, and at that, this angle, aside from the skillful mechanical treatment in the filming of a story or play shall be borne in mind in selecting the subject to be filmed.

"In choosing a story it is highly important that it should possess a tangible box-office value—a successful play, a widely read book or magazine story.

"In order to give the exhibitors such an advantage, few will disagree with me when I overstep the bounds of modesty slightly by saying that our selection of 'Oh, Boy' as the first of the Creighton Hale-June Caprice series, insures the exhibitor booking the film version of a profitable engagement.

"As a stage piece, 'Oh, Boy' has been and still is being presented throughout the entire country by seven companies on tour, and has played to capacity audiences wherever shown, so great has been its appeal."

Announces Innovation

Universal Exchange announces that it is running a new publicity and service department in connection with its sales department. Sam Zierler, sales manager of the company, organized the innovation, which is now being run by Fred E. Baer. Mr. Baer, who has seen service in France, is a former newspaper man, having worked on the staff of St. Louis, Philadelphia and New York papers.

Ray and Fair Begin Work on Third Picture

"Be a Little Sport" is the title of the third picture to be made for William Fox by Albert Ray and Elinor Fair. The picture is now in work at Hollywood, under the direction of Scott Dunlap, who staged the second Ray-Fair picture, "Words and Music By——," scheduled for early release under the Excel Pictures group.

The story of "Be a Little Sport" was written by Hale Merriman and the scenario is the work of Joseph A. Roach. This picture, it is understood, offers the same type of clean, sprightly romance that distinguishes "Words and Music By——," and "Married In Haste," the first two Ray-Fair pictures.

In the cast supporting Ray and Miss Fair are Lule Warranton, George Hernandez, Leota Lorraine and Eugene Palette.

Announces Production of Short Features

The Capital Film Company announces that it is going into the production end of the game, and that two-reel dramas and comedies will be the result.

S. L. Barnhard, general manager, states that through their twelve branch offices contracts continue to come in such abundance it has become absolutely essential that they make their own productions.

"We are determined to give the exhibitor good pictures," said Mr. Barnhard, "so we feel justified in making them ourselves. We are firmly convinced that the day of the short feature is at hand. Our policy has been and will continue to be 'give the public what it wants.' That means good pictures with popular players. Our representative, Mr. C. Eddy Eckels, is in New York now completing arrangements preparatory to making our own production."

Davies Starts One

Marion Davies will start a new picture under the direction of Robert Leonard this week. It is understood that C. F. Zittel has leased the Biograph studio for several weeks.

Foremost Stars in Illustrated Songs

A novelty attraction that is said to be pleasing thousands of picture theatre goers is that of the New Idea Illustrated Song slide. Wherever introduced, this new feature has won the hearts of the movie patrons with its pleasing melody accompaniment and its sentimental appeal.

Arrangements have been recently consummated whereby the Standard Slide Corporation of New York have secured rights to illustrate the popular song hits of the day with scenes posed by famous screen stars, and the releases issued to date include Fatty Arbuckle, Anita Stewart, Madame Nazimova, Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, Norma Talmadge, Mabel Normand and others.

Another pleasing feature of this novelty is the introduction of the song on the slides; each scene containing the lines of the song which it illustrates. This enables the audience to join in the singing, or to follow the words of the song as rendered by the vocalists.

The new slide is now being featured, it is said, in Marcus Loew and Fox houses.

Exhibitors Request Dates on Talmadge Feature

Branch managers in nearly every Select Exchange in the country have received numerous requests for advance play dates on Constance Talmadge's current attraction, "The Veiled Adventure," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick. Already first-run showings have been announced for Chicago, Boston and Louisville theaters, including a week at Sig Faller's Bijou Dream in Chicago.

The feature is said to be one of the most entertaining pictures Miss Talmadge has ever made. The members of the cast are Harrison Ford, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Vera Doria, Rosita Marstini, T. D. Crittenden, Eddie Sutherland, Margaret Loomis and Vera Sisson.

Vitagraph Issues Book to Exploit Feature

Vitagraph is issuing this week its campaign and plan book for the new Antonio Moreno-Carol Holloway serial, "Perils of Thunder Mountain." The campaign book contains sixty-four pages, plus a two-color four-page insert and covers in colors. It is said to be the most comprehensive plan book ever released by the company, and contains poster reproductions of the first four episodes of the serial, press matter and a novelization of each of the fifteen episodes and no end of suggestions and advertising aids for the exhibitor.

Hurst Story for Screen

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., announces the purchase of a story from Fannie Hurst, the well-known short story writer.

This story, "The Petal on the Current," is the first the authoress has sold for motion picture production and it will be produced shortly at Universal City.

Organizes "Great Authors, Inc."

New Organization Will Produce and Market as "Benjamin B. Hampton Productions" for the Screen

Mildred Manning, in "The Westerners," Produced by Great Authors Pictures, Inc.

CHARLES A. WEEKS, treasurer and associate of Benamjin B. Hampton, announces that the organization of Great Authors, Inc., is one of the most significant developments of recent years in the motion picture industry.

Great Authors, Inc., will produce and market as "Benjamin B. Hampton Productions" the most famous novels of Stewart Edward White, Winston Churchill and Emerson Hough, in addition to the best known novels of popular personalities in American literary life.

All productions of Great Authors, Inc., will be distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, which handles its physical releasing through the thirty Pathe Exchange offices in the United States with Hodkinson managers and assistants in full and complete charge of selling in each office.

Benjamin B. Hampton, though previously identified with such successes as the Rex Beach productions, "The Barrier" and "The Auction Block," has never permitted the use of his name in the sponsorship for motion pictures.

He has been at work in California for months as president of both of Great Authors and the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., and now comes out openly to contribute his business prestige to the productions made by the powerful organization he has assembled.

Stewart Edward White's "The Westerners" is the first of the big productions ready for release and the negative of this production has been shipped East from California for June distribution.

This most successful novel has been given a cast with Roy Stewart, Mildred Manning, Robert McKim, Wilfred Lucas, Graham Pettie, Mary Jane Irving and Frankie O'Neil and has been made under the direction of Edward Sloman.

Robertson-Cole Active in New Spring Drive

THE spring production drive of the Robertson-Cole Company's various units is on, and is far ahead of the Exhibitors Mutual release schedule.

The Haworth Pictures Corporation, B. B. Features, Jesse D. Hampton Productions and other units are working at top speed, taking advantage of the wonderful weather for motion picture production which is now prevailing in California.

"His Debt," in which Sessue Hayakawa is expected to further enhance his reputation as one of the premier actors appearing before the camera, has been completed in the Brunton studios by the Haworth Pictures Corporation. William Worthington, who directed other Hayakawa features, also produced "His Debt," which was written for the screen by L. V. Jefferson and scenarioized by Francis Guiban.

William Desmond has completed "The Mists of Hell," a throbbing story of the Yukon, and is now filming "Bare-Fisted Gallagher," a romance of the West. "Bare-Fisted Gallagher" was written especially for Desmond by William Parker.

"Modern Husbands," with its love pirate and its story of everyday life, has been completed with Henry B. Walthall in the leading part. Lee Royal wrote the original story of "Modern Husbands."

"Josselyn's Wife" also has been completed, with Bessie Barriscale playing the leading role, and it has been acclaimed the finest work the favorite star has done since joining Robertson-Cole.

Miss Barriscale is now working on "Broken Threads, which was written by M. B. Havey and put into screen form by Fred Myton. Mr. Hickman, who directed "Josselyn's Wife," is also directing this production.

The cast includes Rosemary Theby, Nigel Barrie, Henry Kolker, Thomas Holding, Ben Alexander, and Mary Jane Irving.

"Josselyn's Wife" is the next Barriscale release following "Hearts Asleep."

"Beating the Odds" Next Morey Release

Harry T. Morey's next release, which is called "Beating the Odds" was adapted from the popular novel by Irving R. Allen called "The Money Maker."

"Beating the Odds" was directed by Paul Scardon and supporting Mr. Morey is a splendid cast including Betty Blythe, Jean Paige, Eulalie Jensen, George Majeroini, Charles Stevenson, Robert Gaillard, Robert Mowbray and Frank Norcross.

Jans Buys Some Comedies

H. F. Jans, of Jans Productions, Inc., announced this week that he has bought the negatives for the entire series of "Ham and Bud" comedies released by Kalem originally. He plans to reissue them under original titles.

The Jans organization announces that practically the entire state rights territory on Tom Mix reissues has been disposed of.

Goldwyn Lines Central Europe

New Corporation Formed for European Distribution as Soon as Peace Treaty Is Signed

THE Goldwyn Pictures Cororation announces that with the signing of the treaty of peace at Paris, Goldwyn pictures will be sold in all the countries of Europe that have been cut off from distribution by the war. Goldwn distribution will established in Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia, Germany, Austria, Poland, Bulgaria and Rumania, and all the lesser countries of the Balkans. Arrangements for distribution with a newly found American company have been completed ,and so soon as the treaty is signed the new venture will be initiated. Further details will be made public at that time.

The step is viewed as a significant one in the motion picture industry. It means the extension of American methods in pictures, American ideals and Americanism in general to those whose need has been clearly shown by the war. Goldwyn executives have been guided by this ideal, and not by the promised extension of their business, when it was decided to undertake the responsibility of extensive European distribution.

With the opening of Goldwyn distribution in the new countries, Goldwyn will have established its system in every important trade center and country in the world.

Samuel Goldwyn has issued a statement with reference to the new step about to be taken.

Pauline Frederick, the Goldwyn star

"The picture industry is too important a contribution to the life of the world to be viewed merely as a busines, and it has been one of the first principles of Goldwyn to assume that it would be a good business only if it served the world as a great institution of civilization. Europe enters on a new phase of history with the signing of the peace treaty and it is appropriate that the motion picture should play a great part in the regeneration of nations and the reconstitution of their forms of living.

"I think that the producers of motion pictures have for a long time taken too humble a place in the larger affairs of the world. Newspaper publishers and editors everywhere assume their importance in the general scheme of civilization, and rightly, and yet the motion picture touches humanity in a thousand places where the newspaper reaches it in a hundred. The world of tomorrow, the tomorrow on which the sun is just beginning to rise, will demand more and more of the screen, more intelligence as well as greater beauty.

"What we are doing in definitely assuming the burden of a widespread European distribution is with that in mind.."

Metro Announccs Expansion Of New Studio

ACCIDENTAL production will be a thing of the past, according to Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation. Production of motion pictures in the future will be a thing premeditated; a thing with a definite purpose, he says, and the exhibitor as well as the producer will profit by the new era dawning in the industry.

Since his arrival in New York from California, where he went to see a projection of Nazimova's new super-feature, "The Red Lantern," and consult with other Metro officials on special plans of exploitation and distribution of this spectacular production, Mr. Rowland has been very busy laying out final plans for the enlargement of the new Hollywood studio in accordance with notes he made on his visit.

"The scenario department," said Rowland, "will be the first thing to receive attention. It must be given more room to meet the requirements of the plans which we have laid out for our new production policy.

"As soon as the quarters of this department have been altered according to the sketches sent to Maxwell Karger, director-general of Metro, there will be several new additions to the already efficient force.

"Pleasant surroundings and plenty of light," continued Mr. Rowland, "are essential to the reader or writer for the screen as well as in any other artistic endeavor, and it is Metro's intention to tear down one of the small new structures on their lot and erect in its stead a three-story concrete building providing spacious individual offices for each of the scenario staff."

"Common Cause" Big Run

Vitagraph reports that J. Stuart Blackton's big production, "The Common Cause," has been booked for an indefinite run at the Palace theatre, Los Angeles, to open the first week in May.

A big advertising campaign is being put back of "The Common Cause" by the Palace theatre management, and a long run is being provided for.

Excel Pictures Emphasize High Standard

Declaring that "The Love That Dares," featuring Madliane Traverse and "Miss Adventure" starring Peggy Hyland, are the best pictures in which these stars have appeared, officials of the Fox Film Corporation are pointing to these as pictures which give peculiar emphasis to the high standard of excellence which prevails in the Wiliam Fox Excel Pictures group.

"The Love that Dares," the Fox Exhibitors Service Bupreau states, shows Madliane Traverse at her best—in a strong emotional role which gives scope to her wide range of artistic ability.

The Exhibitors Service Bureau also asserts that "Miss Adventure," totally unlike "The Love That Dares," furnished a striking example of the diversity of entertainment furnished by the Excel Picture program.

De Mille's Latest Claims Human Interest

In "For Better, For Worse," Cecil B. DeMille's latest Artcraft Special production which was released April 27, it is said that all the characters are real human beings, grappling with human situations, and the sympathy of the audience goes out to every one of them, in spite of their mistakes and rash actions, Edgar Selwyn, author of many Broadway successes, wrote the story, and the scenario was written by Jeanie Macpherson.

The cast includes, among others, Elliott Derter, Gloria Swanson, Wanda Hawley, Sylvia Ashton, Tom Foreman, Theodore Roberts, Jack Holt and Raymond Hatton.

Features Mardi Gras in Next Production

Rex Beach's newest novel to be picturized is "The Crimson Gardenia." It is described as a romance of the Mardi Gras and the entire action transpires in New Orleans, known to be the only city in America retaining a flavor of the old world. In the novel many quaint customs and landmarks are described with peculiar charm by the author.

Old courtyards, mellow with tradition, and open air cafes; tiny, overhanging balconies, secret stairways and the dozen and one earmarks of the French quarter in the old city are beautifully pictured in the production, it is said.

"Lion's Den" Completed

George D. Baker not only directs Metro stars but also writes the continuities. He has just finished directing Bert Lytell in "The Lion's Den."

This production was adapted by Mr. Baker from Frederick Orin Bartlett's story in the Saturday Evening Post. Alice Lake, who supported Bert Lytell in "Blackie's Redemption," heads the cast of "The Lion's Den," which also includes Joseph Kilgour, Edward Connelly, Augustus Phillips, Howard Crampton and Seymour Ross.

"Bolshevism on Trial," Praised by Governor

Declaring that Select's super-attraction, "Bolshevism on Trial," is a very timely production, and that he hopes it will be successful, Calvin Coolidge, Governor of Massachusetts, this week placed his stamp of approval on the picture.

In a letter to Charles R. Rogers, New England manager for Select, Governor Coolidge said:

> "I think the idea of the film, 'Bolshevism on Trial,' is very timely. We surely need to educate our people along the lines that your picture depicts. I hope it will be very successful.
> "Very truly yours,
> "CALVIN COOLIDGE,
> "Governor."

New England Manager Rogers is doing big work for "Bolshevism on Trial" in his territory, and some of the biggest bookings in the country are expected to come from the five states over which he has jurisdiction. He has already launched a special campaign in behalf of the big attraction.

First to Deliver Films by Aeroplane

The first occasion on which goods have been delivered by air in Great Britain took place on April 8, when the Harma Company, one of Britain's foremost film producing concerns sent their national feature, "The Power of Right" from London to Newcastle.

This film, it will be remembered, is one of the two Harma subjects in which His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales plays a part.

The machine was piloted by Capt. A. M. West, of the Royal Air Force, who was accompanied by Lieut. A. Clayton.

The Air Ministry of Great Britain has loaned this Bristol fighter plane to the Harma Company for a couple of months, and it will be used to carry the films from town to town during the trade shows.

Faralla Now Comptroller of Select

Dario L. Faralla, deputy comptroller of Select Pictures Corporation, has been appointed comptroller of the new Selznick Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Faralla is a young man who has earned his advancement through hard work and perseverance. He is a graduate of the Royal Technical Institute in Rome and holds the degree of European C. P. A. After coming to America he was made head accountant and manager of the Tocci Bank, a position which he held for five years. Later he was with the Pathe exchanges as auditor, and from that office he went to the Unity Sales as head auditor.

In the future Mr. Faralla's duties will be confined entirely to the finances and accounts of Selznick Pictures.

Gets Howard Turrill

Jesse L. Lasky announces the addition to the Famous Players-Lasky organization of Howard Turrill, for several years connected with the Exhibitors-Mutual in charge of various activities. Mr. Turrill will be associated with Whitman Bennett, production manager.

Big Productions During Summer

Robertson-Cole Announces That Some of Its Biggest Productions Will Help Exhibitors in Dull Months

IT is declared that in pursuance of its policy to further in every way the interests of the exhibitor, Robertson-Cole has decided to issue some of its biggest productions during the summer months, when the showman handicapped by the weather, finds the sledding hard and unremunerative.

Instead of holding off until the fall, when most big offerings are issued, Robertson-Cole will begin the release of the Beatriz Michelena features through Exhibitors' Mutual, during the month of May. This decision was reached last week, when it was definitely decided to introduce the Michelena series with "Just Squaw" and to begin releasing at once.

In addition to the Michelena series, Robertson-Cole promise exhibitors a series of unusual photoplay productions featuring one of the handsomest and best known women on the stage or screen. The first of this popular favorite's offerings will be made during the summer, and from past performances exhibitors are said to be in store for some mighty good photoplays.

"Just Squaw" is the first of a series of three pictures more than a year in the making, in which Miss Michelena had the leading role. The others are "The Spitfire" and "The Deadline," each of which measures up to the high standard set by "Just Squaw." George Middleton, well known for his previous screen works, directed the three Michelena features.

Within the next fortnight, Robertson-Cole expects to be in a position to announce the name of a new star, the plans they have made for her, and the name of her initial release which is now nearing completion. This player is said to be known from Coast to Coast and has earned a reputation of being one of the most talented women stars appearing before the camera.

"Topics of the Day" Receives Strong Praise

THE first release by Pathe Exchange of "Topics of the Day," will be made on May 4 and continue weekly. To the established success of this popular feature, from the first run houses of New York to the Pacific Coast there is being added new appreciation in the shape of widely spread bookings, it is said. New testimony only confirms the endorsement of Sid Grauman, of the Million Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles, who says:

"'Topics of the Day' is a feature that my audience look for as a part of my program every week. They were a winner from the start.

"It is an excellent feature to stir up any audience, and they talk about 'Topics of the Day' as they leave the theatre."

The late Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand Theatre, gave this testimony: "It affords me great pleasure to be able to inform the trade the wonderful success which 'Topics of the Day' are meeting with at the Strand Theatre. I can most enthusiastically endorse same and would advocate that exhibitors make some arrangement whereby they could incorporate a 'Topics of the Day' in their review."

A. J. Moeller, managing director of the Theatre De Luxe, Detroit, offered this testimony:

"We would not have gone to the subject direct from you, at the price we paid, if we did not feel it was worthy of every consideration."

The New York Morning Telegraph says: "'Topics of the Day,' is one of the most delightful fillers for a program that we know."

The New York Evening Mail characterizes it as "the always interesting 'Topics of the Day.'" MOTION PICTURE NEWS and Variety have also commented highly on the series.

Some of the coming selections from the humor, satire and philosophy of Europe will have an intimate and timely interest.

Select Dedicates May 15 as Edith Cavell Day

THE body of Edith Cavell, the British Red Cross nurse, who was executed by the Germans in 1915 in Brussels, will be removed to England from Belgium on May 15, and taken to Westminster Abbey, where ceremonies will be held. In commemoration of this event General Sales Manager J. S. Woody, of Select Pictures Corporation, is arranging special showings of Select's big special, "The Cavell Case," in all the theatres of the country where the attraction has not been shown. In many instances, it is believed, that exhibitors who have already shown the big special will rerun it in honorable memory of the martyred nurse whose life provides the plot of the picture.

An Associated Press dispatch from London, dated April 17, states that the body of Nurse Cavell will be taken to Dover on a warship, and will be transported on a gun carriage with military escort to Victoria Station. From Victoria the body will be taken to Westminster Abbey. Interment will be in Norwich, the home of the Cavell family, and the birthplace of the nurse.

Select's big special, "The Cavell Case," in which Julia Arthur portrays the life and death career of Miss Cavell, was released in the fall of 1918. It has been shown in every section in the United States, and at the present time is playing in the Canadian provinces in connection with a personal tour by Miss Arthur.

General Sales Manager Woody's plans for Cavell Day in the United States on May 15, include, in connection with the showing of the picture, special musical programs and the co-operation of local chapters of the American Red Cross. Special sales bulletins announcing the ceremonies over Nurse Cavell's body at Westminster Abbey have gone forth to Select branch managers.

Metro Acquires Popular Stories

With a Grist of New Stories the Five Metro Stars Will Be Unusually Active this Spring

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, president of Metro, stated that all the departments of the Metro studios in Hollywood are running on high gear these days.

Many new vehicles have been purchased for the use of Viola Dana, May Allison, Emmy Wehlen, Bert Lytell and Hale Hamilton, from writers whose novels and short stories are said to be recognized for their originality of theme and situations.

All of these stars are at present engaged in completing productions under the old program release policy, and, after a brief rest, each will, in turn, step into a new robe now being tailored for them by the dramatists of the Metro scenario department.

Hale Hamilton smiled his way through the adaptation of Ben Ames Williams' four-part novel, "After His Own Heart," and commenced work on the new Robert F. Hill tale of love and adventure, mostly adventure, called "Full o' Pep."

A circus story has been purchased from William Dudley Pelley for the forceful young Bert Lytell. "One-Thing-at-a-Time o' Day" is the title of Mr. Pelley's story as it appears in the Saturday Evening Post, which, called to the attention of Maxwell Karger, at once appealed to the director-general as a suitable vehicle.

Two San Francisco women, Anne and Alice Duffy, are the dual authors of the next vehicle for the versatile little Viola Dana. "Pliant Patricia" is the name of it, and it is being converted to the screen by June Mathis from the three-act stage play as originally written by these playwrights.

May Allison's new story is called "Free" and is from the pen of that most entertaining writer, Will Irwin, who published his original manuscript in the Saturday Evening Post.

The second of the series of romantic comedy-dramas produced under Emmy Wehlen's new contract with Metro will be a story of society life from a semi-satirical angle, called "Family Trees."

Lois Wilson in Role With Dustin Farnum

J. A. BERST, president of United Picture Theaters, has selected Lois Wilson as the leading lady for Dustin Farnum in his latest feature, "The Harvest of Shame." This melodrama of the East and West, written by Tom J. Geraghty, is now in course of production at the Brunton studios and is being directed by Thomas N. Heffron.

Lois Wilson, who enacts the role of "Mary Tompkins, a stenographer," came to Los Angeles from Birmingham, Ala., three years ago and entered pictures. Her first opportunity came when she played opposite J. Warren Kerrigan and she continued as his leading woman while he was with Universal. She joined Mr. Kerrigan again as his leading woman when the Pallta Company was formed, appearing in "A Man's Man" and "The Turn of a Card."

Since then Miss Wilson has supported Henry Walthall and Frank Keenan.

"I enjoy my work and am enthusiastic over it and would like some day to have a part on the stage," said Miss Wilson. "I live with my mother, father and two sisters. I like to read, ride, dance, sing, in fact I am just human and have no hobbies unless it is being out of doors. I am glad to have the opportunity to appear with Mr. Farnum and think 'The Harvest of Shame' is going to be a great production."

Another prominent casting for Mr. Farnum's support is that of Betty Bouton, who will enact the role of Avia Dale. Miss Bouton has appeared in the support of a number of movie stars, including Marguerite Clarke and Mary Pickford. She plays in the latest United feature the part of the only daughter of Oliver Dale, owner of the Independent mines. The young daughter believes that wealth and position are all that count, but is brought to another realization of the drama. It is described as a wonderful story.

NextNormaTalmadgeSelect nearsCompletion

NORMA TALMADGE'S forthcoming Select Picture, "The New Moon," is nearing completion, and with the cutting and titling, which is expected to be finished during the ensuing week, the production will be ready for distribution as a May attraction. "The New Moon" is a Russian story. It was written by H. H. Van Loan, and directed by Chester Withey, who also wrote the scenario.

The story "The New Moon" concerns the Russian insurrection and the Nationalization of women. Miss Talmadge has the part of a Russian princess. The picture opens amid a scene of much festivity in the Princess' palace, which is suddenly transformed into a chaos of disorder. A bomb is thrown, killing and injuring many of the guests, including the Princess' mother. It is announced that the Bolshevists have surrounded the Palace, and that the women are ordered to register at the National bureau.

The Princess escapes, leaving her fiance, Prince Michail Koloyar behind. This role is played by Pedro de Cordova, Miss Talmadge's leading man. Later the Prince joins the Bolshevist movement, hoping by this method that he may learn the hiding place of the Princess.

It is declared to be one of the most gripping and thrilling stories in which Miss Talmadge has ever appeared and the Select officials are enthusiastic about it.

Miss Talmadge is surrounded by a cast, including, in addition to Pedro de Cordova, Charles Gerard, who has the role of Theo. Kameneff; Stewart Holmes, who plays Orel Kosloff; Marc McDermott, as Vasili Lazoff; Ethel Kaye, as Masha, and Marguerite Clayton and Harry Sothern in other parts.

Meyer Announces June 8 as Pearson Release

Louis Meyer, president of Virginia Pearson Photoplays, announces that "The Bishop's Emeralds," their first photo-drama, will be released on June 8, through Pathe.

The completed film, cut and titled, was shown last week to a specially invited gathering including several European representatives and American technical experts.

Miss Pearson's popularity in motion pictures, following a stage career of fine achievement, will, it is confidently predicted, be largely increased by this splendid emotional creation from the novel of the same name by Captain Houghton Townley. Jack Beresford translated the story, John O'Brien doing the directing.

The cast supporting Miss Pearson includes Sheldon Lewis, Robert Broderick, Lucy Fox, Frank Kingsley, Walter Newman and Marcia Harris.

William Russell, May 18, in "Some Liar"

William Russell Productions list as their forthcoming release a picturization of James Oliver Curwood's tale, "Some Liar," a humorous story of the West. Stephen Fox put it into scenario form and Henry King directed the picture. Publication is set for May 18.

There is an abundance of the fast riding, shooting, fighting and comedy situations, it is said in this picture, that fans like to see in comedies of this character. Hayward Mack is prominent in the cast, and John Gough has a double role, enacting a village half-wit and the octogenarian bridegroom aforesaid.

"The Fear Woman" Is Frederick's Latest

Pauline Frederick's third Goldwyn production, "The Fear Woman," by Izola Forrester, author of Geraldine Farrar's newest Goldwyn picture, "The Stronger Vow," is a powerful drama laid in a modern, present-day environment. Not only is the famous star provided with a splendid story, up-to-the-minute in its every detail, and which gives her the opportunity to dominate one absorbing situation after another, but she is enabled to appear in a succession of ultra-fashionable costumes more gorgeous than she has ever worn on the stage or screen, it is said.

L-Ko Features Roberts in Two Reelers

Edith Roberts, who has been featured in Bluebird productions recently and who has for the past few weeks been seen in several stage plays on the Pacific Coast, has joined the L-Ko Komedy Co. forces and will be featured in forthcoming two reel comedy productions. Miss Roberts' first screen work was in comedy. She was seen in support of Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran for a time and then took up feature work. Among her screen features were "The Love Swindle," "Beans," "Sue of the South," and "A Taste of Life."

Nazimova in "The Red Lantern"

EXHIBITORS who have booked "The Red Lantern," the latest and by far the most lavish of the Nazimova productions, should make up their minds to give it the closest study and put the "class" in their exploitation that will increase the length of their runs and bring the biggest returns.

For the exhibitor to get the full benefit this picture should be advertised heavily and startlingly, and far enough in advance to have your patrons talking about it for days before the first showing. You should launch the picture with a big splash and then keep up the advertising all during the run in sufficient volume to take advantage of the large amount of word of mouth advertising that this production is sure to create.

You will probably increase your admission price for this showing and if your exploitation is on the right plane that will be an asset to you because it will impress upon the public that this is an offering far out of the ordinary and one that has an appeal away beyond the ordinary motion picture. You should offer this as a production that challenges comparison with any offering of the legitimate stage and invite all of those who have frowned upon the photoplay to come and see something the equal of which they have not seen in the spoken drama.

Your entire campaign should be planned with the idea of getting every person in your territory into your theatre during the engagement. And the way to do that is to use newspaper space in keeping with the bigness of the picture and to reflect in your advertising the artistic and unusual character of the production. And the way to do that is not by relying merely on adjectives, but by entering into the spirit of the offering and reflecting that in every portion of your exploitation. As a matter of fact, here is a case of that being easy for you if you will only follow sound showmanship.

IT is difficult to convince some exhibitors who see a chance to do big business on the strength of the drawing power of the star and the strength of the production why they should go out and spend additional money. But it is the really big picture that stands up under the claims that you make for it that enables you to increase prices without the loss of business, to gain new patrons for your house and to extend the runs. If you have a chance to center all the interest of your community on your theatre for a certain length of time, you have certainly accomplished a great deal, especially when you have done that at a profit. In short, we believe that exploitation should take all of these things into consideration and that you should act on the principle that you are not merely advertising this single production, but that you are building for the future.

With that in mind we would build the first announcement of the showing of "The Red Lantern" around the fact that your theatre was the lucky one to get this special production and without saying so in just those words you can leave the impression on the general public that your house is the one that is picked for the showing of the biggest pictures. When you have done that and couple with the announcement your personal guarantee of the offering you have linked the production and theatre as strongly together as possible.

SO far as we have been able to gather from the numerous specimens of Nazimova advertisements used by managers for former productions and which have been printed with comment under the heading of "Your Idea and Ours" it has been found necessary to only use one of the drawings or halftones of the star that show her wonderful physical charm and her magnetic appeal and then to refer to her as "The star of a thousand moods," "The screen's greatest emotional star," and the like and then give the name of the offering and a few words about it.

That same plan will attract a lot of attention to this offering, but for those who want to get longer runs, higher admissions and more people than ever before we would recommend that there be a more lavish presentation so as to bring out, not in mere adjectives, but by actual illustrations the great scale on which the production has been made and the versatility which Nazimova shows in interpreting the dual roles. In short we would advertise this not as an offering in competition with other screen productions, but as "in a class all of its own."

HERE, too, provided you are willing to advertise very liberally you have an opportunity to test the readiness of your newspapers to co-operate with you. If you can show the newspapermen this picture in advance, so much the better, but if you cannot go to them and tell them the simple truth, show them the stills from

Are these the same woman? This is a good idea for an advertisement. At right and left we saw Nazimova as Mahlee, the Eurasian girl, and in the center as Blanche, the acknowledged daughter of the Englishman

Here is Nazimova, showing the greatest of her heart in portraying the pagan side of Mahlee's nature. In the center she is shown making the sacrifice for her grandmother, and at the right, the dangers she risks in her attempt to save the English mission the picture, the class of cut matter that the newspaper can secure and then outline your advertising plans. You can say to them there is going to be nothing freakish, nothing of the teaser style about your advertising, but that you are going to base your whole appeal on the worth of the offering and the art of the star.

Now, if you have planned to run this picture for any length of time, or if you want to make the test of whether you can run it longer than usual the newspaper can get for you a half-page seven-column mat containing a number of scenes and showing Nazimova in her two roles that will do splendidly for the top portion of a full-page advertisement. Then should follow the announcement that you are going to show the picture, and if you are going to show it for a longer time than usual this fact should be commented upon.

We would recommend the use of this full page advertisement in the Sunday papers one week before the showing of the picture. That's going some, but remember that we are talking to those who are really anxious to get one hundred per cent results.

THIS first advertisement should be written, so that it will appear to every one that this is really an event in the history of your theatre. We would say in so many words that we are making this announcement so far in advance because we do not want our patrons to make any engagements that will prevent their seeing this offering. And this should appear as separate and apart from any other advertising that you are doing on the current offering. That emphasizes the "event" idea, and also prevents your selling this picture as against your "now" bills.

In order to get the full benefit of this we would advise sending out in advance of the full-page's appearance, a letter to your complete mailing list calling attention to the fact that this display will appear in certain newspapers and asking your patrons to read it carefully. This letter should be brief, and there is no occasion to go into the merits of the offering. Let the advertisement itself do that.

Unquestionably your newspaper will agree to co-operate, and will use one of the strips showing Nazimova both as the white girl and as the Eurasian, and picturing some of her many moods. We would ask the newspaper to build a special story around that point.

LET'S INSPIRE

Then Tell us for the Benefit of Others What You Do

LETTERS that we have received from several exhibitors have told us that they are going to do unusual things in the presentation of "The Red Lantern." We want to be able to record every one of these accounts in these pages.

The suggestions that are made here are largely general. Exhibitors will take their own angles in the display, and we are sure that some mighty good ideas will be worked out. It is a picture that is going to make showmen think a lot.

And after you have done that, let us record your work for those who will show the picture later.

Your paper should be posted at the same time, and we would advise that instead of merely covering your city with your usual stands that you go into the country and plant this paper along the main highways and in the smaller towns that will not get a chance to see this offering until later.

You will note that instead of suggesting any teaser campaign that we are urging you to put your cards on the table, so that every time "Red Lantern" or Nazimova is mentioned during that week the public will know that reference is made to the production that is coming to your house.

EVEN should you have to drop out of the newspapers on this picture on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday we would recommend this centering on the Sunday before display, and merely using at the bottom of the regular advertisement the announcement that the picture is coming. Of course, it would be better to use a display each day, and in every case these should be illustrated with some striking picture of the star as she appears in the film.

In these pages we have illustrated a large number of scenes from the picture. By themselves they show the unusual character of the offering, and we would make a prominent lobby display of these a week before the opening. Do not try to put up any special lobby setting, reserve that for the time of showing, but let the pictures speak largely for themselves.

You will find that after the page advertisement you have used on Sunday there will be great interest in these, and that they will accentuate the word of mouth advertising. If you have spoken only in more or less general terms about the production and have not undertaken to tell more than the bare outlines of the story, you will find that curiosity is working for you.

AS a matter of fact we would never, in any of the advertising or exploitation, relate this story in detail. Talk about its beauty and its fascination, the contrasting characters that the star portrays, the mystery of the Orient and all those things, but never attempt to outline the plot itself.

If you have put this campaign over as we have suggested you have every one knowing that you have this picture and all of them wondering what it is about. And then after the first day's showing you are going to have those who have not yet seen the picture asking their friends whether they have witnessed it, and what it is all about. Word of mouth advertising is cumulative—if the mystery element is there. But if you have told the story in advance you have lost that element.

The fact that this is a dramatization of the novel by Edith Wherry doesn't effect that in the slightest, except to increase the interest of those who have read the book. It will not interfere with your people talking about the picture, because you have made it their one big topic of conversation.

As we have said, we would prefer to advertise this picture every day for the week preceding, but certainly not later than Friday your specific campaign should start. On another page we are discussing the sort of appeal that you should make in it.

At the left the arrival of the Goddess of the Red Lantern, one of the most magnificent of the scene, and at the right an evidence that West is West as Hadee finds out—to her misery

Wonder of Picture Should Be Stressed to Limit

NAZIMOVA is more than the star of "The Red Lantern," for there is scarcely a scene in which she does not appear and in so many costumes ranging from the simple ones of the Chinese girl to the robes of the goddess, and so many moods does she portray, such a changing nature that she never tires.

Exhibitors should understand the story before they start their exploitation. We are introduced to Mahlee marketing in the streets of Pekin and then we see her going to the cobbler to have her sandal fixed, showing her feet are not bound like those of the real Chinese girls. For she is an Eurasian—half white and half Chinese, her avaricious grandmother having sold her daughter to a rich Englishman for "much gold." Mother had died at the girl's birth and then the Englishman had gone away, leaving money to care for the child, but with the orders that her feet should never be bound. And so she is taunted in the street as "devil feet."

With Oriental fatalism we see the grandmother reclining in her coffin, for she has heard the owl hoot and two more calls will take her to the gods. With vivid tenseness we have the death scene, the old woman telling Mahlee the story of her birth and then taking from a trunk a sword and begging the girl to cut her feet because the gods refuse the old woman entrance unless she does. In the terror of her paganism the girl yields and draws the sword across one, but with a scream of pain she falls over in a faint and her grandmother falls dead across her body.

ANDREW TEMPLETON, whose father and mother conduct the English mission, hears her scream and goes to her rescue, carrying her in his arms to the mission. Here we see Sam Wang, a Eurasion doctor, who pretends to be converted, but who is really an enemy of the whites though living on the bounty of the mission.

Years pass and Sam Wang has been to America to complete his education, at the expense of the Mission, and Mahlee has now become a Christian and is a teacher of the little children who have been won from paganism. In the meantime Andrew has become much interested in the girl.

$250,000

That Is a Lot of Money and Your Patrons Know It

HERE is a picture that its producers say cost $250,000 to make. And there is a good line for your advertising in this:

"A picture that cost $250,000 to produce——

"And every dollar of it shows on the screen."

Most people are not concerned with mere cost arguments. Ever since P. T. Barnum started out with his circus idea they have been amused and disabused with adjectives. They don't fool anyone.

But you have a chance here to show the people why this picture cost this amount if you will use lavishly in your advertising the scene pictures and keep right before the attention the immensity of the offering.

They don't care how much the picture cost, but they do want to know that the lavishness is with the production. You needn't be afraid of the costume bogey here, for it won't come in if you get the proper spirit.

Sam Wang's return is timed just at the moment when Dr. Templeton receives the news of the Boxer uprising in the North where the son is visiting. Then we see a little Chink telling Mahlee: "My fadder says no use learn Melican. All Chinese dox in Melica is washee." Mahlee tells the child that this is not true, but Wang, who has been covetous of the girl since his first sight of her, and who has overheard the conversation breaks in with "Pray tell us, wise teacher, what they do?"

Then the next day we see Andrew staggering into the mission, terribly wounded in his escape from the Boxers. The girl becomes his nurse as the boy's parents begin to note with the greatest alarm the friendship between them. Mahlee is unquestionably madly in love with him and there is every indication that it is returned. We have one scene where Mahlee is reading to him and she comes across the lines "East is East and West is West and Ne'er the twain shall meet." He denies that it is true.

WANG is determined to win the girl and when she goes into the chancel to play for Andrew, still in the courtyard, we have the scene in which Wang tells her that she will never be anything to the white people, declaring "We are Eurasians—neither fish nor fowl." He tells her that they merely tolerated him in America. Finally he confesses to her that he is a Boxer, that he hates all foreigners and wants China for China alone.

But he fails to shake her until there arrive Sir Philip Sackville and his daughter Blanche (also played by Nazimova). Soon Mahlee becomes to suspect that Andrew loves Blanche and then one day when the son starts to kiss Mahlee's hand and turns away—because it is brown—she realizes. And this is further emphasized when Mrs. Templeton tells the girl that it is impossible that she should ever marry Andrew. Then she declares that the Christian God has mocked her and yields to Wang's pleas to join him—but only for the cause.

Wang has not been successful in inducing the people of Pekin to join the Boxer and so with Mahlee's aid he resorts to magic. It is on the Feast of the Red Lantern, the Chinese New Year, that he stages the scheme, Mahlee, now the goddess, entering the street on a wonderful float capped by a huge lantern with a great retinue and garbed in gold and silk after Wang has theatrically summoned her. There before the people she declares: "I am the goddess of the Red Lantern. I have come from Celestial space to bless the Boxer cause."

Left and right are contrasting pictures of Nazimova as the Chinese girl and as the English woman listening to the love of Andrew Templeton. In the center is evidence of her conversion to Christianity in her effort to really look like the Madonna

IT is in her hour of pagan triumph that the nurse of her mother now at the mission reveals to her that she is the daughter of Sir Philip Sackville and that she is a half sister of Blanche. Then unwilling to see her own blood suffer, she steals from the palace in disguise and races to warn the mission. But here she confronts Sackville who refuses to recognize her though he admits the truth. Again she returns to Wang, but the Allies come and the Boxer rebellion is over. Wang is killed depending the false goddess just after handing her a vial of poison which she takes after sending a note of forgiveness to Sackville. He and his daughter reach the scene to hear Mahlee mutter "East is East and West is West" just as she dies.

Now of course you will use the most striking pictures of Nazimova in the largest possible size either in half tone form or in line drawings. There is one of her in her robes as the goddess standing with arms stretched above her head that is particularly fascinating. But be sure to make cuts dominate your advertising.

There are some good general lines that you should use prominently such as:

" The star of a thousand moods in a drama of a thousand delights."

" Exotic beauty and fascination of supreme art."

" Matchless Nazimova in the most astonishing of double roles."

" The world's most amazing actress in a production that astounds with its lavishness, mighty in its art and that fascinates with the sublimity of its power."

" A wonder drama set in the mystery of the East."

" The actress that none can equal in a production that no words can describe—where adjectives are mere mockery and where eyes and soul must see."

We would refer to the fact that this is a $250,000 production and that it was directed by Albert Capellani.

AFTER using one of these or similar lines giving the general idea of the picture we would introduce a little longer selling talk in smaller type, referring to some incident or some particular phase of the picture.

With any striking picture of the star as the Eurasian girl, try this one:

" They taunted her and called her 'Devil feet.' Her grandmother had sold her to a rich Englishman—and she was an Eurasian —half white, half yellow—neither fish nor fowl.

" But in the midst of the taunt the soothsayer said to her: 'Do not grieve, for some day you will be a great lady—but then— the Darkness.' So when she became a child of the English mission and the preacher's son admired her—she thought she saw the way.

" But then came a white girl—her half sister, but she didn't know it—and won that love away. 'East is East and West is West,' they told her, and she knew it was true. Then she turned back to her Chinese—became the Goddess of the Red Lantern and then——"

Or this one built directly on the love element:

" Mahlee was an Eurasian—her father was white, her mother yellow. Yet when she came to the Mission she became Christian and she believed that the son of the minister loved her. She refused to listen to a fellow Eurasian who declared his love and told her that they were 'neither fish nor fowl'—that she could never wed the white youth.

" She read that 'East is East and West is West, and ne'er the twain shall meet,' but she did not believe until a moment came when the youth started to kiss her hand and then drew back with a shudder—with the realization that it was YELLOW. Then came a white girl—she didn't know it was her half sister—and she saw her in the youth's arms. It was too much; she turned back to the Yellow race and what happened then, how she became the Goddess of the Red Lantern and the results are too amazing to tell."

THERE can be a splendid advertisement built around the pictures of Nazimova as the white girl and as Mahlee, with the question: " Can this be the same woman? " Then below this add:

" Even the amazing Nazimova astounds with the cleverness with which she portrays the Eurasian and the white girl. They were half sisters—though they did not know each other until it was too late—and as remote as the two poles.

" Mahlee hated the yellow blood in her and loved a white man, until she saw that her stain barred her and that the man loved another. Then her love turned to the Oriental hate—and the most amazing things that ever happened in a photoplay occurred."

We would suggest using this advertisement during the run of the picture for the ones preceding the opening and right at the start should be along the general lines of the production. And, by the way, you want to keep up your advertising during the entire run of this picture and it will pay to use new illustrations and new text matter day by day.

Here are a few shorter ones:

" White blood in Mahlee taught her to live and love, but the yellow forbade her, barred her from the only thing that she wanted—drove her back into paganism—and the mystery of the night."

" White blood and yellow fought in the veins of Mahlee, the Eurasian girl, but the yellow folk taunted her and the white forbade her as one of them—yet this Goddess of the Lantern stirred a nation to war in a conflict of races."

" Nazimova portrays the conflict of races within the body of one girl so vividly that she wins your heart to the little Eurasian whether she be at the pagan god's feet or worshipping in the love of the missionary's son. An amazing portrayal of white love and Oriental hate."

Three of the striking scenes showing Nazimova as " The Goddess of the Red Lantern. At right she seeks to bar Wang, and at left he vainly tries to force his attentions on her.

FOR the showing of this picture you should give your theatre a distinct Chinese atmosphere, but one of the richest sort. Grandeur stands out as one of the striking things in this production, and if you will carry that out you will attract a far greater attention.

Red lanterns should be used as the dominant decoration in your lobby, and there should be huge ones hung out in the front of the house to attract attention. If you are able to get imitations of cherry trees we would suggest lining the sides of the lobby with these. Then across the lobby use bamboo work to support the lanterns.

If you use girl ushers it will be most effective to dress them in Chinese robes, and if you use boys give them the proper costume. These ushers can carry small Chinese lanterns so long as the showing of the picture is not in progress, but should be discontinued then because they may interfere with the audience enjoying the production.

If you have a mezzanine floor or sufficient space anywhere it would be a good advertisement to serve tea to the ladies at the matinee. If this is done at stated hours either before or after the picture you can use a portion of your orchestra in rendering Chinese selections during the " pouring."

OTHER decorations of the lobby, in addition to the big assortment of scene pictures that we have already suggested using, can be made of cut-outs from the paper. There is one of the three sheets that shows Nazimova as Mahlee shaking hands with herself as the white girl, and this will form one striking decoration.

There can be another attractive one with the cut-outs from two different one-sheets. One of these shows Mahlee looking straight forward and down, and there is another which shows her as the white girl in the arms of the man both of them love. By cutting this latter out and placing it forward of the other figure you can have a splendid effect of Mahlee watching the couple.

Cover the lobby floor, if possible with rich looking rugs. The ticket booth might be converted into a Chinese pagoda, and the cashier dressed as a Chinese girl with the ticket taker as a Chinese warrior.

PHOTOGRAPHY

We Would Certainly Call Attention to It

IN one of the selling talks we have already suggested reference to the amazing splendor of this production. Don't forget that the general public knows quality in productions these days and wants the best.

Therefore we would suggest that you put especial emphasis on the photography in this one. You can safely tell your public that they have never seen any picture that was more wonderful from that point of view. Tell them of the realism and the striking effects.

It required months to build the sets for this picture. Any one who knows anything about motion pictures can see there is nothing of the fake about the backgrounds. You can make a hit by inviting architects and builders to look over the screen presentation and then give their opinions to the papers, and you can be sure of the results.

If sufficiently protected from the wind and so arranged as to cause no danger from fire joss sticks burning in the lobby will attract attention.

In the theatre itself there should be incense, just heavy enough to give the fragrance.

THERE should a Chinese flavor about your program, but be very sure of one thing, and that is not to get in any comedy ridiculing the average Chinaman such as we have in this country. That will have the effect of cheapening the bill. There should be comedy on the bill, but it ought to be of the proper type .

" Madame Butterfly " is the proper selection for your overture. This is a brilliant number with joy and grief both interpreted, and fits perfectly into the spirit of the feature. If you use stage sets the curtains should part during the latter part of this showing a Chinese scene with blooming cherry trees at either side of the stage.

You can probably add a novelty here by introducing one of the female songs from " Madame Butterfly " in the course of the overture, but this should not be done unless you have a good singer properly costumed.

There should be another Chinese setting and song used just before the feature, and this can be of the lighter sort such as " Three Little Maids from School," or any similar selection from any of the older comic operas based on Chinese stories.

YOU should be able to get all sorts of co-operation from merchants with this.

If your bookseller has copies of the book by Edith Wherry, or will get them the combination is apparent.

Then any of the merchants handling Chinese goods of the higher class will certainly give you a portion of their displays. Tea stores will be glad to co-operate.

There has been a special song written called " The Red Lantern," and you should get in touch with your music stores in sufficient time to insure that they have a display, and have their window displays on it. During the week before the showing of the picture have your orchestra play this selection and advertise it on your program together with the places where it can be bought.

Try to get all of the merchants use red lanterns in their windows at night. In short, try to have the shopping district of your city or that in the neighborhood of the theatre a consecutive display on " The Red Lantern."

Then this appeal can be carried into the residence districts by using facsimiles of a red lantern arranged as a door hanger. These should be placed on all the door knobs of the city early in the morning without ringing the bell, so that they will be seen when the first member of the family comes out for the morning paper.

Editorializes "Ghost Of Slumber Mountain"

AFTER having seen a private exhibition of Major Dawley's wonderful one reel picture, "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain," which is being distributed by World Pictures, shown to the authorities of Purdue University, the editor of the Lafayette, Indiana, Morning Journal, contributed an editorial taking for his subject, "Moving Pictures Should Play Part in Education."

"The idea of libraries of educational motion pictures is gaining much support. The government is already doing a good deal in this line. Many people feel it should do much more. Thomas A. Edison, in a recent magazine article, says the government should have great libraries of educational films to be used in school work. He would have these available so they could be had in any school anywhere. He thinks there are a great many slow-minded children who could get ideas in this way that they could never obtain through books.

"The time will come when all public libraries will carry a department of educational moving pictures. Picture machines and films will be produced at moderate prices and will become common in schools and churches. History, geography, social science, community spirit, the Bible, and many other subjects will be taught in this way.

"Moving pictures are destined to be one of the world's greatest educational forces. They convey ideas more vividly than any other method. They arouse emotion and enthusiasm. They form deep impressions that profoundly influence people.

"These pictures performed a tremendous service during the war. They helped people who do not read much to understand the reason for the war, and to see America's peril. They secured a splendid support for the war efforts.

"In the same way moving pictures can be used to help on all community causes. Boards of trade can use them to arouse interest in business enterprises. Village improvement societies can employ them to show what other communities are doing in beautification. The power of this form of instruction should be realized, and a great system built up for supplying educational pictures for public and school use all over the country."

Henry Reiss Goes Out After New Business

"DON'T sit back and wait for the regulars to come to your surbuban house. Go out and get new business."

This is the business slogan of Henry Reiss, manager of the West Broadway and Ideal theatres of Louisville, Ky., two good suburban houses with a wide territory to draw from.

These houses have enough "regulars" to insure them sufficient patronage with little effort but Reiss believes that the suburban house that does not make an effort to get additional business is letting golden opportunities slip by. It is not only missing patronage that will add to present profits but it is also overlooking that important duty of a successful manager, the building up of a clientele so large that it will carry the house successfully through any dull seasons or periods of depressions that may come at any time.

When Reiss gets a special feature he lets all the people know about it in what is strictly his territory and he also lets them know about it in territory that is beyond his ordinary limits. For the Tarzan pictures and "Virtuous Wives" he personally circularized his field and he went far beyond the regular boundaries. He did a fine extra business as the result of his foresight and efforts.

Mr. Reiss believes also in two day runs for suburban houses on big features. He ran "Shoulder Arms" two days and had such fine business that he added another day. And "Shoulder Arms" had run 25 days before in Louisville.

"Give the suburban house patrons the best to be had," says Mr. Reiss.

"Charge increased rates. They will pay it cheerfully. Create new patronage and enlarge your circle of 'regulars.'"

There are four suburban houses within a mile of Mr. Reiss' West Broadway and Ideal theatres, but he is going steadily ahead. He is a real showman and a mighty good judge of box-office values. His brother Martin Reiss, is associated with him in the management of the two houses.

Stern Adds Recruits to L-Ko Comedy Forces

THE spirit of California summer is being put into comedy production at Universal City these days. At the L-Ko studios President Julius Stern has added over a score of athletic beauties to the roster and a number of new comedians and comediennes have also been signed to appear in forthcoming productions. Edith Roberts, former Bluebird star, is the most recent addition to the L-Ko staff, but among the new recruits now at work at the studios are Jean Temple, Iva Roberts, Margaret Draycup, Betty Jamisson, Pearl Hutchinson and Gertrude Laneson. In addition to working on two two-reel animal comedies the L-Ko Kompany is also preparing two parlor comedies for release early in June.

At the Lyons-Moran studios Eddie and Lee continue to turn out their one-reel laughfests at the regular rate of one a week. Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber have just completed the fourth of a series of special one-reelers and W. S. Campbell is preparing for his third special two-reel animal comedy. Neal Burns and Josephine Hill under the direction of Al Santell have completed "Father Was Wise," and another Santell-Burns-Hill comedy recently completed is entitled "Rings and Things." Edgar Allen, who is seen as Jose in "The Red Glove," will begin work on his first Universal comedy within a short time.

Names Farnum's Latest "A Man's Fight"

Dustin Farnum's next United screen feature now in course of production at the Brunton studios, Los Angeles, and thus far known under the working title of "The Harvest of Shame," has been definitely named "A Man's Fight," President J. A. Berst of United announces.

Of this Tom Geraghty story, Mr. Berst says: "It has everything which goes to the making of a great motion picture drama. The opening is exciting, the play unfolds with swiftly rising interest, punctuated by well sustained suspense, to a thrilling climax. Its scenes are beautiful and unusually striking in their novelty."

A strong cast supports Mr. Farnum. It includes Lois Wilson, as leading woman; Dorothy Wallace, Betty Bouton, Aggie Gerring, Miles McCarthy, J. Barney Sherry, Wedgewood Nowell, Harry Van Meter, Dick La Reno and Bert Appling.

Raises Admission Prices on Ince Feature

"The Eleventh Commandment," Ralph Ince's special production released by Exhibitors Mutual, did a big business at 25-cent admission in New Castle, Ind., according to a letter from Guy D. Hammill, manager of the Royal theatre, New Castle.

"The Eleventh Commandment" stars Lucille Lee Stewart, in private life Mrs. Ralph Ince and a sister of Anita Stewart.

The picture was made from an original story by Mr. Ince for the Advance Motion Picture Corporation.

It deals with the unwritten eleventh commandment: "Thou shalt marry none but the man thou lovest," with Miss Stewart portraying the role of Dora Chester, a girl who broke the commandment.

Greeley Resumes Work at Fort Lee Studio

Evelyn Greeley, recently promoted to a stardom in her own right by World Pictures, after having been co-starred with Carlyle Blackwell, Montagu Love and other well known picture stars, has recovered from an attack of influenza that interfered with the production of "Relations." Miss Greeley has started work at the studio at Fort Lee on a new picture that bears the title of "Phil for Short." The story was written by Clara Beranger and Forrest Halsey and will be directed by Oscar Apfel.

Theda Bara's "Salome" Scores in London

While the Theda Bara super-production "Salome" continues to pile up records in this country, copies of British newspapers and film trade journals just received in New York, show that the picture is adding Great Britain to its conquests. Not only has "Salome," the Exhibitors Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation states, won the unanimous praise of the daily and trade press reviewers, but it also is proving a sensational box office attraction.

New Allison Comedy to Be Released May 12

METRO releases "Castles in the Air," with May Allison in the stellar role, on May 12. No better exponent of bright, snappy comedy than Miss Allison is said to be found in the photoplay field today.

"Castles in the Air" is a tale of the theatre and its folk; the ups and downs of the professionals and the managerial staff of the theatre; the adventurous life and love of Fortuna Donnelly, a beautiful, poor, but proud daughter of the tenements, who reaps the reward of happiness and love by her kindness toward her fellow-creatures.

"Castles in the Air" is the screen title given the original short story by Kate Jordan, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post under the name of "Orchestra D-2."

Fortuna Donnelly (played by Miss Allison) finds a job at the Halycon theatre as an usherette, where the manager, Eddie, falls deeply in love with her. The Hon. Owen Ponuncefote of Heathcourt Manor, England, happens along about this time and also becomes in love with her. She returns his love, but he has a past.

Owen visits the theatre often. When the Englishman invites her to dine with him at his newly rented mansion, she goes, regardless of the wishes of Eddie, who knows Owen's history.

At his home Fortuna discovers that Owen is married but has not seen his wife for several years. He tells her that she is lonely and that she is desirable, but the girl's innocent appeal to the man prevents him from exercising the influence he knows he has gained over her, and instead he calls a taxi and sends her home, with her dream of romance crumbled.

She realizes her mistake, and Eddie's straightforward manliness stands out in her memory predominant. The story comes to a satisfactory and happy ending.

Prominent in the cast are Ben Wilson, Walter I. Percival, Clarence Burton, Irene Rich, "Mother" Anderson, Viola Dana, and Ruth Maurice.

Announces Release For "Oh, You Women"

MAY 4 was announced as the release date of the John Emerson-Anita Loos Paramount picture, "Oh, You Women," which is heralded as one of the cleverest satires yet put forth on the screen. The picture has been heavily advertised, it is said, and the Press Book issued in connection with it is something totally different from all others issued by Paramount.

"Oh, You Women" helped to start the Victory Loan Drive off in New York. In the lower window of Aeolian Hall, Director John Emerson, assisted by Anita Loos, put Ernest Truex and Louise Huff, co-stars in the pictures, through several of the scenes, while a motion picture camera shot the scenes.

The Aeolian Company announced the feature in its advertisements, with the result that a large crowd blocked traffic along Forty-Second Street, and Bryant Park was filled with people. After several scenes were taken, the police appealed to Mr. Emerson to stop as they were unable to handle the crowd. The news was printed in the New York dailies, giving the picture a lot of publicity.

The scenes taken were just enough to give an idea of the coming picture.

What will happen when the boys come home is the question of the house in every community where the doughboys have come back to find their old jobs taken by girls. Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos have taken cold facts and made merry with them without perverting the basic truth. In every community we have heard of the farmerette, the girl who became motorman or conductor, the postwomen—and now what's going to hapen that the boys have come home? Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos foresaw it all, and made it into a picture that has a comedy appeal of exceptional value.

Art Department Adds New Structure

Despite the fact that Thomas H. Ince's new studios at Culver City, Cal., seemed to be entirely adequate to all needs, it has been found necessary to provide a separate building to house the Art Department, while still another will be required for the wardrobe. The latter is temporarily housed in one of the three large projection rooms in the administration building. This department is under the supervision of Roy Purden.

Irvin J. Martin heads the art department. In the new structure there will be a room for the photographic work, separate apartments for the artists, and another for mechanical subtitle work.

The new studios are becoming a favorite beauty spot which always takes the eye of the itinerant visitor to Southern California. Back of this stately entrance, however, is the busiest scene imaginable.

Goldwyn Company Moves in Fifth Avenue

The main offices of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation were moved on Saturday, April 26, from 16 East 42nd Street to the eighth floor of the Winfield Building at 469 Fifth Avenue.

No greater commentary on the growth of the Goldwyn organization can be made than the fact that within the two and one-half years of its existence it has been necessary to more than double the floor space required for the transaction of its business. Whereas at 16 East 42nd Street only five thousand square feet were occupied by this concern, at the new quarters something more than ten thousand will be used.

The Winfield Building will only be used for the main offices. The Foreign and Exchange offices will continue to be located at 509 Fifth Avenue, and the warehouse at 14th Street will remain in the same place.

Tearle Supports Reed in Third United

As leading man in support of Florence Reed in the third superpicture of her United series, Director Frank Crane, in consultation with J. A. Berst, president of United and J. M. Shear Company, who are producing the picture, has engaged Conway Tearle, the well-known leading support of various stars.

Mr. Tearle's screen career includes prominent work with Famous Players, Selznick, Paramount and the World, with important roles instanced in "The Common Law," "The Foolish Virgin," "Heart of the Hills," "The Fall of the Romanoffs," "The Judgment House," "Stella Maris," "Virtuous Wives," etc.

Announce Release Date of Houdini Serial

World Pictures announce that May 1 is the release date for the distribution of the Houdini serial, "The Master Mystery" in the following states: California, Oregon, Washington, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Idaha, Arizona, Montana, Nevada, Minnesota and part of Iowa. Thousands of sheets of paper will be posted exploiting this super feature and in addition, an intensive newspaper campaign is being conducted. The fact that Houdini has appeared in each of these states both as a vaudeville headliner and as a star of his own company gives a local interest to the serial that ought to make it a successful box office attraction.

Wounded Soldiers

Wounded soldiers brought home on the return trip of the U. S. Hospital Ship Mercy, which sailed from Hoboken for Brest, had their pain lightened by seeing William Fox photoplays. The pictures were thrown on the screen stretched across the ceiling of the ship's big hospital ward, so that the men in cots did not even have to raise themselves on their elbows to see the pictures.

Through the courtesy of the Fox Film Corporation, five plays were loaned to Major H. P. Moorehead and Paymaster Walter Wilson, who had charge of the entertainment of the wounded men on their trip home.

Barbara Castleton to Support Warner

When Jesse D. Hampton engaged H. B. Warner, star of "Sleeping Partners" to star in productions released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors' Mutual, he considered a long time before he decided upon a leading woman for his new player.

Finally, he was enabled to obtain Barbara Castleton in New York. The young actress had appeared as a star in a number of Eastern Film productions, but she never had worked in the West. It was with some difficulty she could be persuaded that California was the land for the best film productions, and eventually she affixed her name to a contract with Hampton.

The Independent Field

Jacob Weinberg, Secretary and Treasurer of Exclusive Features

Announces New Series of Twelve Two Reelers

In view of the fact that the past re-issues released by Exclusive Features have been so successful, Joseph M. Goldstein, President, and Jacob Weinberg, Treasurer, of this organization, announce that they expect soon to have ready for market a series of twelve 2-reel animal comedy dramas in which Kathlyn Williams will be starred.

Goldstein and Weinberg are very enthusiastic about these new pictures, are confident they will be the biggest hit ever put out by them and a money maker for the state right buyers.

An extensive advertising campaign on these short features will be conducted, it is said.

Reports Record Bookings for Houdini Serial

Carey Wilson, manager of the Effano Film Exchange, controlling the distributing rights to the Houdini serial, "The Master Mystery" in New York state, reports the signing last week of seven more Houdini contracts for theatres in Syracuse, N. Y.

This makes a total of thirteen theatres running this B. A. Rolfe production in a town of 155,000. Mr. Wilson adds that this total will be swelled by two or possibly three more bookings, which will be secured as soon as dates can be arranged.

Not only in this number of bookings unprecedented in Syracuse, but it is doubtful if there is another town in the country of this population where so many bookings have been secured, it is said.

Releases Shorty-Hamilton

The Elk Photoplays will shortly announce the release of a series of Shorty-Hamilton pictures in New York and New Jersey.

Walthall in Six for Pioneer

M. H. Hoffman Announces That He Has Secured the Star for Series of Special Productions

HENRY B. WALTHALL is to appear in a series of special productions especially chosen for him, dramas that will bring out the best that is in him and a series that promises to be a kind that will make screen history, it is said.

The Pioneer Film Corporation, through its General Manager M. H. Hoffman, has just completed a deal with "Smiling Billy" Parsons, whereby Mr. Walthall will appear in about six special productions to be made and produced by the Pioneer Co.

The signing of Henry B. Walthall for Pioneer Pictures was effected during Mr. Parsons' recent business trip to the East. He controls the services of the noted actor, so it was necessary for the Pioneer Company to make their arrangements with the President of the National Film Corporation. This is not the first time that Mr. Parsons and the Pioneer have gotten together on a deal for it was the latter company that purchased the rights to the National's big feature, starring Walthall, "The Boomerang."

Mr. Hoffman is emphatic in his statement that only the best stories obtainable will be bought for the Walthall series. Already a number of manuscripts have been read but great care is being taken to chose only those that will present Walthall in roles that will keep him on the screen the greater part of the time, give him every opportunity to display his talents and offer him, it is said, in the greatest pictures he has ever done.

The entire production of each picture will be under the supervision of The Pioneer Film Corporation. When Hoffman took over the management of this company, he made the announcement that henceforth, as in the past, the concern would place on the State Rights market only the best in the way of photodramas.

Supporting casts will be selected carefully, types and ability being given more consideration than names. A director who has many noteworthy successes to his credit will handle the details of production.

Within a short time The Pioneer Co. will announce the name and nature of this picture. In the meantime they are fast selling territory on "The Boomerang," it is said.

Gerald Bacon To Produce For Frank Hall

GERALD F. BACON, prominent producer for both stage and screen and conceded to be one of our best authorities on plays and players, has signed with Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, to produce a series of special features for release by Independent Sales through the Film Clearing House. Mr. Bacon will start work on the first of the series within the next two weeks. Mr. Bacon announces that he has practically completed negotiations with the star of one of Broadway's most successful plays of the current season, to portray the featured role in the first of the series of Bacon productions.

For his first screen play, Mr. Bacon has the rights to Max Marcin's "Substitute Prisoner." It will be produced and released under the title "At Sunrise."

For the work of adapting Mr. Marcin's play for screen purposes, Mr. Bacon has Basil Dickey, formerly scenario editor of International Film Corporation. Oliver D. Bailey, director of stage and screen productions will direct the Bacon productions his work to be under the direct supervision of Mr. Bacon. Following release of the first Bacon production, to be completed by the first of June Mr. Hall will have given to the public the second feature, produced under his own corporate guidance and supervision and with this new producing interest, he will have under his direct supervision and guidance seven distinct picture interests, including the Rothapfel Picture Corporation and its product, Rothapfel Unit Programme. The Hall interests now cover the field, comprising every branch of the industry pertaining to the production and distribution of pictures. It is stated that no other concern in the motion picture business can boast of a wider scope, a more thorough development along service lines or a more popular list of releases than those attributed to the interests headed by Frank G. Hall.

Consolidated Film Buys Henry Comedies

Consolidated Film Corporation, with main offices in San Francisco, a branch in Los Angeles and Seattle, have just purchased the new Gale Henry Comedies for their territory in California, and will release same the early part of May. This, in addition to the Bulls Eye Comedies, gives the Consolidated a two reel comedy release each week.

They are now negotiating for additional one and two reel comedies, which will be announced later.

Engages Mollie King

It was announced this week that American Cinema Corporation has arranged with Mollie King's representatives to present Miss King in a series of six pictures, beginning at once.

Miss King is now appearing in "Good Morning, Judge," a musical comedy in New York, and will continue with her role in the production while making the picture.

John Stahl is to direct Miss King. He formerly directed Florence Reed.

Henley Signs With Frank Hall

Is Third Producer Signed by Hall Within Three Weeks. Will Produce Series of Specials

HOBART HENLEY has formed the Hobart Henley Productions, and has been signed by Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, to produce a series of special features for release through the distributing organizations of which Mr. Hall is promoter and chief executive. The signing of Mr. Henley for a series of productions, marks the third producing organization to be brought into being within the past three weeks, by the interest which Frank G. Hall represents, the other two being, the Charles Miller Productions, Inc., and the Gerald Bacon Company.

Hobart Henley will produce and star in four specials for Independent Sales Corp.

It is Mr. Hall's main objective to have associated with him only those producers and directors of motion pictures who have demonstrated by their work in production field that they are capable of giving to the screen the best in photodramatic plays. In signing Mr. Henley, Mr. Hall has taken into consideration his work with some of the leading stars of the screen, including Pauline Frederick and Mae Marsh whom Mr. Henley directed in some of their biggest successes. With Mae Marsh starred, Mr. Henley directed "The Glorious Adventure," "All Women," "Money Mad" and "The Face in the Dark." With Pauline Frederick, he directed "One Week of Life." "The Peace of Roaring River" and more recently, "The Woman on the Index," conceded by the press and the trade to be the best work of the Goldwyn star. Mr. Henley is the director who has given the task of first presenting Will Rogers in pictures and his "Laughing Bill Hyde," an adaptation from Rex Beach's work, reflected his ability in directorial lines. He directed Frank McIntyre in Goldwyn's production of "Too Fat to Fight," another Rex Beach story pronounced a masterpiece in the art of direction.

Mr. Henley is probably better known to the motion picture public because of his creation of the "Parentage" one of the most successful independent attractions of the past three years.

The first production to be made by the Hobart Henley Productions will be commenced in about three weeks. Mr. Henley will have offices at 130 West 46th street and will probably use the Bacon-Backer studio.

Pioneer Purchases "Sins Of The Children"

IT is now definitely announced that "Sins of the Children," Harry Rapf's production of Cosmo Hamilton's successful novel, has been purchased by the Pioneer Film Corporation.

This is said to be the biggest production Rapf has ever undertaken and has as its stars, Alma Hanlon and Stuart Holmes. Its advent on the screen will be of wide interest to the public for the novel from which it was adapted has been one of the year's best sellers.

This is the second big deal put through by Pioneer within the past two weeks and is in line with the plans of Pioneer to make their concern the biggest sole State Rights organization in the country.

The purchase of "Sins of the Children" coming so soon after the purchase of the World's rights to "The Boomerang" was a topic that brought forth much comment along Broadway and from the Exchangemen who attended the First National pow wow in New York.

In anticipation of the big increase in business which will result from the contract just made with the First National Film Corporation of America for six productions starring Henry B. Walthall, the Pioneer home office is now in the process of being greatly enlarged. Mr. M. H. Hoffman, Pioneer's General Manager, contemplates adding to his working force.

In addition to the National contract, there are several deals of the first importance now under way, which, when they become operative, will be a long step toward making the Pioneer company a bigger and more powerful factor in the industry than it is today.

Arrow Film Removes to Candler Building

The Arrow Film Corporation has removed its general offices from the Times Building to the Candler Building, 220 West 42nd street. The new offices are but a short block from the old ones, and but a block from Broadway. The increased activity in the state right business and the steadily increasing business of the Arrow's has made this move necessary.

A feature of the new offices is the projection room, which is included in the large suite that W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, and his staff has secured. There is much more office space in the new suite than the Arrow occupied in the Times Building, and because of the accessibility of the new location it is expected that the Arrow offices will be popular with out-of-town buyers who visit New York.

The staff of the Arrow Film Corporation has been materially augmented recently by the addition of several members.

Kohn Claims Record for Educational Bookings

Marion H. Kohn, of the Consolidated Film Corporation, of San Francisco, has established a record for the booking of short subjects that will be hard to duplicate. In a letter to Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, he outlines his success in placing the "Educational" releases in the representative theatres on the Pacific Coast.

In downtown San Francisco, Mr. Kohn has booked five full-week first-run showings out of the seven high-class theatres of the district.

In Los Angeles, practically the same condition exists. In Seattle, the Coliseum and the Clemmer Theatres show the "Educational" subjects. Besides these larger cities, the Consolidated organization is placing the single-reels regularly in Berkeley, Oakland, Sacramento, Stockton, Vallejo and other California cities.

Security Pictures Sell in West and South

The series of six Security Pictures which Nathan Hirsh of the Aywon Film Corporation has placed on the States Rights market are fast being contracted for.

The Pennsylvania Film Service of Pittsburg, has bought the rights for Pennsylvania and West Virginia. Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Wisconsin, Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa have been sold to Phil Goldstone of the Sterling Film Company of Omaha, Neb., while Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina and Tennessee, were contracted for by the Savini Film Company of Atlanta Georgia.

The Southwestern Film Corporation purchased the Oklahoma Texas and Arkansas rights.

Says Loew Theatres Like Billie West

The popular success of Billy West comedies in the Loew Circuit in New York City will, according to Bulls Eye Film Corporation, be fully maintained in the newest of these comedies to be announced, "Her First False Hare," and "Coppers and Scents."

Work on the former has been practically completed, and sets have been finished for the commencement of work on the latter production, in the Hollywood studios of Bulls Eye, where Nat H. Spitzer is studio manager.

Gale Henry Comedies in Loew Theatres

The showing of Gale Henry's latest Bulls Eye release, "Her Honor, The Scrub Lady," at Loew's New York Theatre and Roof, on Tuesday, April 22, met with instant success, it is said.

The elongated Miss Henry is declared to have kept her audiences in constant laughter by her antics, and exceeded her best previous efforts by all odds.

Tyrad Advertises Feature on Big Scale

"Your Wife and Mine," Tyrad Pictures' state right feature, has one of the most complete lines of advertising accessories ever put out for a state right production, according to Matthias Radin, president of Tyrad Pictures, Inc.

"In lithographs," said Mr. Radin, "we have one 24-sheet, two kinds of 6-sheet, three kinds of 3-sheet, and four kinds of 1-sheet. The posters were designed by two of the best known artists in that line and are in four colors. We have also a window card with a punch in it. For lobby display we have a set of twenty 8 x 10 gelatines depicting the big moments in the picture. Then we have a set of twenty 6 x 8 squeeges for newspaper use, a complete press sheet showing sample ads and stories for newspaper use, and an assortment of cuts ranging from thumbnail size to three column size. We have gotten up an attractive banner, one 3 x 10 in size in four colors. Then we have a number of give-away novelties calculated to attract the public to the theatre.

Sells More Territory for Beban Feature

Seven additional districts were disposed of to state rights concerns by Hiram Abrams during the past week, for George Beban's production, "Hearts of Men," the first he has made under his own direction.

The rights disposed of during this week were: Arthur S. Hyman, for Michigan; Tom Moore, for Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia and Virginia; Roland and Clark, for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. Other territory that has been disposed of by Mr. Abrams comprises Boston Photoplay Company, for Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island and Connecticut; New Jersey Rolfe Film Company, for New Jersey; Frank Beverstock, for Ohio and Kentucky; The Greater Stars Productions, Inc., for Illinois and Indiana; the Pioneer Film Corporation, M. H. Hoffman, for New York; The Middle West Distributing Company, for Wisconsin; the All Star Features, Sol Lesser, for California, Arizona and Nevada.

Tourneur Brings Two to Screen

It became known this week through an announcement that two Maurice Tourneur productions, "My Lady's Garter" and "The White Heather," will be ready for the screen about the same time, which is given as within the near future. The pictures are said to be very unlike.

In the cast of "My Lady's Garter" are Sylvia Breamer, H. E. Herbert, Wyndham Standing and Paul Clerget. The production was made in the East before Director Tourneur departed for California with his staff.

"My Lady's Garter" was written by Jacques Futrelle, who lost his life in the Titanic disaster.

Reports Big Advance on Jester Comedies

It is announced by Territorial Sales Corporation that two big contracts on Jester Comedies were consummated last week. Before the sale of franchises on this series of eighteen selected two-reel comedies was opened, applications for considerable territory were received, and the offers for Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia were so attractive that these sections were disposed of at a high figure, it is said.

The Standard Film Service, of Cleveland, has obtained the rights to the eighteen Jester comedies for Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky.

Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia were purchased by the Standard Film Exchange of Pittsburgh.

Harry Charnas, of the Standard Film Service, recently saw three Jesters, "In the Wild West," "Peace and Riot" and "The Tenderfoot." He made a deal which gives him control of the entire Jester output.

Albert A. Weiland, of the Standard Film Exchange, after seeing one Jester comedy, "Peace and Riot," declared this offering was one of the most ludicrous he had ever seen.

Reports state that the demand for Jester funmakers has surprised even the confident Territorial Sales officials. Before the corporation began its advertising campaign on behalf of the films, there was a considerable number of applicants for franchises in the Territorial Sales Corporation. Following the publication of the initial advertisement, however, a virtual avalanche of inquiries were received, it is declared, at the Territorial Sales headquarters in 1600 Broadway.

Six of the series of eighteen Jesters are now ready for distribution. These are, "The Tenderfoot," "In the Wild West," "Peace and Riot," "A Mexican-Mix-Up," "The Wisest Fool" and "Gee Whiz." Every one of these comedies is up to the standard of those, it is said, which Marcus Loew and other prominent showmen found suitable for exhibition in the best houses on their circuits.

Weeks Predicts a New Form of Production

C. A. WEEKS, treasurer of Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., and of Great Authors Pictures, Inc., returned to New York last week from a visit to Los Angeles, where he conferred with Benjamin B. Hampton, president of the two companies, and personal supervisor of producing activities. While on the Coast Mr. Weeks viewed "Desert Gold," the first of the Zane Grey features, and "The Westerners," Stewart Edward White's great story, which has been selected to inaugurate the Great Authors productions. Both are to be distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"In these works," Mr. Week's says, "Mr. Hampton has brought to fruition a plan he has entertained ever since he first became associated with the motion picture industry; and that is to present the stories of popular authors in pictures with all of the elements that give them their appeal in book form. There are to be 'starless' pictures, insofar as featuring any particular individual is concerned, but the entire cast of each will be made up of players who enjoy star honors and popularity. Real stories, interpreted by real players and presented in real productions about sum up our policy."

Both Mr. Grey and Mr. White, personally, have been in constant and intimate association with every detail of the making of their books. They were "on the job" from the very beginning of the preparation of the continuity, thus assuring that the spirit of their stories was retained in full and as they have conceived it. They have been with the companies during the producing of the pictures, in the studio, and on locations. After personally selecting the locations they personally wrote all of the titles and they have supervised the cutting of the pictures. The result is a faithful and accurate translation of their original stories to the screen.

Zion Films to Make New Jewish Production

In line with the policy of the Zion Films, Inc., to produce only the biggest and best novels and dramas of Jewish historical life that lend themselves dramatically to motion pictures comes the announcement that the company plans to do a story from the pen of David Pinski, one of the most renowned Yiddish writers in America. Work on this feature will commence about May 10.

A name for the picture, it is said, has been selected. The story is called "The Rebirth of a People," and is described as a history-cycle of the Jewish race, depicting the important events in the life of the people from the days of Moses to the present day.

As worked out by Mr. Pinski, the scenario is said to be by far the most elaborate ever attempted for the screen. There is no deviation from history in the story. In fact, some of the sources for the tale were obtained only after a careful persual of the Talmud. And backing these historical documents there is interwoven a plot that will keep the interest until the very end.

"The Rebirth of a People" will require a large cast of principals and extras to the number of more than 5,000, it is declared. From present indications it appears that the majority of the scenes will be taken in Palestine, where a greater part of the story is laid it is stated. Plans are now being completed for a trip to Jerusalem, it is said.

A prominent part in the picture will be taken by the Red Mogen David, the Palestinian Red Cross, and the members of the British Expeditionary Forces under General Allenby in the "Promised Land," it is stated.

A private showing of "Khavah," the initial Sholom Aleichem story produced by Zion Films, was arranged for this week.

William Fox Widely Interviewed In Europe

SINCE his arrival in Europe, whither he went to extend the distributing and producing activities of the Fox Film Corporation, William Fox has been besieged by interviewers. Copies of The Daily Mirror of London which have just arrived in this country contain a column article under Mr. Fox's name, in which the American producer makes a sharp attack on commercialism in the production of pictures.

The article as printed in The Daily Mirror was very lengthy and comprehensive. The high spots were as follows:

" What a tragedy it would be if the great writers, artists and sculptors of the world lived their lives as a commercial proposition! The beauties of the world would never come to light. Happily there is no danger of such a disaster, for the master impulse to create, regardless of all considerations, must always dominate the true artist.

" That, in my view, is true of the film. There is a mistaken idea, I find, existing throughout the world that the creation of motion pictures is a ready means of achieving great wealth. That is not my experience. The reason is probably that I do not regard it as a business, but an art. I feel that it is impossible to bring the making of motion pictures down to the standard of commercialism.

" Only those who actually love art should have anything to do with the making of moton pictures; and I hope that, now the war is over, there will arise in England many men and women prepared to devote their wealth to advancing this art regardless of profits. Those who seek profits can find them more readily elsewhere

" England, as a consequence of her heroic struggle in the cause of liberty and civilization, is sadly behind in this modern art of the cinema as compared with the states."

" The Hushed Hour " Opens in Detroit

Harry Garson announces that he will open at the Broadway-Strand Theatre in Detroit with " The Hushed Hour," starring Blanche Sweet, on May 18. This is the same theatre which housed the national premiere of " The Unpardonable Sin."

Mr. Garson has not decided as to whether he will state right this feature, or sell the negative outright.

" The Hushed Hour " boasts of the following cast in support of Blanche Sweet: Wilfred Lucas, Milton Sills, Mary Anderson, Rosemary Theby, Harry Northrup, Gloria Hope, Wyndham Standing, Ben Alexander, Winter Hall, Lydia Knott, and Edward M. Kimball, L. T. Steers.

Sidney Golden Directs Gold Coin Features

The Nelson Producing Company, of Detroit, Mich., announces that it is making arrangements to release a series of pictures which have been directed by Sidney Golden, the first release being the " Mysterious Mr. Brown." This picture is said to be a portrayal of the underworld and the society world of the present day.

Sidney Golden will be remembered as one of the directors of the Universal staff, having produced a number of pictures for that company some years ago. He is one of the early pioneers in the picture industry, having specialized in the making of underworld pictures. Mr. Golden is a product of New York's lower East Side and counts his early experiences and observations gathered in later years, of this locality a great help in the producing of underworld pictures. He is now director-general of the Gold Coin Film Company whose first production " The Links of Destiny " will soon be ready for release.

Pioneer Sells "Boomerang"

The Pioneer Film Corporation announces the sale of the Iowa and Nebraska territory on " The Boomerang " to S. Aronowitz of Des Moines, Iowa. Mr. Aronowitz has been in New York during the past few days and saw " The Boomerang " screened at the Pioneer projection room.

EXPERTS TO THE FILM INDUSTRY

BUSINESS SUICIDE

A manufacturer who sacrifices the quality of his goods to further his financial interests, commits business suicide. This applies particularly to the motion picture industry.

Your picture may be wonderful—produced by the ablest director—photographed by an expert cameraman—BUT—it is not perfect and will not bring in the best rentals unless the laboratory work maintains the same high standards.

We, as a laboratory, recognize this and to prove it, we are willing to make you a sample print free of charge, provided it does not excel and meet your highest expectations.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Fox Studio Doings

Edmund Lawrence, who for nearly a year has been producing at the eastern studios of the William Fox Corporation, has arrived in Los Angeles to take over the direction of one of the Fox stars at their western plant. Who will be featured in his first production, or what the nature of it will be, has not yet been decided. Pursuant to the new policy adopted by the company, however, it is expected that he will alternate with some one of the other producers.

Under the direction of E. J. Le Saint, Gladys Brockwell has just completed a five-reel production entitled "Gypsy." After a two days' rest she began work in the production of a screen version of the novel, "Sadie," under the direction of Frank Beal.

Madlaine Travers has just finished her work in a detective story produced under the working title of "The High Flame," by Harry Millards. The supporting cast includes William Travers, Clyde Fillmore, Claire Du Brey, John Cossar, Genevieve Blinn, Cornelia Callahan and Henry J. Hebert. Frank Good was the cameraman.

Scotty Dunlop has completed his first Fox production, "Words and Music by—," in which Albert Ray and Elinor Fair are starred. Edwin Booth Tilton, George Hernandez and Eugene Paulette comprised the supporting cast. Roy Klaffki did the camera work.

Universal Newsettes

Under the direction of J. P. McGowan, the Marie Walcamp company has completed their latest serial production, "The Red Glove." After a few days' rest McGowan will start work on the production of another Eddie Polo serial. Helen Holmes, who will be remembered for her work in a number of railroad serials, has been engaged by the Universal to play an important part in the new serial.

James O'Shea, who played in "The Rummy" and "Jim Bludso" for Fine Arts before entering the army, has returned to the Universal studio, where he is supporting Neal Burns and Josephine Hill in comedies produced under the direction of Al Santell.

Waldemar Young, of the Universal scenario staff, is at work on the preparation of the film version of "The Spitfire of Seville," by J. F. Boland, which is to be used as Priscilla Dean's next screen vehicle.

Production on the James J. Corbett serial, "The Midnight Man," has been temporarily held up owing to the illness of Director James W. Horne. Work will be resumed as soon as Horne has returned from the hospital where he was ordered for a minor operation.

Mary MacLaren, in the Universal Special, "The Unpainted Woman"

William Pigott, head of the continuity department at the Universal Plant, has completed a two-reel western melodrama with George Holt to produce with Pete Morrison in the stellar role.

George Hively of the Universal scenario staff is at work on the preparation of the working script for the screen version of Jackson Gregory's story, "A Man of Peace," which Jack Ford is to produce with Harry Carey in the title-role.

Vitagraph News Bits

The William Duncan Company has completed the last episode of the Vitagraph serial, "The Man of Might." The company will rest for a week and then start the production of another serial of similar length written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. The title and nature of this production have not yet been announced.

Earle Williams, under the direction of James Young, has started work on the production of "The Hornet's Nest," a film adaptation of the story of that name by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow. Vola Vale appears in the leading feminine role opposite Williams in this picture with a supporting cast including Brinsley Shaw, Ogden Crane, Kathleen Kirkham and Edward McWade.

Under the direction of R. N. Bradbury and W. J. Bauman, the Antonio Moreno Company has reached the eighth episode of their forthcoming serial, "Perils of Thunder Mountain." Carol Halloway appears in the leading feminine role.

The Bessie Love company, which under the direction of David Smith, has been in the lumber country in the mountains back of Fresno, Cal., making exterior scenes in the production of their latest film, "The Little Boss," has returned to the Los Angeles studio, where they are at work making the remaining interior scenes for the production.

About Metro Players

Viola Dana, under the direction of Henry Otto, this week began the production of "Pliant Patricia," a five-reel comedy farce, adapted by June Mathis from the original play by Anne and Alice Duffy of San Francisco. The company has been on Santa Catalina Island making exteriors for the past several days. Irving Cummings appears in support of Miss Dana in this production.

The entire indoor studio at the Metro plant was this week occupied by a set designed from photographs of a New York place of amusement, for making scenes of "The Midnight Revue," which are to be used in the latest May Allison production, "His Father's Wife," now being staged under the direction of Charles Swickard.

Under the direction of John Ince, Bert Lytell is busy on the production of "One-Thing-at-a-Time O'Day," a screen version of the William Dudley Pelley circus story of that name which apeared in the Saturday Evening Post some months ago. Eileen Percy appears in the role of Prairie Flower Marie. Fred Warren and Webster Cullison, both old-tie men of the "big top," have been detailed to the Lytell company to insure the correctness of the circus detail. Joseph Kilgour, William F. Carrol, Stanton Beck and Bull Montana complete the cast.

Betty Peterson, who came to Los Angeles last fall with Maude Fealy in "The Little Teacher," has been engaged by the Metro company to play the ingenue role in support of Emmy Wehlen in "Family Trees." The production is being staged under the direction of Herbert Blache.

Here and There

Fatty Arbuckle is rapidly nearing the completion of his latest two-reel Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "A Desert Hero." The production is being made in the hills near Glendale, Cal., where one of the biggest sets ever used in the making of a western picture has been erected to serve as saloon and dance hall. "A Desert Hero" is a travesty on the exaggerated type of wild and woolly western productions. The cast of principals includes Al St. John as bad man, Mollie Malone as the persecuted heroine, with Arbuckle in the role of invincible hero.

Word has been received at the Arbuckle studios announcing the speedy return of Buster Keaton to the company. Keaton, who left the Coast to go overseas with the Yanks, has returned to New York, where he will remain until he is mustered out, following which he will return to the Coast to take up his work with Arbuckle.

The Francis Ford company is at work on the third installment of their new serial, "The Mystery of the 13."

Wallace MacDonald, who has been working in the sequoia forests back of Fresno, Cal., with the Bessie Love company, this week returned to the Los Angeles studios with a case of redwood poisoning so severe that he was unable to appear before the camera for two days.

The Art-O-Graf Film Company of Denver, Colo., is making preparations for the production of another six-reel feature, entitled "Wolves of Wall Street," a melodramatic tale of the struggle between a gang of Bolshevist financial wolves of Wall street and a 100 per cent American. "Me Smith," a story by Caroline Lockhart, is scheduled to follow "Wolves of Wall Street." The Art-O-Graf's first production, "Miss Arizona," is being handled as a states rights proposition by the Arrow Film Corporation of New York.

Brunton Notes

After several weeks spent on the desert near Palm Springs, Cal., where they went to make exterior scenes in the production of Zane Grey's novel, "Desert Gold," the Zane Grey company has returned to their Los Angeles studio and made the final scenes for the production. The picture was made under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter with a cast including E. K. Lincoln, Edward Coxen, Eileen Percy, Margery Wilson, Walter Long, Russell Simpson and W. Lawson Butt. It is being cut and titled here, following which it will go east for release.

Mary Pickford is still at work on the production of a film version of Julia Lippman's story, "Burke's Amy," the title of which has been changed to "The Hoodlum" for picture purposes. A 200-foot tenement set was this week completed at the studio for use in this production. The picture is being made under the direction of S. A. Franklin with Kenneth Harlan in the leading male role opposite Miss Pickford.

Jack Pickford is at work on a new story which was written and is being produced by Jack Dillon with Gloria Hope in the leading feminine role. No title has thus far been given the production.

Under the direction of William Worthington, the Hayakawa company is making a Hindu production the working title of which is "Only a Nigger."

Jack Cunningham, scenario writer for the Frank Keenan company at the Brunton studios, this week left Los Angeles with his wife for a three weeks' tour of the northern part of the state. The trip is being made to allow Mr. Cunningham to recover from a nervous breakdown, the result of returning to work too soon after a double attack of the influenza.

Orral Humphrey, who recently completed his work in the Universal's James J. Corbett serial, "The Midnight Man," is retiring permanently from the screen to live on his ranch in Happy Valley, near San Francisco. Before entering the picture field, Humphrey was a Broadway actor and later a Morosco leading man in Oakland.

A book entitled "Pinto Ben and Other Stories," by William S. Hart and his sister Mary, this week made its appearance on the newsstands. The book contains a narrative, written in verse by Hart, telling the dramatic story of the death of his cow pony, Pinto Ben. A prose story, "The Savage," also by Hart, and "The Last of His Blood," by Mary Hart, complete the book's contents. All of it is good reading, but film fans will probably be especially interested in the foreword, which treats of the actor's early life among the Indians of Dakota, where he was raised. The book was published by the Britton Publishing Company of New York and retails at one dollar.

Darrel Foss has returned to the Metro studios from an extended fishing trip. He has been gone since the completion of "The Brat."

E. L. BRAGDON............................Technical Editor

Safety First

ONE of the principal subjects discussed at the recent meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was that of Fire Protection.

It was stated that the two chief places where fires were apt to occur in professional work were—

1. The Theatre
2. The Exchange

Theatre fires are 90% absolute carelessness and are due to criminal neglect—cigarettes, unprotected radiators, unprotected electric light bulbs, improperly regulated machines or those which have been tampered with, electric regulating devices improperly housed and other causes which should never be allowed to exist, if the laws on the statute books or even common sense were followed.

Exchange fires are also due to carelessness for here we find mainly incompetents in charge of joining and inspecting rooms who are not as used to handling films as are the projectionists. The danger here is more real than in any other branch of the industry, due to this handling and lack of knowledge combined with the great quantity of material continually on hand.

The letter quoted below brings out both dangers, for it shows an example of the actual carelessness which may occur in the projection room, and also shows the danger which may result from film in bad condition which is so often sent out from the exchange to the theatre.

Gentlemen:

Being an operator and interested in the " Projection Department," I can't help sending in some of my views on the troubles of a small theatre projectionist.

In the first place I think it is the condition of the films sent out by the exchanges to the small exhibitors that makes life a nightmare to the small theatre projectionist.

When I first started out as an assistant in a projection room, I worked with one of those men who do not care into what shape the operating room gets. This particular room was a fright. There were clippings from film, pieces of trailers, paper, rags, tools, slides, dirt and cigarette stubs all over the floor. One day I was helping inspect the films (each reel had to have about a half hour's work on it) with this brainless operator, when I was suddenly treated to the liveliest fire fight I have ever seen. This operator had an electric light bulb in a cigar box under a glass, over which he inspected the films. The bulb naturally got hot and the heat set some film clippings afire. He pulled out the bulb, bringing the burning film out on the floor and into the rest of the film cuttings and other inflammable material. From then on there was something doing! With our eyes full of smoke and so weakened from the fumes we could hardly stand up, we finally were able to stamp the fire out.

Soon after this I was given charge of the projection room, and from past experience I soon had that room looking ship-shape.

Speaking of the films the exchanges send out to the small exhibitors, I think I have received my share in ruined stuff. Some times there would be no advertising, or perhaps advertising with a different picture, or even advertising belonging to a picture that I had shown three weeks before.

And at other times you wouldn't get your films until a half hour before opening time. Then you would have to look through them or trust to luck that they would go through all right.

I have run many a film that was ready for the junk pile long before Charlie Chaplin first got his funny feet into the lime light.

On some of the films I have had to hold the framing lever all through the reel, and every once in a while there would be a cracking sound and the film would break and run up into the shutter, knocking it out of time. Then while the perspiration ran off my face, meanwhile losing all respect for religion, the audience would censure me with the wrong kind of applause that nearly raised the roof

So here's hoping the exchanges take pity on the small exhibitors, or what is more satisfactory to me, that I graduate to those exhibitors that do get the service.

Yours sincerely,
L. F. C.,
Kansas.

The distribution of film which is ready for the junk pile before it is sent out is criminal. It should either be doctored and new lengths spliced in so that it is worth showing, or it should never go out.

The house which is willing to rent this class of film should be forced out of the business. If enough rental can not be paid to get film which is in passable shape, then the authorities should close the house, as it is impossible that the audience is sufficiently protected to allow it to remain open.

The small town men, as well as those in the cities, should get film in good physical shape. The projection room should be absolutely neat and in good condition. It should be remembered that in return for public patronage public safety should be guaranteed.

E. K. GILLETT.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

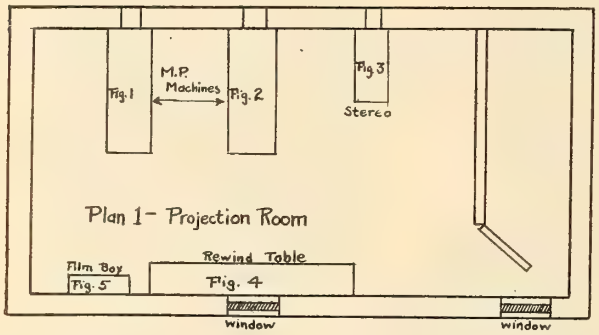
Design, Location and Equipment of the Modern Projection Room

By D. C. Burkholder

Awarded Second Prize, Class 1

PLAN No. 1 shows a large and roomy operating room equipped with two picture machines and one stereo. Ample room must be allowed so that the projectionist may walk around all sides of his machines. The exit should be on the crank side of machines and on same level as booth floor. Figures No. 1 and No. 2 are motion picture machines; fig. No. 3 the stereopticon; fig. 4 the rewind, and fig. 5 the film box.

The booth should be free of all unnecessary apparatus, strictly fireproof, well ventilated and of ample size. The environment of the operator has a great deal to do with the quality of the show. At the present time many places are getting along with a "rathole" for a booth and for some reason or other the inspectors allow it. If it were possible the government should set a standard for booths and their apparatus. With the arrangement standardized it would make it much simpler for projectionists when they change from one location to another.



The vent flue should be right above the head of the machine and as close to it as possible, so that in case of fire the draft would carry the fumes out. The walls and floor should be cement (preferably), with rubber mats for the projectionists to stand on to avoid any electrical shocks if the floor happened to become wet. Asbestos and sheet iron are also used, but they are not the best, for they wear through in time. Cement floors are more solid, hence less vibration of machines.

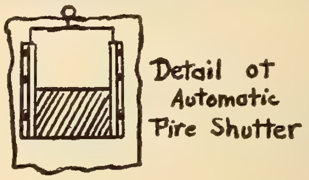
All generators or converting apparatus and machinery should be in another room and rheostats should be placed off the floor. All wires should be run in conduit up as far as machine leads.

Green paint is most pleasing for walls, but any dark color will do. The idea is to eliminate all reflection.

A fireproof box to contain film reels should be made with spring hinges as in fig. 5, and placed close to rewind.



All openings should be equipped with automatic fire shutters made of heavy sheet iron to prevent escape of fumes into the theatre proper. A rough sketch, Plan 2, shows how these openings can be closed automatically by joining all drops to one main line which is held together by some combustible material such as film stock. The main line should be over heads of machines.

Most theatres have their operating booth in front of house, but the regulations of some cities require the booth in the rear. Where booth is in the front the lobby can be arranged underneath it or if the booth is on the main floor a grand display of machines may be made by enclosing the rear of the booth in plate glass.

Avoid all wooden benches; hang tools on walls; have suitable boxes for carbons and extra machine parts.

Above all things, don't be afraid to spend money on and in the booth when it is being constructed. The very best equipment will be the cheapest in the end.

Motion Picture News:

Why haven't some of the motion picture machine companies adapted the band gears for their machine? Think of the big saving in material, also cost to consumer. For example, take the four largest gears on a Powers 6, 6A or 6B—namely, the crank shaft drive gear, the large idler gear, large feed sprocket gear, driving gear for idler. We will say that the four cost $8.00. If they were band gears, in renewing them all that would be needed would be the bands, and they could be made sixty per cent cheaper, if one cent. The result would be, that the manager would come through for a new set of bands or gears before they became friction wheels.

Now, that we have revolving spindles in the upper magazine, the damage to film caused by jerking is greatly reduced, but if we had sprockets with 32 teeth instead of 16, we would reduce the damage to almost nothing, for example, with the upper sprocket the present sprocket is not a big enough cylinder and the film only laps five teeth; with the other it will lap 11 teeth, with the take up it will lap 15 teeth, against 7 on the present sprocket, also it will make it almost impossible to loose your loop. It will also relieve the cracking noise of the film caused by the pull of the take up. Although the take up be set to just barely take up two reels, there is a great deal of damage done to sprocket holes, this would all be done away with.

Try it out for yourself and make sure, then give us a report.

Respectfully,
(Signed) J. R. CHENEY,
Casino Theatre, San Diego, Cal.
N. M. L. 92.

P. S.—I do not mean to change the intermittent sprocket. Just the upper and lower.

"You are certainly entitled to credit for your ingenious device, especially in view of the fact that your reel offsets the pull on the film which is common to the ordinary type. This feature, coupled together with the elimination of trouble which every operator must go through with the ordinary take-up, and also the reduction of fire risk by preventing the film from pulling apart, gives your reel a great many good points."

WALTER G. PREDDY,
San Francisco, Cal.

"I have used the reel several days and it meets every requirement at the take-up. I O. K. the reel and believe it to be a valuable asset to high-class equipment."

CLAUDE E. LINSTRUTH,
Carthage, N. Y.

Does away with the necessity for a take-up friction in the projector itself

The take-up friction of the projector is set tight so that it cannot slip at all and the tension on the film is entirely taken care of automatically by the reel.

It requires no attention whatever on the part of the operator.

The tension is ample yet at no time can there possibly be any excessive pull on the film.

It has no springs or weights or complicated mechanism and can be used on any machine using the standard reels, without making any change whatever.

It has been tested out under all kinds of conditions for more than eighteen months.

It will save the operator all his present worries from variation in take-up tension, losing the lower loop, etc., and will save the moving picture industry many thousands of dollars annually through the elimination of the various kinds of damage done to the films through excessive tension.

eral of the principal machine makers and their replies were substantially the same.

In the first place, strange as it may seem, the matter of cost is not the vital one in the manufacture of projection machines. When quality is compared with cost there is probably not a device being made in this country for which so much high class, carefully inspected workmanship can be purchased for, relatively, so little money as in the case of these machines. The argument of cost, then, is not one that would be the cause of a manufacturer changing the fundamentals of his machine.

By band gears, Mr. Cheney probably refers to friction drive by means of flexible bands. If this was his idea it can hardly be called practical since in a motion picture machine the movement of the varous parts are exactly synchronized. A slippage of only a fraction of an inch would throw the entire apparatus out of adjustment. The main driving members of a projection machine must be positive in their actions above all else, and it is in this respect that the "band gear" theory fails.

As for the matter of replacement cost, supposing an exhibitor did find it necessary to renew the four gears mentioned in Mr. Cheney's letter, at least once a year. Would, say, $8.00 be an exorbitant price to pay for a machine that had been coining money for the owner or twelve hours a day for three hundred days?

Now coming to the second part of the letter in which reference is made to the wear on perforations, we believe it is generally conceded that the greatest percentage of damage is caused by imperfect adjustment of the various units over which and through which the film runs on its travel from the upper to the lower magazine. Under present conditions of operation with careless adjustments and even more careless inspection, sprocket holes last about as long as the film itself. Perhaps later when film stock is produced that does not grow brittle, crack and tear after varying lengths of service it will be worth while for machine manufacturers to scrap their valuable dies, jigs and working drawings, and alter the whole construction of their product to comply with changed conditions.

We are not arguing that the damage done to sprocket holes can be calmly ignored for we all know better. But what is to be gained by marking larger sprockets to save sprocket holes if the film stock itself disintegrates due to oil and temperature variations?

The coming decade will see a great change in the quality of film stock. Research engineers are constantly experimenting with the end in view of perfecting a film that will withstand the vicissitudes which every film placed on the market must meet.

Machine manufacturers as well are not far behind in their improvements. It will be found that as operating conditions improve, projection machines will be devised to carry out their super-important functions to a still higher degree of perfection.

Can't Locate Grinding Sound

FROM Dubuque, Iowa, comes this trouble:

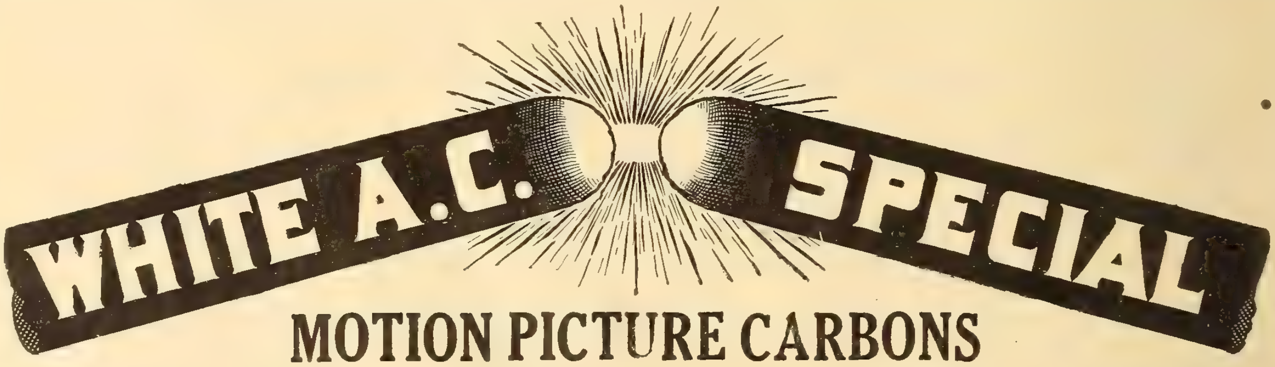
I am having a little trouble with one of my Simplex machines. My projection is not troubled, but the machine does not sound just right.

The trouble seems to be in the drive gear of the shutter shaft and the intermittent movement. If I take out my intermittent the grinding noise disappears. I have a new intermittent movement which I carry as a "spare," and when I put that in in place of the regular movement the noise is there just the same.

Now, I can remove the grinding by putting a small washer on the set screw, but it makes the machine pull too heavily. The machine on which the trouble occurs is a 1912 model, and has just come back from the factory.

Reply: It is very probable that the grinding noise in your machine head was put there some time after the head left the factory after being repaired and placed in shape. The inspection at the Simplex works is so thorough that I do not believe a noise of the kind you describe would ever get by their inspection department. Rough handling in transit, or even while unpacking might spring a shaft sufficient to cause a pair of gears to mesh too closely and produce a grinding sound.

Even though you can remedy the trouble by using washers, it is poor practise to do so as the machine you have operates best just as it comes from its makers, and we would suggest, therefore, that you return the head again and have the gears looked over carefully.



MOTION PICTURE CARBONS

For Alternating Current Projection

Alternating current is no longer a bug-bear to projectionists. White A. C. Special Carbons used in place of the old style carbons enable the wide awake projectionist to practically duplicate the results obtained with the direct current arc.

The alternating current arc using these carbons gives a strong white light—the kind that makes the picture on the screen seem real. No noise due to a roaring arc and no flicker on the screen.

White A. C. Special Carbons make alternating projection a pleasure rather than a task.

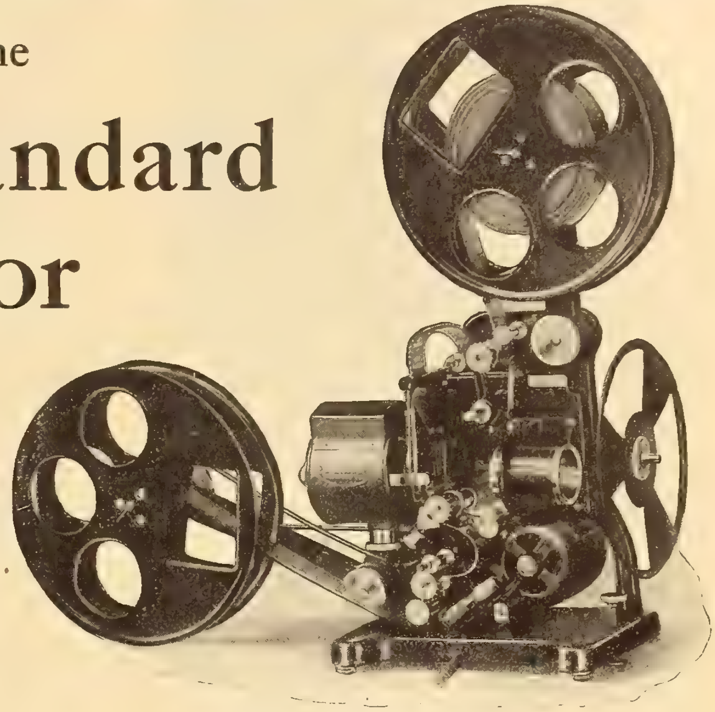
Announcing the

Peerless Standard Projector

Ideal for Editing and Examining Film in Theatres, Studios and Laboratories



With Plain Reel Arms

The PEERLESS STANDARD PROJECTOR has the wonderful 5 to 1 eccentric star intermittant movement and a balanced shutter of three equal 45 degree blades that passes 62½% of the light from the objective and gives an absolutely flickerless picture at less than normal speed.

Particularly adapted to film inspection and editing, as it can be operated at any speed or stopped for cutting and patching.

Using a 28 WATT lamp, even negative can be safely projected, thus saving time and expense of unnecessary print.

Takes one-thousand feet standard reels, operates from any light socket. Uses 2¾ amperes with motor drive, or less with crank. Projects pictures up to 10 feet wide at any distance up to 75 feet.

With plain reel arms folded and current wiring attached, outside dimensions are 13 inches long, 8 inches wide and 13 inches high. Weight with motor 23 pounds.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT

Our activities for the past year have been nearly 100 per cent. devoted to war production of vital importance to the government, compelling us to discontinue regular manufacture in practically all of our lines.

The cessation of hostilities has now enabled us to begin the readjustment to a peace production basis. While this adjustment must be gradual, we are pressing it with all possible speed in order to satisfy the requirements of our normal trade at an early date.

We appreciate the patience and understanding with which our patrons have reacted to the situation and trust they may continue to exercise such consideration until our manufacturing facilities are once more on a pre-war footing.

Motion Pictures in Cabarets

BERNAYS JOHNSON of the Projection Department of the Westinghouse Lamp Works, who is in Chicago demonstrating the new Simplex Incandescent Lamphouse with the new Westinghouse 900-watt motion picture lamp, has started something new for cabarets. At the Terrace Gardens of the Morrison Hotel, where one of the most pretentious ice skating exhibitions in this country is staged, he has installed a Simplex machine using the new lamp.

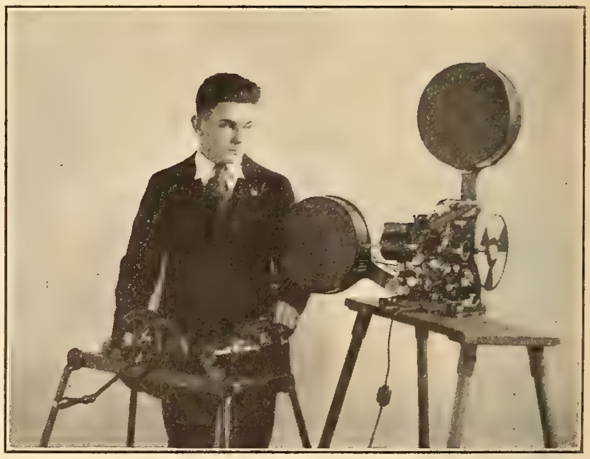
The machine is placed in a dressing room, behind the scenes, and projects the picture upon a silk curtain.

On account of the limited space available for the machine and the fire hazard, the authorities of the city of Chicago were much opposed to its use. Under no circumstances would they permit an arc installation. This opposition was overcome with the use of the incandescent lamp equipment. How much the fire hazard is reduced is shown by the fact that the arc lamp ignites a film in approximately two seconds, while it takes 10 seconds for the incandescent lamps to ignite the same film. The white light projected by the Simplex equipment using the plano-convex condenser system makes it possible to successfully show color films and consequently they are now a regular part of the program.

For the opening, a colored scenic is shown; during the intermission between the first and second acts a weekly review of current events; and at the close a popular comedy. This arrangement takes the place of two regular cabaret acts, thereby not only effecting a saving but actually paying for itself in a very short time. This feature has met with so much enthusiasm that the management has definitely decided to make it a permanent feature of the regular program.

Peerless Standard Projector and Generator Go to the Cannibal Isles

WHEN Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson departed a few days ago for a return trip to the Land of the Cannibals, they took with them a Peerless Standard Projector and a Hand Generator. With this outfit the Johnsons intend to amuse the savages with films in the making of which the man-eaters themselves participated.



The hand driven generator which is illustrated is similar to the one brought out some time ago except that the present outfit with its smaller driving wheels is more compact and easily transported. With two husky savages turning the cranks, Mr. Johnson will be able to generate sufficient current for a 10-foot picture.

Not All the Class Is Found in the Large Cities

THERE is more than a grain of truth in what Projectionist Clay Powers, of Dunsmuir, Cal., says describing some of the difficulties a "small town" projectionist must put up with. He says:

"As a subscriber to your valuable paper, I read the Projection Department with great interest, and have noticed on several occasions where the 'Small Town Operator' gets the credit for knowing nothing at all about the game. Now let me say that you will find just as good projectionists in some of the small towns as in the larger cities. Some of those who have everything to work with in the larger theatres think they are the only ones who know projection. They blame all of the breaks, poor patches, grease and punch holes, onto the 'small town operator,' when, as a matter of fact it is well known that the small towns cannot afford to pay for first run pictures, and when we do get them they are already full of patches, punch holes and sprocket holes half broken out. Who does this? The 'small town operator' does not, because the film is that way when he receives it.

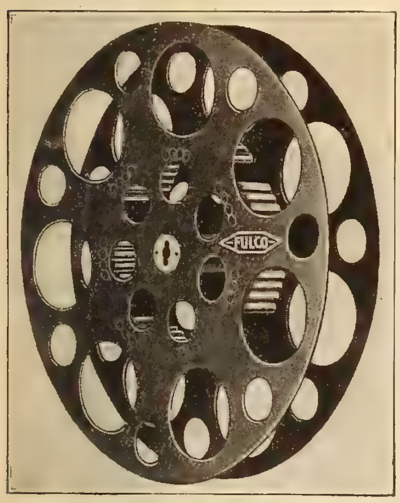
"I am a projectionist in a small town, using two machines and have a small generator set to produce direct current. There is no motion picture repair shop within 300 miles, so if anything goes wrong it is up to me to fix it.

"I like to read the Projection Department, but it makes my blood boil to read what some of those fellows will write about the 'small town operators,' especially when speaking of money. I take pleasure in stating that I am not working for $12.00 a week either. As one projectionist put it in the April 19 issue, 'I am getting a salary.'"

The New Fulco 5" Hub Reel

THIS reel is along entirely different lines from the reels already in use and has been designed especially for the projectionist, as it is not expected that it will be used for shipping and storing film. It is the result of much study and many experiments to overcome troubles with the present-day reels in the proper projection of pictures.

The side disks of the Fulco reel are a special cold-rolled and polished steel. The center piece or hub-core is made of solid machine steel with a double key-way broached in, which has proved its value over the usual stamped and formed sheet metal cores. The 28 spindle rivets provide the reel with 21 places on which to fasten the film. The reel is finished in satin white nickel which reflects the light through the peep holes of the magazine, making it easy to see the amount of film on the reel at all times.



The Society of Motion Picture Engineers has given its stamp of approval to the 5-inch hub reel for projection, as with its use there is a more even tension on the take-up and the reels in both the upper and lower magazines do not revolve so fast as when using reels having 1½ or 2 inch hubs.

Where Projectionist and Operator Part

THE projectionist who desn't read at least one trade paper is an operator. He is also the man who does not, will not, and can not join the local organization in his territory. And because he does not read, mix with projectionists and use his brain, there is no way of reaching him to correct his faults except through his manager. A combination then, which would be unbeatable, would be a manager and an operator neither of whom read trade papers to improve the conduct of their separate business. Happily to say, there are few such combinations in existence, for the house couldn't last long under their direction and projection.

Mr. M. Smith, of New York City, says along these lines:

"As a projectionist interested in the improvement of Projection, I wish to say a few words regarding the abuses of film by operators punching holes in the end of films. This fault can never be remedied by appealing to the operator through trade papers, because there are some operators who never look at trade papers or any other papers that would help them better themselves. This applies to managers also.

"In your issue of April 12 I noticed a letter from a projectionist stating that he had taken out all misframes and punch-holes with the result that the exchanges send him the worst prints.

I learned that stunt about five years ago. The exchanges are anxious to correct this waste of money, so let them employ a few inspectors to run down the men with the punches. In this way they can soon stamp out the bad practice.

"There are several other causes for complaints by projectionists against the exchanges, and if the exchange managers are anxious to correct them—then I am open for a job and can furnish several other men who will prove that it's not the projectionists, but the exchanges themselves that are principally to blame."

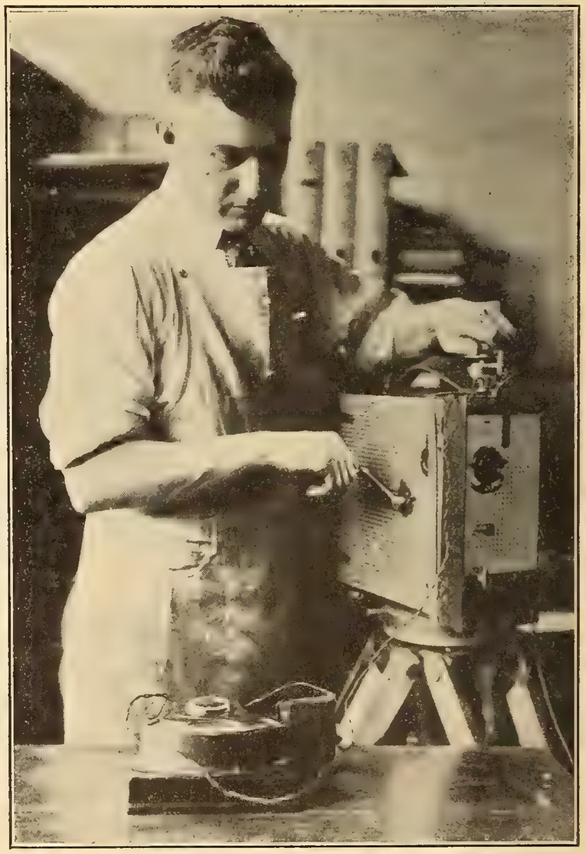
Mercury Seismometer Measures Vibration of Universal Moving Picture Cameras

THIS instrument consists of an iron cup containing a quantity of mercury and an adjustable electrical contact, in close proximity to the surface of the mercury, so that the least agitation of the surface completes the circuit at the contact and gives a visible indication in a sensitive galvanometer connected in the circuit.

By means of a micrometer adjustment, calibrated to thousandths of an inch, the distance between the contact and the surface of the mercury may be varied a measured amount.

In operation, the mercury container with its associated contact is mounted on the camera or other device, the vibration of which is to be measured, and the contact is adjusted so as to just clear the surface of the mercury. The camera is then operated at the normal speed, thereby agitating the surface of the mercury and completing the circuit to the galvanometer. While the camera is still in operation the contact is gradually raised a measured distance until the circuit is completely interrupted. The reading of the micrometer adjustment is then a measure of the comparative vibration of the instrument under test.

The actual vibration of the instrument is but a small fraction of the indicated vibration of the mercury surface, the extreme sensitiveness of which magnifies the vibration to be tested.



Sending in your ideas and schemes to the NEWS is like mailing a circular letter to all the projectionists in the country. Every man has at least one thought which the other man hasn't—so, all together, with a letter to the Projection Department.

Cue Sheets Latest Hits — Music — Musical Equipment

Nothing Is Worse Than Too Much of the Best

THE popular song craze has reached the limit. There is no question about that. It has reached a stage of fermentation. In its marathon with standard music, it has overpowered the best musicians in the country. It is becoming a menace to dignified musical atmosphere, and the biggest irony of this indisputable fact is not the quality of our popular songs of today but the quantity. "Too much of the best is the worst."

I have witnessed performances where popular songs have accompanied the emotional Nazimova through her most dramatic phases of her screen life. I have heard musicians play "You Made Me What I Am Today" during scenes portraying the wrecked lives of once well-to-do women or men. I have heard popular songs accompanying the most dramatic situations when the words of the choruses of such songs were only in the slightest way related to the action or story of the picture. I admit popular songs are a necessity just as well as standard music, but not songs lasting the life of the one day fly. It is the popular song of everlasting quality such as "Silver Threads Among the Gold," "Break the News to Mother," "Over There" and scores of others that can take the place of the spoken word in the silent drama. It is the song that reveals an American narrative such as "Marching Through Georgia," "Old Kentucky Home," "Rally 'Round the Flag," etc., that is of indisputable value to the photoplay, but nevertheless, it takes a great deal of discretion and good judgment on the part of the musician to appropriately employ even such songs.

The comedy, the light character picture portrayed by such actresses as June Caprice, Madge Kennedy, etc., is the only battlefield for the one-day popular hit, and even then "Too much of the best can turn out to be the worst," and furthermore, gentle reader, bear it in mind, that every time you are playing the one-day popular song hit you are taking a chance of being called "old-fashioned," unless such song is absolutely and irrevocably suggested by the action of the picture, and you can only determine such fact if the lyrics of the song are known to you.

More than once I have heard popular songs accompanying pictures where the lyrics have revealed a story as far away from the subject of the picture as the North Pole from the South Pole. I admit most of the audience probably do not even notice such things, but at least the minority do, and I am sure we must all agree at least on this point, that in such a case the joke is every time on the musician, until repeated too often—after that it's circumstantial evidence against the musician's ability.

Who is responsible for this unsatisfactory state of affairs? It is not the musician. It cannot be the music publishers, but it is the unsophisticated theatre manager or "man behind the cash." Good music costs good money and the popular hits are less expensive and in most instances distributed free of charge. It is indeed discouraging to be forced to admit that the musical destinies of about 90 per cent of our American motion picture houses are guided entirely by the spirit of the holy nickel, and not by artistic inspirations which in time are bound not only to fully recompense any expense, but also warrant to fully establish the status of the motion picture theatre as an institution of dignity, refinement and art.

It is a pity that most managers are expecting an immediate and direct result of anything they attempt to accomplish, especially something that requires a cash outlay. Mr. Manager, money invested in music cannot create an immediate cash result. It cannot create something that you can touch with your fingers, but it indirectly contributes material for a concrete foundation of your theatre and erects in time an institute of everlasting drawing power, at the same time establishing an incessant flow of prosperity in the form of good old cash to you and invaluable pleasure to the paying public.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"How Are You Going to Wet Your Whistle?" Fox-trot. Some question! Don't worry—console yourself by playing this anti-Prohibition hit! By Percy Wenrich. (Leo Feist, 249 W. 40th St., N. Y.)

2—"Salvation Lassie of Mine." The Doughboy's tribute to the Doughgirl—the Lass of the Doughnuts—it's a big ballad hit. Waltz, by Caddigan & Stor. (Leo Feist.)

3—"Butterfly Dance." A brilliant composition written in the composer's usual dainty style. Mr. Miles needs no introduction to leaders, who will remember him as the composer of the famous "Sparklets." (Sam Fox, Cleveland, Ohio.)

4—"Carnations." This number, by composer of "Basket of Roses." It is characterized by a catchy and pleasing melody, and always makes an instantaneous appeal. (Sam Fox.)

7—"Romance D'Amour." A sequel to the famous "Serenade D'Amour," by Franz Von Blon, consisting of two exceptionally melodious movements. (Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Ave., New York.)

8—"Canterbury Bells," from the Boutonniere Suite by Gerard Tonning. Miss Marguerite Clark, Mary Pickford and Gladys Leslie are always difficult to musically interpret upon the screen, because they need charming and pleasing music, but of a light order. Such is the value of "Canterbury Bells," delightfully appropriate for garden scenes or love or character theme for pictures in which the three above-mentioned stars are frequently offered. (Belwin, Inc.)

9—"When I Met You," by Paul Amstrong and F. Henri Klickman. Remarkable melody ballad, starting like a winner. (McKinley Music Co., 147 W. 45th St., New York.)

10—"Impassioned Dream," by J. Rosas. The Spanish waltz king. Arranged by Ellis Brooks, complete with introduction and code. (Belwin, Inc.)

11—"Melodie," by S. Rachmaninoff. Concert favorite. Modern orchestra arrangement by Chas. J. Roberts. Originality and dramatic impulse are prominently evident in this number by one of the representatives of living Russian composers. Suitable for either the theatre or concert stage and equally effective for small or large instrumental combinations. (Carl Fischer, Cooper Sq., New York.)

12—"Domino Rose" (Valse Intermezzo), by Carl Bohm. A modern and up-to-date "invitation to the dance," in which the true spirit and swing of the Valse has been caught with irresistible strains. A beautiful introduction, admirably contrasted themes and the finest of arrangements, all combine to make this one of the most desirable concert novelties of the season. (Carl Fischer.)

French Composer Dedicates March to Pearl White

A STIRRING military march entitled "Pretty Girls of the U. S. A.," has been dedicated to Pearl White, the famous Pathe serial star, by the composer, Guillaume Dauvers, well-known French musician and magazine writer, whose works are published under the name Valentin Garry.

While new to this company, Mr. Dauvers' composition is already known to American doughboys who served in France. Although published only last December, "Pretty Girls of the U. S. A." is said to have a wide popularity in France, particularly in motion picture houses where Miss White's pictures are being shown.

Following is a personal letter to Miss White from M. Dauvers:

"Mademoiselle.—Being a great admirer of your talent and editor of several French trade papers in which I have often had the pleasure of writing about you, I have taken the liberty of publishing in La Cinematographie Francaise, No. 8, December 28, 1918, a musical composition entitled 'Pretty Girls of the U. S. A.,' the dedication of which kindly accept.

"It is the modest tribute of an artist old enough to be your father to the charming girl you are. I hope you will receive same as a token of my sincere admiration.

"Very truly yours, GUILLAUME DAUVERS,
"9 Rue Donizetti, Paris."

An autograph copy of the march accompanied the letter to Miss White.

Song Publishers Write Number Around "Oh, You Women"

A POPULAR song entitled "Oh, You Women," has been inspired by the title and theme of the John Emerson-Anita Loos special production of the same name to be released in the near future by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The striking cover of the "Oh, You Women" press book first attracted the attention of Mr. Al Piantadosi, and upon seeing the Paramount film he expressed great enthusiasm over the song possibilities of both the title and theme. Bud Greene and S. Stept, two popular composers, prepared the words and music for the song, which Mr. Piantadosi will exploit in a big way. For the cover of the song, the trade-mark color plates of Ernest Truex and Louis Huff, used in all the advertising for the film, will be reproduced in two colors. The advertising and publicity campaigns for the song will be prepared in close co-operation with the drive on the film by Famous Players-Lasky, so that both the song and the film will mutually benefit.

"We intend to give 'Oh, You Women' one of the greatest publicity campaigns ever accorded a popular song," said Mr. Piantadosi, president of Al Piantadosi & Co., Inc., publishers. "In this number we feel we have one of the most striking hits of the season.

"In exploiting the song we will work in co-operation with the publicity department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, so that both exhibitors and music dealers will be able to get the greatest returns. Advertising in many channels will be employed, and I will start on a tour of the country within the next two weeks to consult with our branch managers everywhere as well as big buyers, for what I think will prove the biggest drive ever given a song.

"The song will be sung as an advance announcement in theatres running the Paramount Picture. Singers will be supplied to exhibitors free of charge, as well as slides. Local music dealers will also be given a large variety of advertising matter to tie up with the campaign of the exhibitors."

"The Unpainted Woman"

(Universal—Directed by Tod Browning)

SMALL town life is depicted reasonably true in this picture which features Mary Maclaren. For about three reels the story carries a strong vein of humor and in the concluding chapters the action has switched to melodrama with all trace of comedy eliminated. Good characterization marked the picture throughout its length with the people of the tale acting and talking (thanks to the title editor) like genuine human beings.

It is a simple story that is presented here, relating the misery that comes to the central character, a servant girl, after she is married. Before the ceremony the story carried its humorous points, for village life is played up with plenty of color in plot and characterization. The young man in the case took to liquor after the wedding and met his death in a drunken brawl, thus leaving his wife in difficult straits. She bought a farm and a tramp came along and helped her work it. And eventually the nuptial knot was tied again.

The picture contains some effective thrills which with its human characters suffice to make it entirely entertaining. One of its points of interest is found in a burning barn and the scene sends out a bit of suspense.

The chief weakness lies in the switch of the story from a rich comedy sketch into a commonplace melodrama. In other ways the picture is entirely praiseworthy. Its best point as mentioned above is the characterization. Mary Maclaren is an appealing figure as the heroine. David Butler as her drunken husband is splendid as a "boob" in the earlier reels. He and Willard Louis, who played the livery-stable heavy, are thoroughly grounded in the art of comedy expression. The others fitted.—Length, 6 reels. —Laurence Reid.

"The Boomerang"

(Pioneer—Seven Reels)

"THE BOOMERANG" is a seven reel production starring Henry B. Walthall and based on the ever-popular theme of Capital and Labor. The development of the story possesses a timely interest, although it must be said that when the principals of each side come together in the end no great solution has been offered to smooth over the differences of the classes and the masses of the nation. However the producers of "The Boomerang" make no boast that it will accomplish this.

The least that can be said of the picture is that it presents an interesting story and a mighty interesting hero in George Gray, the role taken by the star. Mr. Walthall is always an interesting actor. He registers his points with such ease and always with the proper emphasis that he becomes the center of admiration. The role of Gray he plays easily, confidently, realistically. Melbourne McDowell, Nina Byron, Helen Jerome Eddy, Lloyd Whitlock, Nigel de Brullier and Jack MacDonald all render assisting performances adequate in every degree.

"The Boomerang" offers a variety of action and traverses considerable ground before it plays its trump card, that the actions of the greedy capitalist will cause his own downfall if he doesn't watch out. The scenes of the toilers' section of the city are full of atmosphere. But it is Mr. Walthall's performance that leaves the lasting impression.—Peter Milne.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

Referring to the announced intention of Mr. Oliver Morosco to give or authorize the giving of motion picture performances of the play.

"PEG O' MY HEART"

of which the undersigned is the author, attention is called to the following provision contained in the contract with Mr. Morosco, dated the 19th day of January, 1912, to wit:

> "No alterations, eliminations or additions shall be made in the play without the approval of the author."

The undersigned will not consent to any alterations, eliminations or additions in his play, if used for purposes of motion pictures, and will not consent to the introduction of additional characters or incidents or scenes, should the play be used for motion pictures.

On a violation of the above provision, application will be made for an injunction.

The undersigned has also instructed his counsel to file, without delay, an application in the Supreme Court of the United States, for a writ of certiorari, to review the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals, recently rendered in his suit against Mr. Morosco, the court not being unanimous on the question of the right of Mr. Morosco to make a picture of the play.

"SOMETHING TO DO"—PARAMOUNT

Entertaining Comedy-Drama, Starring Bryant Washburn

MAXIMILIAN FOSTER has hit upon a quaint idea for his story, "Something to Do," which Paramount has given to Bryant Washburn for his latest screen expression. At least it seems quaint and original dressed up as a photoplay. To expose a large and growing class of American society which is popularly called "nouveau riche" and show how one of its representatives catered to disguised nobility in the search for social recognition seems like a mine that has never been explored by the busy scenarists. A keen bit of satire has the author concocted, and his plot built around it makes excellent Washburn material—the kind of material that has breezed him through a winner in most of his pieces.

To get at the meat of the matter, the star is represented as a wealthy idler who is proud to belong to the "I Won't Works." When he learns that his valet is posing as a nobleman for a social climber, the idea strikes him that he can masquerade in such a disguise. So he finds something to do after all.

The fun starts at a certain reception and is eventually subordinated for lively melodramatic action. Between the contrast of elements the story is given a splendid balance. Of course the girl casts a romantic spell over the gay clubman and he emerges in the end with plenty of ambition. The humorous note is well emphasized in the masquerading servants, all of whom are the hero's faithful retainers.

A human story full of sparkle and spice and good red meat to boot. And splendidly interpreted by the star and his players. Mr. Washburn is thoroughly at home in his part, and Charles Gerrard stands out conspicuously as the valet. Indeed his playing is one of the bright spots of the picture. Adele Farrington as the "sassiety" queen is genuinely funny. Donald Crisp has given the piece a fine production. It should find a welcome place on any exhibitor's program. Length, 5 reels.—Released April 13.—Laurence Reid.

CATCH LINES

He was a wealthy young idler who had so much money that he didn't know what to do. Then one day he found himself masquerading as an English nobleman and his idle days were left behind him. See "Something to Do," Bryant Washburn's newest picture, and discover how he lived up to the title.

A Maximilian Foster story capitally done on the screen. Adventure, romance and drama are found in every one of its interesting scenes.

His valet posed as a titled Englishman for a social climber! Ah, that was "something to do" for him! What took place at the reception gave the "nobleman" an opportunity to forget his days of idleness. You will have an adventurous screen hour when you look in on Bryant Washburn's latest photoplay.

PROGRAM READER

Bryant Washburn in "Something to Do" will be one of the attractions shortly to be seen at this theatre. This is considered by many as the best picture in which the star has appeared. It tells the story of a wealthy idler who refuses to find something to do until his doctor advises him that continual idleness will cost him his health. The young man's valet occupies his evenings in assuming a nobleman's estate for the benefit of a newly rich social aspirant. The latter believes that "blue blood" is only found in the nobility, and a social bureau supplies the demand in servants who masquerade as ladies and gentlemen of title. So the idle millionaire becoms a nobleman for an evening and meets all of his faithful retainers, as well as a pretty girl whose father has been placed in an asylum by her step-mother (the hostess) so that the latter can come into the family fortune.

How the idler is inspired to mend his ways through the girl's influence, how he exposes the nefarious scheme of the hostess and shows up her social ambitions, how he aids in effecting the inmate's release and proving himself a man of character, form a series of interesting events that are delightfully told on the screen. We feel sure you will be satisfied with this human comedy drama. Mr. Washburn contributes a pleasing performance and invests his work with his customary breeziness. Excellent support is given him by Charles Gerrard, Adele Farrington and Ann Little. The story is by Maximilian Foster. Donald Crisp is the director.

THE STORY

Jack Merrill is a young millionaire suffering from ennui, brought about by lack of occupation. With time hanging heavy on his hands, he is considerably put to it to find anything to do except patronize his club and speed around in his motor. And such tasks are not conducive to a good state of health. So Jack, feeling sort of run down, consults his doctor who, diagnosing his case as one of ennui and knowing that a job would be the best description, wakes him up to a realization of things. The young idler, considerably impressed by the doctor's insults, finds an opportunity to do something in rescuing a certain girl from the clutches of his valet. The latter is engaged to appear as a titled Englishman at receptions given in his honor by a social climber, Mrs. Parkin.

Jack, taken up with the scheme, believes that what his valet can do he is also well equipped to do the same thing, and so it happens that he appears at one of the receptions as "The Earl of Dunraven." There he discovers that his hostess is the aunt of Janet Renwick and that she is perpetrating an outrageous swindle against the girl's father so as to come into the family fortune. The unscrupulous aunt has had Renwick incarcerated in an insane asylum, bribing the keeper to hold him there. But the unfortunate man escapes and turns up at the reception. Jack, seizing his opportunity to rectify matters, imprisons Mrs. Parkins and the prison guards who have followed in pursuit, chops the safe out of the wall to obtain the receipt of the bribe, and exposes the group of menials who have masqueraded as men of birth and breeding. When Renwick informs his daughter that there is nothing wrong about Jack she consents to look favorably upon him.

PROGRAM READER

"The Best Man," the Hampton-Hodkinson picture with J. Warren Kerrigan in the stellar role, which will come to the ——— theatre shortly, is a tale of a U. S. Secret Service agent who is commissioned by his chief to hunt down a band of international thieves who practice the art of stealing valuable Government papers. He is advised to let nothing hinder him in the execution of his plan, though his duty may cause his death. Well, Cyril Gordon (Mr. Kerrigan) recovers the important package all right, but he didn't reckon that it would lead him straight into the jaws of matrimony. There he stood as big as life ready to protect her and everything, and though he didn't know the charming bride and she mistook him for an old suitor, still the deception had to be carried out. Think of it!—he was assuming the identity of the very man he was ordered to capture. Of course, such a state of affairs led up to all sorts of complications, and how everything turned out for the best is attractively set down in the five reels of "The Best Man." The picture is punctuated with a plethora of thrills and unique comedy situations. Mr. Kerrigan appears at his best in the stellar role. Lois Wilson plays opposite him and gives a good account of herself, while others are Alfred Whitman, who occasionally appears as a star himself; R. D. MacLean, Bert Appling, Clyde Benson and Mary Land. The picture was produced by Jesse D. Hampton.

PRESS NOTICE

Bryant Washburn, the breezy Paramount comedian, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest rollicking piece, "Something to Do." This is a story by Maximilian Foster and relates the adventures of a wealthy young idler, whose idea of work is something to be avoided. Jack Merrill, as he is called, simply refuses to occupy his time beyond lounging in his club until his doctor advises him that he had better get busy at something or else the undertaker will pay him a call. The warning has its results, for straightway Jack assumes the disguise of a nobleman—a profession that his valet has been following in order to hoodwink the guests at certain receptions given by a garrulous social climber, whose opinion of society is measured by the number of noblemen on her calling list.

So at the reception as "The Earl of Dunraven," Jack meets his waiter, his valet, his barber, and a whole group of servants as well as a charming girl, whose father has been incarcerated in an insane asylum by his second wife (the hostess). And the fun starts and builds up a deal of dramatic highlights before the hostess is brought down to earth and the unfortunate husband released. To tell all the exciting and humorous incidents would be giving away the story and it is too delicious for that.

Nothing Seems to Be Very Safe About Bryant Washburn Who Seems to Be Doing Something in "Something to Do"

"FOR BETTER, FOR WORSE"—ARTCRAFT

DeMille Scores with a Tremendous Heart Theme

DROPPING the elegant satirical thrusts of "Don't Change Your Husband" and "Old Wives for New," Cecil B. DeMille goes straight to the heart in "For Better, For Worse," his latest opus. And no Cupid's dart ever found its mark with greater accuracy than does DeMille in this instance. It seems a shame to label much of the action here as "heart stuff," even though it is known by such a commonplace term in the production art. But certain it is that the times are almost innumerable when the skill of the director fairly makes the heart cry out.

To begin with, the story, supplied by Edgar Selwyn and developed by Jeanie Macpherson, has a human appeal that is deep and penetrating. Here is the man who stayed at home, fighting the battles of humanity against the forces of disease and pestilence that little children might live, this man branded a coward by the woman he loves because he does not don a uniform! This situation, delicate in the extreme, has been handled with the utmost skill by DeMille, and with Elliott Dexter's fine characterization it sounds to the depths of the heart.

Suspensive drama comes when the girl marries her other suitor, a soldier, more out of pique than of love. Then comes her realization that she has done the doctor a great wrong, her reawakened love for him and the fairly resounding crash of the climax when her husband returns from the dead on the night she plans announcing her engagement. It is somewhat surprising, however, that DeMille permitted these critical scenes to run their present length. Certainly he knows the value of timing in a crisis of the fundamental force contained in this, and a repetitious continuity here becomes a little uninteresting. But it is the major portion of the picture that counts and its excellence is so marked that it is an injustice to show bad feeling over such a mistake.

Gloria Swanson, Tom Forman, Wanda Hawley and Raymond Hatton take the other principal roles and handle them with fine taste. The production is lavish and well up to the DeMille standard as regards detail. It is a delight to watch this detail—his play doctors are practical, his chauffeurs as as if they were in the picture, not apart from it; everything is realistic.—Length, 6 reels.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

Cecil De Mille, whose two recent pictures, "Don't Change Your Husband" and "Old Wives for New," established him as even a more powerful factor in the producing art than he was considered before, comes to the front again with another Artcraft special release in "For Better, For Worse," which will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. In "For Better, For Worse," the producer forsakes the fine satirical thrusts of his previous pictures and develops a heart interest with infinite skill. Edgar Selwyn, the well known playwright and producer, is author of the story, while Jeanie Macpherson developed the continuity. Truly the talent combined in the picture's preparation insures success.

"For Better, For Worse," tells the story of a doctor who stayed at home during the stressing days of the war and who was branded as a coward by the woman he loved. She came from a family of true patriots, but patriots who couldn't see an able-bodied man wear civilian clothes in war time. The doctor had thought it all out, and had come to the conclusion that he was needed at St. Agnes' Hospital, where there were hundreds of crippled children needing his care and skill. And so he saw the girl of his heart marry her soldier suitor and saw her turn from him—calling him coward.

How this drama is developed is best told by Mr. De Mille through the medium of the screen. It is full of appeal and comes to a resounding climax. Elliott Dexter, Gloria Swanson, Tom Forman, Wanda Hawley, Raymond Hatton, Theodore Roberts and Sylvia Ashton enact the principal roles.

Because Dr. Edward Meade fails to don the uniform and continues his fight for crippled and diseased children at home, Sylvia Norcross, of a family of wealthy super-patriots, calls him a coward and refuses to see him. And to Meade's further chagrin she accepts the proposal of Richard Burton just before he sails to France. But as time goes on Sylvia comes to realize that Dr. Meade is something of a hero on his own account. For instance, she discovers that he is the only physician who can remedy a young girl who was knocked down and severely injured by her machine. She begins to see that it was courage and not cowardice that kept him at home.

In France Burton is horribly mutilated about the face. By his buddy he sends a mesage to his wife that he is dead. Then, thrown more into the company of Meade again through their mutual happiness in helping the children, Sylvia grows to love him once more. It is a pretty romance and they set the night on which to announce their engagement. Then Burton reappears his face patched up some, an artificial hand —and completely upsets Sylvia. But Meade urges her to keep by her promise, to comfort and bring happiness to the man who bravely went forth to die—and she decides to. But as night draws in she finds it impossible to go through with it. She confesses her feelings to Burton—who fails to put a noble interpretation on them.

But stopping at the house that night is Betty Hoyt, a girl who has loved Burton since childhood. And it is she who explains the whole situation to him and free Sylvia from all shadow of suspicion. And Burton is not one to refuse to understand. The war brought him a clearer insight. And so the happiness of four people results from Betty's little talk to him.

PROGRAM READER

Because Dr. Meade didn't don a uniform he was called a coward and a slacker. He had thought that he was most needed at St. Agnes' Hospital, where hundreds of crippled little children lay. But Sylvia had thought oppositely. And she married a soldier suitor and tried to forget Dr. Meade. But she couldn't do it. At length his heroism, his sacrifice, burst on her duofold strong. She realized one day that he was a hero in every sense of the word—more than that, she realized she loved him and that for her husband she held only pride! Such was her predicament. How was she to extricate herself from its tangle? This is told in Cecil B. De Mille's "'For Better, For Worse," which comes to this theatre shortly. Without doubt it is one of the most appealing moving pictures of the year, fully worthy to rank with those two recent successes of the same producer's "Don't Change Your Husband" and "Old Wives for New." In it a fine cast including Elliott Dexter, Gloria Swanson, Tom Forman, Wanda Hawley, Raymond Hatton, Sylvia Ashton and Theodore Roberts appear. "For Better, For Worse," was written by Edgar Selwyn, the popular playwright and producer.

SUGGESTIONS

By all means play this picture as a special attraction. You have so many sure fire points to play up that it will become a special in spite of dramatic sensation of the season.
the fact that you might ignore it as such. Think of the advertising value in the name of the producer, Cecil B. De Mille, who gave to the screen "Don't Change Your Husband" and "Old Wives for New." Think of the advertising value of the title, "For Better, For Worse," a phrase that everyone knows. The author, Edgar Selwyn, a famous playwright and theatrical producer. The scenarist, Jeanie Macpherson, who by her work on other De Mille pictures has gained a lasting fame. The cast, including a long list of favorites. Look them over. There may be one or two you haven't heard of but no more. And all these points are just production points. You have enough advertising material there to last the run of the picture and you haven't even touched on the story!

The story you can play up as a tremendous heart theme. You can go the limit on this. And you have a different appeal in the hero that is branded a coward because he doesn't go to the trenches. Don't get it into your head that he's a spy. He's a doctor and nothing more. Of course, presenting such a character as a hero presents a delicate situation, but rest assured that this has been well handled by the producer. Go the limit on this character. Play him up and get all the appeal possible into your advertisements. Mention Elliott Dexter's performance to make your point even clearer.

"HELP! HELP! POLICE!"—FOX

Rollicking Story with George Walsh Cutting Up Capers

GEORGE WALSH'S position on the screen is unique in the sense that he is seldom in need of a story. If one happens to be found in the course of things—well it can be utilized like "Help! Help! Police!" for example. For the most part all the star needs is an imaginative director who can think up enough stunts to keep him busy. George Walsh must have action and it must be expressed in the most emphatic way. And that is just what his latest picture contains—a rousing element of action.

Its little thread of story is visible however, and is sort of restful to follow after you have tired yourself out in jumping, and running, and fighting, and climbing, and smiling with the indefatigable George Walsh. You can't resist him. He simply takes you with him on his tireless journey. But when it is finished you are satisfied even though you are a trifle tired.

This time Director Dillon has taken him to Palm Beach, and the Florida resort permits him plenty of latitude as well as gives the picture an enchanting background. The story is everything its title indicates. George is caught by the long arm of the law and before the girl is led to believe in him, he is charged with abduction, theft, arson, assault with intent to kill, resisting an officer, exceeding the speed limit, perjury, and every other imaginable crime.

The action crackles from the introductory flash and the story has enough sustaining value to keep it from resembling a series of stunts. The star and the director have thought up sufficient thrills between them that will be hard to duplicate in the future. Among the players who are on the go every minute so as not to fall behind Mr. Walsh, are Eric Mayne, Henry Hallam, Alan Edwards, Alice Mann and Evelyn Brent.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

SUGGESTIONS

Suggesting advertising for a George Walsh picture is rather a superfluous job. It need hardly be said that to incorporate speed, thrills and comedy in your advertising is the proper course to pursue. If you bring out these elements you should have no trouble in bringing the people in. Walsh is popular and a valuable star for any house, as his popularity seems to be increasing with each picture. Play him up and play his stunts and comedy up and don't forget the speed and pep. You'll be presenting your goods attractively and correctly if you follow this course.

PRESS NOTICE

George Walsh, as athletic as ever, appears in his latest Fox picture entitled, "Help! Help! Police!" at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. Delightful exterior scenes taken in Florida's garden spot, Palm Beach, form a colorful background to the athletics put over by the star and the comedy of the story. The plot concerns rivals in business whose children are more or less in love. Of course the father of the girl looks with disfavor on the young man's suit, but in typical Walsh fashion he persists and persists and persists, persists so hard that he lands in jail several times, is accused of being a crook, a villain and all sorts of an abductor, but finally proves his virtue, the villain's villainy, patches up the quarrel of the old gentleman and wins the hand and heart of the girl he loves.

Quite a lot for one picture, all told. But every George Walsh picture contains a lot and "Help! Help! Police!" is no exception to the rule. It was written by Raymond Schrock, who also furnished the idea for the immediately previous Walsh picture and produced under the direction of Edward Dillon, than whom there is no better director in putting on this sort of a picture. He had extensive training under the old Fine Arts company, putting on many of its most successful comedies, and his other Walsh pictures have added further to his reputation as a comedy director.

Alice Mann, a very pretty ingenue, is seen in support of the star, while others who appear are Eric Mayne, Henry Hallam, Marie Burke, Alan Edwards and Evelyn Brent.

Among others who are summering at Palm Beach are the families of Edward P. Welston and Judson Pendleton. The heads of the respective houses are rivals in the rubber business and so antagonistic toward each other that they don't look with favor upon the friendship of their children, George and Eve. The young man spends his father's money so lavishly that it causes him no end of trouble and he pays such homage at the court of Eve that Father Pendleton is considerably put out about it. The latter favors Arthur Trask, a sharper who poses as a banker.

George runs afoul of the police for exceeding the speed limit, but that violation of the law is nothing compared to the crimes that are charged against him when Trask begins to unload his sharp schemes. This polished Raffles not only has the inside track to Eve's heart, but has discovered the way to various parlor suites where jewels are carelessly kept. One night George spies a man burglarizing Eve's room and when he investigates the hotel people pounce upon him and cause his arrest, since the real thief has escaped, and our hero looks guilty.

Before the evening is over, George rescues a girl who has been one of Trask's victims and in taking her to the hospital is arrested for speeding as well as abduction and every other crime imaginable. His father has to go his bond for $600,000—the sum he had intended using in beating Pendleton on a rubber deal. But the gay spender is never tried, for he hunts down the crooks and brings them in at the crucial moment he is to stand trial. Pendleton, happy to recover his own $600,000 that has been stolen, gladly gives up his daughter to George, and the business rivals, now the greatest of friends, invest the sum on a fifty-fifty basis.

PROGRAM READER

Make way for the picture of comedy and stunts and thrills. The picture that will set you laughing and keep you gasping. The picture that includes the unimaginable in the way of athletics. Can you guess who the star is? It oughtn't to be a hard job, as only one star fits this sort of picture—and he is George Walsh, the Fox favorite. George's latest picture, "Help! Help! Police!" which is coming to this theatre shortly will take your breath away with its thrills and comedy—any breath you have left after its five reels are run you're welcome to keep. The plot includes romance, mistakes, stunts and sensations—everything that a Walsh picture ought to include. It was developed by Raymond Schrock and produced under the direction of Edward Dillon, Fox's premier comedy director. And Alice Mann, one of the prettiest ingenues, is in it. Little more could be said in the way of fine praise.

CATCH LINES

A thief had bound and robbed a girl and then set fire to her room in the hotel! And after George Walsh had rescued her from death she caused his arrest on an abduction charge! Think of it! Did he get out of his predicament? See "Help! Help! Police!" We promise you a lively hour.

You will be amazed at the stunts that George Walsh accomplishes in his newest picture. Nothing is too difficult for him. But we advise you to grip the arms of your chair if you want to stay in it, for the picture is full of excitement.

"SOMETHING TO DO"

Suffice it to say that Mr. Washburn extracts a rich amount of comedy from the tale, and makes it, in company with his players, a thoroughly human and engrossing photoplay. The absurdities are reasonable enough to be accepted as everyday happenings. Everyone knows that there is a certain class of American society that basks under a false light. Mr. Foster has exposed it with keen satire and a bit of drama. Charles Gerrard, who plays the valet, is thoroughly in character and gives a performance rich in sympathy and shame. Yes, he is shamed to be caught by his master and looks it capitally. Ann Little is the girl and Adele Farrington the social climber. Hers is a rare impersonation. The picture was produced under the direction of Donald Crisp.

SUGGESTIONS

If you've had good returns from the previous Washburn pictures there is no reason why you shouldn't find the present one a pleasant investment, as it is a worthy successor to the previous hits he has had even back to the Skinner series. Feature the star and play up that he is one of the best light comedians on the screen, that given any kind of a story that carries a comedy value or two and he will come through a winner. His breeziness, his keen sense of humor, are valuable assets in exploiting his name. So go the limit in bringing him forward.

"THE RED LANTERN"—NAZIMOVA PRODUCTION

Nazimova Superb in Impressive and Spectacular Play of the Far East

IN "The Red Lantern," Metro has turned out a photoplay which will challenge attention with any special production ever presented. The ability to reproduce a picture of China, to catch a breath of its exotic atmosphere, to invest its barbaric splendor, and to translate its mystic soul, so faithfully, spells a triumph of film art. It is a superior achievement—realized not only in the scope and magnitude of its lavish scenes, all of them conceived with painstaking care and accuracy, but in the graphic and logical development of its story and characterization.

To Nazimova, the star, and Capellani, the director, belong the credit for the success of the picture. The former, undertaking a dual role in which the characters are entirely different, displays the highest form of histrionism. Her performance is superb in its vividness, poignancy, and sympathy.

Indeed, the star illuminates the character of the Eurasian (the Occidental impersonation doesn't figure largely) whose youthful love and pride direct her judgment to an inexorable tragic climax, with such depth of feeling and capacity for varied changes of mood that she aroused enthusiasm of the highest order. Her personality not only coincided with the character she portrayed—but she knew the type of the Eurasian, the girl whose mixed blood carried out the ancient poetic philosophy of the play—"East is East and West is West and never the twain shall meet."

It presents a revelation of the soul, does "The Red Lantern," and naturally a tragic note is sounded. Mr. Capellani has directed with intelligence and artistic feeling. He has brought out the theme so truthfully and the atmosphere so vividly that the picture appeals to the imagination.

However, one must not lose sight of the fact that Nazimova and Capellani would not have scored so effectively were it not for the appreciation of Metro in selecting appropriate material. Theirs will be a distinction hereafter of having produced "The Red Lantern."—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

Nazimova's spectacular and impressive picture of the Far East, "The Red Lantern," which comes to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week, is undoubtedly the crowning achievement of her screen career. It has been announced that the production cost in the neighborhood of $250,000. This is believable if one considers the lavishness of the scenes and settings and the seemingly painstaking care with which they have been incorporated. Being a story of an Eurasian girl whose mixed blood caused her untold tragedy, only an appropriate background could be used to set it off to advantage. Therefore, a bit of China is reproduced, particularly that portion of it known as the Forbidden City, and within its walls is enacted the life drama of this strange exotic creature, this inscrutable daughter of destiny. She ought to find expression for her starved soul in the companionship of an Occidental, and back came the tragic barrier to haunt her that East and West don't mix.

She endeavored to be true to both races from which she came. The conflict of soul tortured her and drove her to the depths of despair. And so she lived her life. The cherry blossoms bloom as of yore; Pekin goes on in its mysterious way and the feast of the Red Lantern sends out its quaint aroma as it did thousands of years ago.

No actress has perhaps caught the Oriental spark as Nazimova has here. The vitality and magnetism of her performance is admirably emphasized, and she delineates the character surely, easily and vividly. The picture is an adaptation of Edith Wherry's novel of the same name and was directed by Albert Capellani.

THE STORY

In Pekin many years ago lived Mahlee, an Eurasian. Her mother had been sold by her grandmother to an English nobleman, Sir Philip Sackville, for much Chinese gold and the result of the union was this daughter of the East and West. When her grandmother died, Mahlee was taken to the Christian Mission, where she grew into womanhood with all faith in Buddhism destroyed. As the curious mixture of blood asserted itself, she became a prey to conflicting emotions. Time went on and the girl met and fell in love with Andrew Templeton, a young clergyman, and he reciprocated her affections, though with the knowledge that her yellow blood stood between them. Like all Orientals, Mahlee was a fatalist and believed she was destined for only a brief period of happiness before darkness would enclose her.

Sam Wang, also an Eurasian who professed Christianity, but who in reality was a Boxer leader, loved Mahlee with intense jealousy. When he noticed the attachment between Andrew and Blanche Sackville he persuaded the girl after some difficulty to return to the faith of her own people. The Boxer uprising had started about this time and Wang, through his magic chicanery, had impressed the natives that Mahlee had returned from the celestial regions as the War Maiden of China to guide them against the Occidental forces. As the Goddess of the Red Lantern Light she led her people in rebellion. If she failed she knew that she was doomed, and if she succeeded she realized that those she loved would perish.

With the battle surging in the streets of Pekin, Mahlee became conscience-stricken that the Mission might be doomed, and hastening there she met Sackville—her father and the father of Blanche. When he refused to take her away she returned to Wang, who received a mortal wound in defending her. Before he died the Eurasian gave Mahlee a vial of poison and she drained its contents. The girl had chosen death in preference to being an outcast and unloved.

"BEATING THE ODDS"—VITAGRAPH

Harry Morey Continues His Forceful Way in a Romantic Drama

VITAGRAPH is not put to much trouble in finding suitable material for Harry T. Morey, since all that is required is a story that carries a virile, fighting character for its protagonist. And this type of subject isn't very hard to locate as most tales are developed around these dashing, determined heroes who forge ahead despite every obstacle.

"Beating the Odds," is Harry Morey to the core, because it presents him fighting his way to the top with all the virility which is his on the screen. A character study we would call it since it depicts the processes that are constantly at work in lifting the hero to the heights. A product of the slums, he lives down his environment and due to his keen sense of human nature and his native shrewdness, coupled of course with pluck and determination, it isn't long before he emerges successful in love and business.

The story is quite fantastic in its development and considerable latitude is expressed in living up to the title. Mr. Morey doesn't stay long in one position because fortune smiles upon him so completely that each job cuts a higher niche than the preceding one in his ladder of life. Yet the action is entirely progressive and carries a full quota of cumulative interest and suspense. The introductory reels led us to believe that crooked politics were to be exposed again, but the plot soon came out into the open and took the hero with it. The conflicts and contrasts are well blended and suffice to bring out the dramatic highlights.

Betty Blythe and Jean Paige furnish the romantic interest, the former as an adventuress and the latter as the " only " girl. Both give capable performances. George Majeroni contributes a good bit in something other than a villainous role.—Length, 5 reels.—Released May 12.—Laurence Reid.

She was known as "the best gold-digger between the Statue of Liberty and the Golden Gate," and yet David Power was forced to accept her as his wife's step-mother! It was a situation that caused him the utmost humiliation, yet he stood it and won his game. See "Beating the Odds."

He battled against injustice, misrepresentation, the vicious conniving of his opponents, and yet he beat the odds. A regular Harry Morey part is David Power, and Harry Morey makes the most of it. See "Beating the Odds."

From a common grafter he rose to be a power in the world of finance, but his past rose up to damn him—see "Beating the Odds."

PRESS NOTICE

Harry Morey, the virile Vitagraph star, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest feature production entitled "Beating the Odds." Adapted from Irving Allen's novel entitled "The Money Maker," the plot affords the star the role of David Power, once a grafter in a big city, who turns to honest employment and cuts a big swath in the financial world. Besides putting behind him his old ways of making money he also tries to forget his old associates, but just when he has reached what appears to be the pinnacle of his happiness it is dashed to the ground by the appearance of a woman he knew in the city, Hebe Norse, a cabaret singer.

And Hebe has become the wife of Power's father-in-law! Such a situation naturally presents dramatic possibilities of an unusual nature, possibilities which were well realized by the author, and which have been communicated to the film with a fidelity and force that cannot be denied. In fact, "Beating the Odds" is one of the strongest of the many strong pictures in which Mr. Morey has appeared. The story affords him opportunities to run the gamut of emotions and, skilled actor that he is, he accepts each opportunity with rare discrimination.

Mr. Morey has in his supporting cast Jean Paige, who appears as his wife; Betty Blythe, who carries the role of Hebe, the cabaret singer, and such competent male players as George Majeroni, Robert Gaillard, Robert Mowbray and Frank Norcross. The picture was produced under the direction of Paul Scardon.

When David Power, one of the city's graft collectors, is forced to leave by the district attorney he is acompanied by Hebe Norse, a cabaret singer. In another city he takes up the small trade of medicine man, and it is while so engaged that he meets Hardy, a real estate man who, impressed with his personality, takes him into his business. In this position he shows such marked ability that he attracts the attention of Gail Rogers, a steel magnate, and his next step in the financial world is to become affiliated with him. Rogers' daughter, Rosalie, a sweet young girl, attracts David and he resolves to part company with Hebe. She, however, has also tired of David, and when he finds her in the arms of another man, the parting is a matter easily arranged.

Later David becomes manager of Rogers' steel plant and wins Rosalie's love and a promise from her to marry him. All this occurs while Rogers is away on a business trip. When he returns it is with Hebe as his wife. Despite David's objections to her, she insists on remaining in the Rogers home. She knows full well that David dare not reveal her past lest she reveal his. After a time David and Rosalie are married and live very happily together.

David becomes involved in a stock swindle with another man but, realizing the faith his wife places in him, he resolves to draw out at the last moment. But he is double-crossed, and to make matters worse Rogers has discovered the former relations of Hebe and David. The stock swindle becomes public material and the whole blame is cast on David. Rosalie leaves him, and then David goes about to retrieve the wrong he has done. It takes him three long years to restore the reputation of the company, but he finally succeeds in beating the odds and winning back his wife's love.

PROGRAM READER

Did you ever get down in the mouth and feel absolutely miserable because you thought the whole world was against you? Events and people seemed to band together in a regular conspiracy to put you out of the running? Almost everyone has that feeling one in a while. That is why the experiences of David Power are going to interest almost everyone. David Power is the name of Harry Morey's latest character which he plays in Vitagraph's "Beating the Odds," which is shortly to be shown at this theatre. David Power had everything he wanted, it seemed. Happiness, position, wealth, a loving wife. And then everything came tumbling down about his ears like a house of cards. All the world seemed pitted against him. It wouldn't give him a chance. And then he buckled down to it, resloute, strong, and fought, fought, fought. And he didn't stop fighting until he had BEATEN THE ODDS. It's the sort of picture that inspires others to go out and do strong things, and it's the sort of picture that fits Harry Morey to the T. of his middle name. By way of further information we add that "Beating the Odds" is adapted from Irving R. Allen's novel, "The Money Maker," that it was produced by Paul Scardon, and that in the cast appear Betty Blythe, Jean Paige, George Majeroni and Robert Gaillard.

SUGGESTIONS

Varied though the stories are in which Harry Morey appears, there is a certain similarity about them when it comes to the character of the roles he enacts. Each one of them contains the elements of virility, punch, fight—in fact, all sorts of strength. Are you making this sort of role synonymous with the name of Harry Morey? The star goes a long way in establishing this on his own account, but he can't do it all. Advertise him as being synonymous with such character elements. Let them always know that a Harry Morey picture means virility raised to the nth degree. You will have them watching for his pictures with a keener interest if you adopt this course, for a fighting picture is always enjoyed.

In regard to "Beating the Odds," you have a further suggestion of this quality in the title itself. Carry this suggestion out in the catch lines and pictures of your advertising.

"JUST SQUAW"—ROBERTSON-COLE

Beatriz Michelena Returns to the Screen in Western Melodrama

THE outstanding feature of this new Robertson-Cole offering is found in the return of Beatriz Michelena to the screen after a long absence. It cannot be denied that the silent drama lost one of its best delineators of Western stories during her retirement and by consenting to grace the silver sheet again she will undoubtedly renew her popularity that was established in such plays of calibre as "Salomy Jane," "The Unwritten Law," and "Salvation Nell."

In "Just Squaw" the star is called upon to impersonate one of the well remembered characters of yesterday—a white girl who is supposed to have a strain of Indian blood in her and which erects a racial barrier against a solution of love and a communion of spirit until her true ancestry is established in the final scene.

Really an old-fashioned idea, but one which has been developed with enough novelty in plot and characterization as to make it seem quite up to date. The pulse of the story throbs with melodramatic beats and its elemental character suffices to make it active to the finish. The figures in the drama are equally divided in the path that separates virtue from villainy and those that follow the upright standards are triumphant eventually. Be it said that some good old rousing action takes place which is indicated in desperate fights and stage-coach robberies. This ingredient running neck and neck with that of romance saturates the picture with suspensive interest and heart appeal.

The Western scenery which has been chosen for backgrounds is appropriate and picturesque, and the action is so set against it that the spirit of primeval, inanimate nature and the spirit of the wild drama seem to blend. What more could be asked?—Length, 5 reels.—Distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual.—Laurence Reid.

CATCH LINES

She was kidnapped when a baby and brought up to believe that she was a half-breed. Romance came into her life, but there stood the blood barrier. Was it swept aside? See "Just Squaw."

Life didn't give her much happiness when she realized her Indian blood kept her from the man she loved. How was her problem solved? You will see it all explained in a tense picture of the West when "Just Squaw" comes to the ——— theatre ——— week.

Beatriz Michelena, who will be remembered as the star of many interesting pictures a short season ago, has returned to the screen and will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in a photoplay entitled "Just Squaw." This is a story of life beyond the Rockies and presents a theme based upon racial barriers. It is said that the picture is comparable to "'Salomy Jane," in which the star appeared so brilliantly, and contains a full quota of rousing thrills carried forward by fast moving action. Miss Michelena's role is that of a white girl who, kidnapped in infancy, has been brought up to believe that she is a half-breed. Her supposed Indian mother, in league with the kidnapper, has carried out this plan of deception as a means of revenge against the girl's white father for deserting her for one of his own race.

Fawn, as the heroine is known, is ignorant of the fact that white blood courses through her veins, and when love is offered her by a man of her own color she accepts it until jealous admirers tell her that a racial barrier stands in the way. Naturally, the young man in the case is disconcerted with the unpleasant news that his beloved is a half-breed, though he condescends to worship at her throne. How Fawn is rescued from her plight, how the bad men are routed in their attempts to keep her in ignorance and subjection, how the barrier is swept aside, and how the lovers are brought together in undying love and devotion, form a picture replete with thrilling incident and dramatic heart-throbs.

Miss Michelena invests the character of Fawn with vigor and vitality. And yet there is a keen appreciation for sympathy and pathos in her impersonation. She receives adequate support from William Pike, Andrew Robson, Albert Morrison and D. Mitsoras.

Just before the old squaw died she told her half-breed son that Fawn, a white girl, was not her daughter; that the father of the two children, Jimmy Dorr, had run away with a woman of his own race after the birth of his son. The old mother cautioned the half-breed not to mention the fact that Fawn was not her child out of revenge for being deserted by her father. Snake LeGal, a bad man, has been enlisted by the squaw to kidnap the girl from her white mother, but in the passing years Fawn became the adopted daughter of a missionary of the mountains. Near at hand lived her half-breed brother, who had become an outlaw to escape LeGal's vengeance for killing one of his henchmen.

To the settlement came a stranger one day who gave his name as Watkins, but who, in reality, was the son of Sheriff Hollister, who had been murdered by LeGal years before. His mission was to avenge the wrong done his father. While he waited his opportunity to strike, Fawn came into his life, and he was on the point of confessing his love when he learned that she was supposed to be a half-breed. Despite the barrier of race, the stranger was considerably attentive toward the girl, which aroused, naturally, the jealousy of her many admirers, one of whom happened to be LeGal.

The stage was robbed one night, and suspicion pointed strongly to the Indian outlaw, since he had the strong box in his possession—stolen, of course, from LeGal's men. A vigilance committee was organized and Hollister was selected to be the leader. The half-breed was caught and was about to be strung up, when a member of the bandit's gang who had been betrayed rushed up and told the posse that LeGal was the guilty party, and that he had Fawn imprisoned in his cabin. The half-breed was released, made his way to the villain's home, and was engaged in a desperate fight before his enemy was struck down by a bullet from Dorr's gun. Before LeGal expired, he confessed that Fawn was a white girl and the daughter of Dorr. Thus the barrier of blood was removed and the two lovers found happiness together.

PROGRAM READER

Beatriz Michelena, known as one of the best delineators of Western heroines in the pictures of a season or two ago, will return to the ——— theatre in "Just Squaw," a thrilling story of the life that was lived in the Golden West when highwaymen ruled the road. It has been some time since Miss Michelena has appeared upon the screen, and the fact that she will shortly be seen here should come as a pleasant surprise. Many of our patrons doubtless remember her as Salomy Jane in the picture of that name. "Just Squaw" is the type of photoplay that made her such a favorite with screengoers. It presents a powerful story in its theme of miscegenation. The barrier which prevents two different races mixing on an equal footing is always sure to provide good story interest, and that's just what Miss Michelena's picture contains. Action, thrills and a large measure of romance are its main ingredients, and they are brought to the surface with fine dramatic highlights.

But you will see this interesting story and find out its solution in "Just Squaw." It is directed by George Middleton.

SUGGESTIONS

You, who are in the habit of playing "westerns," should find plenty of ad copy in this latest product from beyond the Rocky Mountains. As it presents one of those old-fashioned stories of Indians and highwaymen, with the picturesque West as a background, you will be able to exploit it in vivid word arguments and colors. The theme itself carries good advertising possibilities, relating, as it does, the blood barrier that pre-

Charles Ray in a Comedy with Abundant Small Town Atmosphere

A SMALL town atmosphere with just the slightest suggestion of burlesque permeates this number from first to last. And so it provides a typical Charles Ray background, a background before which he appears very human and amusing. This time he is the blacksmith-mechanic of a little Kansas community, in love with the banker's daughter. The action builds up to a country fair automobile race from which the winning hero is taken at the last lap to pursue the crook who has robbed the bank while all the town was holidaying.

There is no meat in the story at all, but with the atmosphere, heavy with local color and comedy and with the star giving his usual generous interpretation of a shy youth, the picture by no means fails in entertaining—in fact, it is a highly successful comedy.

Wanda Hawley is the pretty girl in question, Robert McKim is the "city slicker," while a wonderful array of small town old men types goes to supply the picture with a thoroughly competent cast.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 20.—Peter Milne.

CATCH LINES

He looked like a flivver but he came out a winner—he turned a broken down buzz wagon into a racer—see "Greased Lightning."

Charles Ray in another country boy role—different and humorous and human.

The story of a village blacksmith who became the village hero.

Ever take a girl out for a ride, have your wagon break down and have another fellow come along in a nice, new car and take her away from you? A sad experience! Charles Ray has it in "Greased Lightning," but he gets even. See how.

A comedy of small town life, full of homely atmosphere and rich in human humor—see "Greased Lightning."

They laughed at him when he started the race backwards—but he copped a bigger prize than anyone expected at the finish.

PRESS NOTICE

Charles Ray, the Ince-Paramount star, will be seen in his latest feature, "Greased Lightning," at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. The story of this picture, by Julien Josephson, offers him the opportunity of appearing in another country boy part. Followers of Mr. Ray well realize his ability for expert charecterization in this line, and his Andy Fletcher is no exception to the general rule. Andy is a real young man. Absolutely human. This is assured by the performance given by Mr. Ray. When, indeed, has he been anything but human? When in all his long list of pictures has he struck a note that was the slightest off tune? The answers to these questions are too obvious for reply.

Andy Fletcher is the village blacksmith—but no ordinary one. Besides being able to fit a shoe on a horse he can fit one on an automobile, and what he doesn't know about mechanics and gasolene and sparks isn't worth knowing. Andy remakes a buzz wagon, enters a race, jumps out of it to pursue a bank robber, captures him, captures the heart of a girl and the consent of her father before the five reels of "Greased Lightning" have run their course.

There is nothing melodramatic about the plot of "Greased Lightning." It is, however, filled with small town atmosphere that is a veritable delight both from the comedy viewpoint and the angle of human interest. Mr. Ray is ably supported by a cast headed by Wanda Hawley and Robert McKim, while a formidable array of "types" appear in parts of varying importance.

Andy Fletcher is the blacksmith of Pipersville, but no ordinary blacksmith is he. His mechanical train of thought leads him to invent all sorts of new devices. For instance, his automatic potato peeler—a huge success until something goes wrong and it scatters peelings all over the countenances of the investigating committee. Nothing daunted, however, Andy plods on. The girl he loves, Alice Flint, daughter of the town banker, wants an automobile, but old Flint is obdurate and refuses. Andy decides to get one, and when Flint refuses to let him draw out the money to buy one he trades in his potato machine for an old broken-down buzz wagon.

This proves rather erratic even with all Andy's tinkering, and he is obliged to face humiliation when one day Alden Armitage, a gentleman from the city who has taken up residence in Pipersville, comes along in his machine-made car and gives Alice a lift home—Andy's bus having refused to move. Armitage arranges for a regular fair day and an automobile race with a two hundred dollar prize. Whereupon Andy gets to work in secret and comes out on the appointed day with the gasolene wagon remade and christened "Greased Lightning."

But Armitage has a hidden purpose. When all the village is at the race he blackjacks poor old Flint and makes off with the cash of the bank's. Andy is obliged to stop winning the race and give pursuit to the crook. Eventually he overhauls him and retrieves the money. Then Alice looks on him as a real hero, and Flint decides that his act is well worth the present of a real automobile as well as his daughter's hand.

PROGRAM READER

Who is there that fails to recognize something delightfully human about every action of Charles Ray's? It may be some reflection of the spectator's own self, some duplication of a pet emotion or action of a friend's, but it is always human. There is never a trace of falsity in any of his various screen characters. It is always a treat to offer a Charles Ray picture for these reasons, and it is a particular treat to be able to present "Greased Lightning," his latest Paramount picture produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, which comes to this theatre shortly. For in this picture Mr. Ray has a new role. True, the background is the little country town again, but Andy Fletcher, the character interpreted by Mr. Ray, is the village blacksmith, ambitious, bound to win—winning! How he does it is not to be divulged here. Suffice it that it is done to the merry tune of comedy and human interest, that pretty Wanda Hawley appears opposite the star, and that Robert McKim is again the oily villain from the city.

SUGGESTIONS

"Greased Lightning" offers you another chance to come through with advertising of a "countryfied" variety, as the action all transpires in a small town—a real small town. Strive to get this atmosphere in your copy, in your special decorations, in any advertising sketches you use—play it up to its fullest extent and you should have an attractive display as a result.

Of course, dwell on Charles Ray and the human touches he puts in his characters. Bring this out as much as you possibly can. Don't let a chance go by to praise him as typifying all that is human and humorous in the awkward youth.

They called him a stay-at-home and a coward—society papers made slanderous, insulting remarks about him—his friends ignored him—the girl he loved turned from him and, before he knew it, had married another man—a man in a uniform. But they really didn't know—see "For Better, For Worse."

You remember Cecil De Mille's "Don't Change Your Husband" and "Old Wives for New"?—"For Better, For Worse," completes a trio of pictures of which any producer might well be proud. Don't fail to see De Mille's latest.

A story of the battles at home—of a doctor who waged a war on children's diseases and who was prevailed upon by his little charges to stay with them instead of going to the fight over the sea! He was a hero but they called him a coward. See "For Better, For Worse."

Almost the very minute that Sylvia had planned announcing her engagement to Dr. Meade before a party of friends she was told that an old friend wanted to see her in her room. "A PLACE IN THE SUN"—TRIANGLE

Cyril Harcourt's Comedy-Drama Appears on the Screen as a Melodrama

"A PLACE IN THE SUN" is an adaptation of Cyril Harcourt's recently produced stage comedy-drama and was made in England. His work is not unknown to the picture world, Constance Talmadge having had notable success with two of his offerings. But the producers of "A Place in the Sun" have missed his style: his comedy-drama has been converted into a melodrama in which a girl's betrayal is the center of a corresponding sort of action. The few flashes of comedy at the end are only faint reminders of the humor that should have been derived from Harcourt's handling of his material.

What "A Place in the Sun" does offer is a singularly good piece of acting by Malcolm Sherry and a number of picturesque English country-side scenes. The rest of the players render good assisting performances with but one exception.

The picture could be improved with some new subtitles. An expert title writer blends his words with the action as well as attending to their descriptiveness. The writer of these has only bothered about the latter element. And without this blending the action of the picture appears episodic.—Length, 5 reels.—Released May 4.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Rosie	Margaret Blanche
Dick Blair, a man of ambition	Malcolm Sherry
Stuart Capel	Reginald Owen
Marjorie Capel	Lydia Billbrooke
Sir John Capel	Lynston Lyle
Blagdon	Campbell Gullar
Mrs. Moutrie	Frances Wetherell
Ben Goodge, Dick's Uncle	John McAndrew

Adapted from Cyril Harcourt's play.

PRESS NOTICE

"A Place in the Sun" a screen version of Cyril Harcourt's latest play, produced in England with an all-star cast of British players, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Mr. Harcourt's work is by no means foreign to the screen. Several of his plays have been picturized and always with considerable success, for, although the author writes the most brilliant sort of dialogue, his plots and his treatment of them, possess an originality, a subtle twist that makes them stand in a class by themselves. "A Place in the Sun" deals with a young girl who was betrayed by one Stuart Capel. His sister Marjorie, who loves Dick, the poor girl's brother, determines to teach her brother and her arrogant father a lesson and deliberately attempts to compromise herself with Dick.

The results of her step here are shown with the utmost interest on the screen. Mr. Harcourt has developed the plot largely as a farce although the vitality of the basic theme gives no cause for a lack of interest. And the reality of the whole thing, the bond of sympathy between the two women, and Marjorie's efforts, so funny and so successful, to restore to her her place in the sun, make the whole film one of the most unusual that has been seen on the screen. Laughs and deep human interest permeate the five reels from first to last.

The roles of the play are all very capably taken. Margaret Blanche as the betrayed girl, Malcolm Sherry as her brother, Lydia Billbrooke as Marjorie, Reginald Owen as Stuart, and Lynston Lyle as Sir John Capel make the principal figures real flesh and blood people.

Rosie and her brother, Dick Blair, are tenants on the Capel estate in England. Sir John Capel is an old autocrat who lives with his daughter, Marjorie, and his son, Stuart. Love affairs of different nature progress between the two poor tenants and the children of their employer. Dick is whole-heartedly in love with Marjorie and, inspired by her, departs to London to see whether the field of fiction holds any place for him. And while he is away, Rosie and Stuart see more of each other and on one summer's evening the wild youth and the trusting girl venture to fields far from the conventional.

In time Dick, his success and fortune won, sends for Rosie and it does not take him long to discover the something is the matter with his little sister. Pressing her, he learns of the escapade with Stuart. In high dudgeon he goes to the Capel town residence and demands that justice be done so that his sister may resume her "place in the sun." Sir John will hear nothing of it, although Stuart is repentant. Marjorie, however, develops a great pity for the sister of the man she loves and decides that she will teach her father and brother a lesson.

That night she secrets herself in Dick's rooms and succeeds, gloriously succeeds, in compromising herself with him. When her father and brother enter they are horror-struck, at least the former is. Stuart had come to find Rosie and to offer her marriage and he sees through the trick. Of course, after this lesson Sir John offers no resistance to his son's marriage. Rosie resumes her place in the sun and the dual romance ends happily.

She had done nothing wrong but society had deprived her of her place in the sun. Her brother demanded it back for her and the man who had the power to restore it refused. But see how success finally came to brother and sister in "A Place in the Sun."

Do you hold your rightful place in the sun? See "A Place in the Sun" and find out.

The story of a girl who WANTED to be compromised! See "A Place in the Sun."

A dual romance laid against beautiful English backgrounds that will charm you with its originality and beauty. See "A Place in the Sun."

She lost her place in the sun through no fault of her own. When she asked for it back society refused it—why? See "A Place in the Sun."

PROGRAM READER

Cyril Harcourt, author of many a Broadway success, contributed the play, "A Place in the Sun," on which the picture of that name which will shortly be shown at this theatre is based. Followers of Mr. Harcourt's career will be only too glad to learn this. Several of his plays have been produced on the screen and with great success in the past. A notable one is "A Pair of Silk Stockings," in which Constance Talmadge appeared. The plot of ' A Place in the Sun" deals with a dual love affair. The principals of one of the romances have loved well but not wisely and when the girl's brother goes to the boy's father and demands that his son take the step (the marital step) that will restore his sister's place in the sun to her, the old gentleman is arrogant to the extreme. So his daughter, who loves the poor girl's brother, determines to teach her father a lesson and deliberately sets out to compromise herself with the man she loves! Naturally the film takes a farcical turn here and all the situations are handled in the expert style of Harcourt. The picture was produced in England and presents five of the most popular players there in the principal roles of the story.

SUGGESTIONS

You should be able to create considerable interest in this picture by playing up the title as it is played up here in the first argument in the catch lines. In other words, shroud your title with a little mystery. Don't give the impression that the picture is a mystery play—but make readers of your announcements and advertisements ask themselves "What is a place in the sun?" With this interest stimulated they will naturally want to see the picture and find out the answer to their self-put question.

The decorative part of advertisements should be originally worked out, developing the title in any original style you may see fit, in the illustrations. It's a title that lends itself well to this sort of advertising and the most should be made of it.

"A Place in the Sun" is Cyril Harcourt's most recent play. This author is extensively known in this country, and the success that previous works of his have won on the screen has established him in the moving picture world. Use his name in connection with all advertising that you do.

State that the picture was produced in England and that any number of pretty rural scenes are included in the five reels. You can praise this end of the picture all you want, for its scenic content is superb.

"AFTER HIS OWN HEART"—METRO

Good Farce Idea Basis of Latest Hale Hamilton Picture

THERE is a very fine farce idea in "After His Own Heart," an idea which has been well developed by the producers after the introductory episodes have been passed over. This idea shows itself when the hero finds that he has been trapped by an unscrupulous doctor who plans cutting his heart out and handing it over to a rich old millionaire. The doctor doesn't hold out any high hopes for the gentleman's recovery and hence the various scenes between the hero and his captors have a high comedy value. It is these scenes that make "After His Own Heart" worth while.

Hale Hamilton, as might be expected, shows a fine appreciation of the possibilities of his role and derives the utmost from it. The other players, with Naomi Childers leading them, take their parts seriously.

It is not an uncommon fault with this star's pictures that they are slow in getting started. The early scenes are held too long and the detail introduced is tiring. If "After His Own Heart" had been treated as a farce from first to last it would be well nigh perfect. Even as it stands, however, it brings a goodly number of laughs.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 28.—Peter Milne.

CATCH LINES

The doctor wanted to pay Thomas a quarter of a million for his heart—but didn't hold out much chance for his recovery! Thomas wanted to give his heart away to Sally for nothing! How peculiar and wasteful mere man is when he's in love! The peculiarities of his fellow will strike your funny bone square. See "After His Own Heart" and enjoy a real laugh.

Thomas' wanted to give his heart away and these people wanted to buy it!

PRESS NOTICE

Hale Hamilton, the popular Metro comedian, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest picture, entitled "After His Own Heart." This is an adaptation of a story by Ben Ames Williams which appeared in a recent issue of All Story Weekly. Mr. Hamilton has the role of a gentleman of leisure, Thomas Wentworth Duncan by name, whose fortune suddenly disappeared. Not being at all used to work, Duncan has not much of an idea what to do until he receives a note offering him 5250,000 if he will agree to put himself in charge of certain parties.

His financial plight makes him forget all about his better judgment if, indeed, he ever had any, and he straightway puts himself in charge of the parties. What is his surprise, then, to discover that the head party is a doctor who plans taking his heart and putting it in the body of an old man! Duncan, in return, is to get the old man's heart as well as the bonus—but the doctor doesn't hold out much chance of his recovery.

Of course this situation, gruesome as it may appear on the surface, is developed with fine regard for its farcical possibilities by the producers. And Mr. Hamilton gets the most from the role of Duncan. His expressions are revelations in humor, while the various situations in which he appears have been builded with a keen eye for their humorous value. Mr. Hamilton is supported by such competent players as Naomi Childers, William V. Mong and Harry Carter, while the production was in charge of Harry L. Franklin.

PROGRAM READER

First Thomas Wentworth Duncan's fortune was taken from him by foul means and then a certain party went after his heart! And it wasn't a lady either. Thomas had very distinct ideas about giving his heart away. Sally was going to get it when he had retrieved his fortune. But here was this severe Doctor Spleen talking about cutting the pump from his body! He was to receive $250,000 for it provided he lived to tell the tale. And Thomas didn't want to take the chance. But he was the doctor's captive and was guarded by a giant and a smaller gentleman who neither spoke nor heard. The predicament that Thomgas found himself in was ridiculously serious. He might have laughed at it himself if he hadn't known that the doctor was serious to the extreme. But, miserable though it may seem to laugh at other people's troubles, you'll have to admit that Thomas' position is one of the most humorous positions you've seen. You will find him and his troubles in the new Metro picture entitled "After His Own Heart," which will shortly be shown at this theatre. Hale Hamilton is the star and derives the utmost in humor from his role.

THE STORY

Thomas Wentworth Duncan, gentleman of leisure, suddenly discovers that he is left penniless and that the aspect of cruel work stares him in the fact. It is particularly aggravating, inasmuch as he has just fallen in love with Sally Reeves and Sally is accustomed to everything that money can buy. On returning to his rooms after a dance Duncan finds a note asking him whether he would like to make $250,000. The thought of the money proves equal to the task of overcoming his qualms as to the mysteriousness of the proposition, and the next day he takes his place in a luxurious limousine and is driven to ——

Dr. Spleen's hospital! Dr. Spleen is something of a fanatic, but the world hails his successful adventures in the field of medical science while the earth carefully covers up his failures in their graves. His present idea is to transplant Duncan's perfectly good young heart into the body of Judah P. Corpus, Sally's rich uncle, replacing it with the aged pump of Judah's. As Dr. Spleen doesn't hold out high hopes for Duncan's recovery from the operation, his position is not in the least conducive to complete peace of mind. He strives in various ways to get out but it always hauled back to his room by Goliath, a man twice his size.

Eventually, though, Duncan gets word to Sally —and then the next thing he knows he's taken to the operating table! The next morning he awakes in his own apartment—still in possession of his heart. Sally tells him that Dr. Spleen died just before the operation and that her uncle thinks that it has been performed. And then Duncan's fortune returns to him and Sally takes his heart. There was a conspiracy to take it away from him after all!

SUGGESTIONS

"After His Own Heart" is a good title to play on. A number of clever advertisements could be written around it, advertisements that play on it both in words and pictures and which, as a consequence, will stand out as something different from the usual routine announcement. Probably the exhibitors who play this picture will be able to get up such advertisements in their own style. There are certainly so many various and obvious ways in which they can be written that to give space to them here is superfluous.

Don't by any chance infer from the story that the picture has a gruesome touch. The theme is treated from the farce angle and unfolds many laughs without giving any ugly thrills. Play Hale Hamilton up big. In the stellar role of Duncan he gets the most from it and gives a performance that your people are bound to enjoy. You might say a few words about him being once of the best farce actors of the day.

You might find good use for Naomi Childers' name in your advertising. She is a well known leading woman and has recently appeared in a number of Metro pictures. If you have run them your people certainly know her.

"THE ROAD CALLED STRAIGHT"— BETZWOOD-GOLDWYN

Bennison's Tricks and Personality Show to Good Advantage

LOUIS BENNISON'S efforts to appear at ease in society account for a generous portion of comedy in "The Road Called Straight" and there is sufficient human appeal in the story's makeup to warrant it being called a comedy-drama. It brings the cowboy out of the West again and plants him down as the wife of a society girl who only married him for his money. But before the last reel is done he has convinced her that he is the only man for her.

Mr. Bennison has a manner all his own. His restless shift from one foot to another when he discards the togs of the plains for the clothes of conventional society and moves himself from the West to the East, is worked to good advantage. But he has more than just this trick. He has a winning personality and an ability to put over comedy—and original comedy at that—in a style of his own.

In "The Road Called Straight" he receives good support from Ormi Hawley, Henry Mortimer and John Daly Murphy. It seems rather a pity that we couldn't have had more of Mr. Murphy. He is such a competent comedian that he deserves much in the way of a part.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 20.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

Louis Bennison, the star of Betzwood pictures which are released through Goldwyn, the star who came into nation-wide popularity over night through his performance in his first picture, "Oh Johnny," returns again to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in his latest film production entitled "The Road Called Straight." Written by Wilson Bayley and produced under the direction of Ira M. Lowry, "The Road Called Straight" offers Mr. Bennison the role of a congenial ranch-owner who comes East to marry Betty Swiftmore, daughter of a business acquaintance, who is in financial difficulties. Betty only consents to the marriage to please her father but before the picture is done, he manages to convince her that he is a man despite his inability to wear fashionable clothes.

The picture contains abundance comedy introduced by Bennison during his first days in stiff clothes and society. The star has an air all his own and his ability to get the most from a comedy situation, combined with his clean and breezy personality, are things that unite to make him one of the best-liked stars on the screen today despite the short time he has been appearing in pictures.

Mr. Bennison receives support of an unusually high order from Ormi Hawley as Betty, from Henry Mortimer as the heavy and from John Daly Murphy as a comedy butler. The picture contains a variety of scenery, part of the action taking place in the West and part in the luxurious rooms of a fashionable residence.

PROGRAM READER

The cowboy in the East! What a romantic figure he is, this despite his awkwardness in conventional clothing, his inability to compose himself in a ball room full of people. He has been with us many times on the screen, this cowboy, and he has had many different interpreters but he still manages to interest us. Louis Bennison is the latest screen star to bring him to life. And he does so with what bids fair to be the best performance of its kind in the recently completed Betzwood-Goldwyn picture entitled "The Road Called Straight," which is shortly to be shown at this theatre. The comedy that Mr. Bennison manages to derive from the part, comedy the result of original business, not the cut-and-dried conventional tricks of the average actor, can not easily be measured in cold type. But suffice it that his ability as a comedian, combined with his pleasant appearance and his clean and breezy personality, serve to make the five reels of "The Road Called Straight" enjoyable indeed. The story was written for him by Wilson Bayley and produced under the direction of Ira Lowry, while prominent in the supporting cast are Ormi Hawley, Henry Mortimer and John Daly Murphy.

THE STORY

Al Boyd, western cattle king, marries Betty Swiftmore, daughter of an eastern financial man whose business has gone against him. Betty only consents to the marriage to pull her father out of the hole, for Al fails to come up to her idea of a gentleman even though he proved interesting when she met him in the West. When he arrives in city clothes—clothes in which he is more ill-at-ease than ever, Betty doesn't take any the more kindly to him. Harrison Stevens, the man Betty supposes she loves, takes Al in charge, but he has a sinister purpose.

On the day of his wedding he notifies the police that Al is the kidnapper they have been searching for for some time past. It seems that on the train East he had obliged by holding a woman's baby. She had gotten off the train for milk and had failed to catch it when it moved on. And so, in her excitement, she has called him a kidnapper. Al manages to beat up two healthy police officers and arrives at his wedding much bedraggled and torn but nevertheless the ceremony is gone through with. The honeymoon proves to be a honeyless affair, however, as Betty refuses to permit her husband to come anywhere near her.

On their return Harrison shows Betty a letter written Al from the apologetic mother thanking him for all he did for her and her baby. He misrepresents her husband and persuades her to accompany him to his mountain lodge where, he says, his mother and sister are staying. But when they are arrived there they find no other members of the family. Harrison attacks her and she is only saved by the appearance of Al who has followed. Betty again tries to be cold to her husband but this time she finds it an impossible task.

SUGGESTIONS

The theme of this picture, the cowboy coming from the West to be more or less embarrassed by the effete East, is nothing new, but if you manage to get some of the Louis Bennison personality into your copy you should have an attractive advertisement. Use descriptive lines that convey the clean, breezy character that Bennison plays and if you employ sketches or pictures, select those which best bring out these elements in the principal character.

The title lends itself well to illustrative advertising, but if you develop it in any picture, be sure not to give the idea that it adorns a melodramatic story as it might suggest. Always dwell on the comedy and the star's personality and ability.

"JUST SQUAW"

Louis Bennison in a scene with Ormi Hawley
vents men of different races meeting on an equal footing. Why not concentrate upon this idea and use it for your leaders, giving just enough of the story to create interest? The catch lines have been written with this object in mind. One or two to start with and elaborated with a brief synopsis which gives just so much of the plot and no more will suffice in making the picture known.

The title is a good one and carries advertising value of its own. You might play it up, for it is highly significant. And, of course, such a picture as this "western" suggests a lobby display for those of you who go in for a decorative scheme. Indian curios, blankets, and other things pertaining to the customs of the red man could be effectively used. But the best plan to our mind is to exploit the story as a dashing western article of the days when men fought hard, drank hard, and loved for all it was worth.

Bring out that the picture marks Beatriz Michelena's return to the screen after a long absence. The fans in your audience will recognize her as the heroine of many a thrilling story. They will remember her in the pictures of a few seasons ago, namely, "Salomy Jane," "The Unwritten Law" and "The Woman Who Dared." Her successful "come-back," the title and the story should bring home the bacon.

"THE BEST MAN"—HAMPTON-HODKINSON

J. Warren Kerrigan Stars in Mystery Story Flavored with Romance

ONE of those mystery tales, found so plentifully in the fiction magazines, has been selected to fit J. Warren Kerrigan's personality and that he is able to assume the identity of a Secret Service agent is proof positive that his screen expression has enlarged. Time was when he couldn't appear except at his romantic best, but now he seems to be going in for character roles. And he is able to get away with them in a manner of speaking.

Reminded by the chief to let nothing hinder him in his recovery of a secret code, he hotfoots it to the metropolis, accomplishes his mission, and before he knows it he has jumped into the very jaws of matrimony. That he doesn't know the bride makes no difference. Nothing must hinder him. And marriage is the only way out.

This seems like a far-fetched story, but so ingeniously has it been treated that it never once strains credulity. There is a clarity in the unfolding that makes the action entirely discernible, and the various heightened scenes are arranged with fine sequence. A story of invention in every sense of the word with nothing machine made about it. The director has kept the characterization sound and the plot logical and has reinforced it with human touches.

The picture covers a lot of ground but doesn't fall to pieces in its journey. A railroad train is the real thing. In fact there are very few studio devices present. This semblance of reality reveals artistic guidance on Mr. Hampton's part. Every detail is in place and every character well done. Lois Wilson's attractive personality is finely set off in the opposite role. R. D. MacLean, Bert Appling, and Alfred Whitman appear to advantage.—Length, 5 reels.—Released May 4.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

J. Warren Kerrigan, the popular star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest feature entitled "The Best Man." The part of the resourceful Secret Service agent is singularly fitted to the personality of the star, and he make a likable as well as a commanding figure in the humorous and dramatic scenes of the picture. "The Best Man" may be defined as a comedy melodrama, if there is such a thing in the theatrical dictionary. Throughout the five reels tense scenes and situations are counterbalanced with unique humorous interludes, which contrast, of course, gives the feature an excellent balance.

The idea presents a young detective who is commissioned by his employer to recover valuable papers that have been stolen by a gang of international crooks. It is no great trouble to fulfil his task, but in accomplishing it he never suspected that it would lead him into matrimony. The chief had requested him to let nothing stand in his way—not even marriage if it led to the capture of the thieves. In making his escape he stumbled into a church just in time for a happy little marriage ceremony. He didn't know the bride from Eve, but she thought him her fiance who had come all the way from England to marry her. And the worse part of it—the intended bridegroom was the head of the crooks.

The action shifted from Washington via New York via Pittsburgh, and in the merry chase the honeymooners were nearly captured by the pursuing thieves. But the long arm of the law swooped down on the culprits, and the bridal couple discovered that they were deeply in love. Mr. Kerrigan receives good support from Lois Wilson, Alfred Whitman, Clyde Benson, R. D. MacLean, and others.

Cyril Gordon, a member of the U. S. Secret Service, is commissioned with the task of recovering certain papers that have been stolen by the Holmans, a gang of international crooks. The thieves have sent for their London man, Burnham, to decipher the code, and it devolves upon Gordon to recover the papers and save the precious contents from being known. As the Holmans have never seen their English representative, it becomes easy for the Government agent to assume his disguise and trick the crooks completely.

Danger lurks ahead for Gordon when he accomplishes his mission, and at the advice of the chief to let nothing hinder him, he escapes temporarily from their clutches by becoming the bridegroom at a wedding. The girl he marries is betrothed to Burnham, whom she has known for fifteen years as George Hayne, although unaware of his nefarious occupation. So the ceremony is performed, regardless of the fact that Gordon doesn't know the bride. Anything to escape and marriage offers the only chance!

During the honeymoon, which takes the bridal party to Washington, the wife, still ignorant of her husband's identity, upbraids him for his blackmailing tactics that led her into matrimony. And Gordon is unable to vindicate himself and tell his real name until he is safe from the crooks who have pursued them in the journey. Explanations follow eventually and the bride accepts her husband with the deepest love and devotion for being resourceful enough to substitute himself for her villainous fiance.

CATCH LINES

Mystery, adventure and romance are woven together in J. Warren Kerrigan's new picture, "The Best Man." Isn't such a mixture of elements sufficient to entertain? We think so—that's why we've booked it for the ——— theatre next week.

How would you like to be sent on a dangerous mission and forced to marry a girl you never saw before so that the task is accomplished? That's what faced J. Warren Kerrigan. A Secret Service agent, his chief said to him: "Let nothing hinder you!" To recover the papers spelled danger, but matrimony was easier than being caught by the thieves.

She was waiting for the bridegroom to appear, but she didn't know that he was unable to be present for his own ceremony. She hadn't seen him in fifteen years, so when the detective sought refuge in the church, the bride-in-waiting mistook him for her intended husband. So they were married. A delicious situation, isn't it? Yet there are many more just like it in this exciting Kerrigan picture.

SUGGESTIONS

The name of J. Warren Kerrigan looks like the best advertising bet here, inasmuch as he is one of the oldest players in point of service upon the screen. His years before the camera have established him as a favorite and his pictures are usually followed with keen interest. So the best tip is to play up his personality in publicity stories and photographs. Next to the star the most important thing to exploit is the fact that his vehicle presents a detective story—something new for him indeed. Use phrasing as colorful as possible in describing the U. S. Secret Service agent that he impersonates. He is one of those sleuths that always gets his man despite all obstacles. Bring out the danger that is constantly in front of him and also adventure. The big situation could be utilized in a humorous way, as the hero is confronted with the alternative of either marrying a girl, who is a total stranger, or run the risk of being captured and probably murdered.

It is a fast moving story and a good thing of its kind, and the scenes switch half-way across the continent. So you are able to gather some effective word arguments from the characterization and the variety of the scenes. The catch lines might come in handy in your scheme of exploitation, being written expressly for your copy.

"MISS ADVENTURE"—FOX

Highly Adventurous Tale of the Sea and Fisher Folk

PEGGY HYLAND had her work cut out for her in "Miss Adventure," if one may judge by the stunts she was forced to go through. This dainty Fox star a stunt actress? Impossible you would say, still it's true. Through her ability as an athlete she has qualified to appear in any picture that employs stunts—say a serial for instance. "Miss Adventure" is almost a serial so kaleidoscopic are its scenes, though it is not episodic in any way. Its shining light is Peggy Hyland's athletic versatility for she is called upon to sink or swim, fight or run, and every other scheme she practises, so it seems, toward the art of self-preservation.

It is an interesting number, this "Miss Adventure." Being a tale of the sea all the accustomed ingredients are properly incorporated. Adventure? To be sure. And pathos, sympathy, superstition, intolerance, hate, love, jealousy and forbearance are there lending contrast and conflict. Incongruities and theatrical conventionalities are happily missing, which, of course, makes the picture fairly true to life if one can forget its fanciful flight at times.

Miss Hyland is rescued from a mutinous crew by a cabin boy, placed in a cask for protection which is dumped upon a smuggler's boat, and eventually released and adopted by an old sea captain. Years elapse but adventure still pursues her. It takes a villainous turn when a young scamp attempts to do away with her. Undaunted she becomes a feminine Crusoe on a deserted island and there it is that adventure develops romantically when the cabin boy, grown to man's estate, comes and takes her away.

The atmosphere of the story is admirably brought out and contributes a note of genuineness to the picture. In Miss Hyland's support are Lewis Sargent, Frank Brownlee, Edward Burns, George Hernandez and George Webb. All are good types and all do splendid work. Lynn Reynolds adapted and directed the feature.—Length, 5 reels. —Released May 4.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Photography by J. Dev Jennings.

SUGGESTIONS

Probably the best feature to play up in this film is the fact that Peggy Hyland is something of an athlete. Most fans are acquainted with her work, which has been characterized in the past by a quietness of method. She has been known as one of the screen's dainty stars. Here she will surprise people in the way that she carries out adventure, so the best plan looks like the angle of advertising her as appearing in a different kind of role. She has a large following and a spread or two for ad copy will interest her friends. You might mention that she has been identified upon the English stage in musical comedy.

The story carries its possibilities too. It being a tale of the sea and fisher-folk you can bring out salient points in the plot. The catch lines can be used as teasers and will arouse curiosity. The sense of adventure which nearly everyone possesses will lure the picturegoers, and the title has its advertising value. Make mention that the picture has thrills in abundance and a fine vein of romance.

Peggy Hyland, the vivacious young Fox star, will be seen at the ——— theatre in her latest picture, "Miss Adventure," on ——— of ——— week. This is a story of the sea and was written for the star by J. Anthony Roach and produced under the direction of Lynn Reynolds. A word is due Mr. Reynolds' fine work in this special instance. Always noted as a director the detail of whose pictures is ever realistic, he has in "Miss Adventure" quite surpassed all of his former efforts. He has done some cracking good pictures of the sea previously and he has shown how well he knows his subject by these. Is it any wonder, then, that "Miss Adventure" stands as one of the best stories of the high seas and the little towns that kiss its shores that has ever been produced?

As for Miss Hyland, the role of Jane, the castaway daughter of a wealthy banker, fits her admirably well. Growing up in a seacoast town Jane becomes at once the tomboy and the pet of the village, the very apple of her adopted father's eye. Her romances, her adventures are all interesting to the extreme, so cleverly have they been handled by the author and director.

Miss Hyland derives good support from a competent cast of Fox players, chief among which are George Hernandez, Edward Burns, Frank Brownlee, George Webb and Alice Mason.

While traveling by schooner to San Francisco with his little daughter, Jane, Basil Cavanaugh becomes involved in the mutiny of the crew and is mortally injured. Before dying he entrusts the child to the care of a cabin boy, Dickie Hamilton, with instructions to deliver her to a San Francsco banker and receive a handsome reward. During the journey the schooner meets a fishing boat owned by Bog Nichols, a smuggler, and contraband goods are exchanged. Jane is secreted in one of the kegs that are given to Nichols and when he discovers her eventually, a chance is offered him to gain the reward.

On arriving at the pier, Bog is placed under arrest by revenue officers and Captain Barth, who is present at the time, is so affected by the plight of Jane that he adopts her. Fourteen years pass by and the girl is the tomboy of the village and the pride of the old man's heart. His nephew, Albert Barth, realizing that Jane will share equally with him in the Captain's will, attempts to discredit her, but is unsuccessful until Bog escapes from prison. Using him as a tool, Albert conceives a plan to eliminate Jane by giving her an adventurous cruise on the convict's boat. They are well out at sea when the smuggler falls overboard and is drowned and the boat drifts to a desolate island.

Hamilton, the former cabin boy and now a prosperous business man, happens to spy her while cruising nearby and effects her rescue. When young Barth learns that Jane is an heiress in her own right he wins her over to his plan of elopement. But it is never carried out. Hamilton comes upon the scene and effects her rescue the second time. Thus the former playmates are reunited.

PROGRAM READER

There are directors and directors and mayhap the public pays little attention to which one directed which picture. There are some, however, who are noted for the particular class of work they turn out and whose name stands for the best in that particular class. Such a director is Lynn Reynolds, who produced the latest Fox picture, starring Peggy Hyland and entitled "Miss Adventure," which will be seen at this theatre shortly. Mr. Reynolds, it may be said, is noted for two varieties of pictures, in which he shines. One is the story of the southern mountains; the other is a story of the sea. "Miss Adventure" belongs to this latter class. It is a picture that fairly exudes the salt of the ocean and its little seacoast villages. Atmosphere and detail have been attended to with a fine regard for realistic effect, with the result that "Miss Adventure" stands as a little epic of the films. The story by J. Anthony Roach gives Miss Hyland a good role which she handles capably, while among those appearing in her support are George Hernandez, Frank Brownlee, Edward Burns, George Webb and Alice Mason.

CATCH LINES

She was an orphan of the sea and she grew up to comfort her adopted father. But she had an adventurous turn of mind and ran away one day. Did her escapade result in a romance? See Peggy Hyland in "Miss Adventure."

Her adopted father's nephew attempted to get her out of the way and would have succeeded but for——. We cannot tell you, it would spoil the story.

Peggy Hyland in a story of the sea and its quaint people—a piquant actress in an engrossing play.

She was left in the care of a cabin boy and he saw to it that she was concealed in a cask. Years passed, the little girl grew up the tomboy of a fishing village, and the friends of childhood days didn't meet until they found themselves on a deserted island. Then the romance was renewed. It is all told prettily in "Miss Adventure."

A girl of the sea, she believed in adventure and found it. Did it turn out happily? See Peggy Hyland in her newest Fox picture.

Her father was killed by a mutinous crew and she was secreted in a cask by a cabin boy. The cask found its way to a fishing boat and the girl found her way to the heart of an old sea captain. With such eventful occurrences in her life is it any wonder that she was called Miss Adventure?

Peggy Hyland Delivering a Gentle Upper-cut in "Miss Adventure"

"THE STRONGER VOW"—GOLDWYN

Geraldine Farrar in Picture with Spanish Background

"THE STRONGER VOW" offers Geraldine Farrar the role of a Spanish beauty, Dolores de Cordova. The lady has taken an oath to avenge the foul murder of her brother and is told on her wedding night that the guilty man is her husband. Of course the wrong has really been done by the villain and he is finally apprehended in regular film style.

By comparison with Miss Farrar's former Goldwyn pictures, "The Stronger Vow" pales. The situation of the woman vowing to kill a man, this man eventually winning her love, is rather conventional, but even so it possesses possibilities. In this instance, however, the purpose of the author in bringing these two together is so plain that there is no real sustaining interest to carry the action along.

The picture is marked by a number of colorful settings, a Spanish carnival at its height, and the costumes are picturesque. Miss Farrar's performance is creditable, but she does not appear at her best as far as looks go. Tom Santschi and Milton Sills again appear in her support.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 27.—Peter Milne.

PROGRAM READER

The romance of Dolores and Juan had been touched with the glamour of the real olden days. From the moment they first laid eyes on one another at the carnival in Spain until the day of their marriage in the stately church in Paris, their lives had been successions of adventures of the most thrilling sort. The wedding feast was in progress, gayety was at its height, their friends were wishing them happiness and long life—even Pedro, the discarded suitor, seemed to rise to the occasion as he raised his glass to his lips and proposed a toast to the bride and groom. Dolores was supremely happy at that moment, but at the next her happiness seemed dashed to a thousand little bits! It was something Pedro told her in secret about Juan. It was something she could never forgive, never! She had taken her oath on that—but she never dreamed that Juan, her beloved husband, could be the man! What was this that Pedro whispered into her astonished, agonized ears? It is revealed in the resounding climax of "The Stronger Vow," the latest Goldwyn picture starring Geraldine Farrar, which will be shown here shortly. It is laid in old Spain and Paris, and is a production of the utmost artistry from every one of its angles. Milton Sills is seen as Juan, while Thomas Santschi appears as Pedro. Don't miss "The Stronger Vow."

PRESS NOTICE

Geraldine Farrar, the Goldwyn favorite, will be seen again at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest production entitled "The Stronger Vow." This is a picture with a Spanish setting, and affords the famous actress the role of a beautiful Senorita who takes a vow to avenge her brother's murder by meting out a similar fate to the guilty man. In her hunt for the man she is misguided by a cousin who desires to make her his own, with the result that on her wedding night he informs her that her husband is the murderer. She is horror-struck at the thought of what she has done. The question then arises which vow she shall carry through—the "love, honor and obey" of the altar or the oath of vengeance which she took over her dead brother's body. But at the last moment, a moment when it seems as if happiness would never be hers, the villainy of her cousin is exposed and all ends for the best.

Miss Farrar appears to striking advantage in the star part, and has the benefit of excellent assisting performances rendered by Milton Sills as the husband and Thomas Santschi as the cousin. The story was written by Isola Forrester, the well-known novelist, while it was produced under the direction of Reginald Barker. The five reels contain a number of picturesque Spanish settings, peopled with hundreds of supernumeraries in native costume. The carnival scenes are a veritable delight. The whole picture, in fact, is endowed with a production that reaches the heights of artistry.

In a Spanish city a carnival is at its height and Dolores De Cordova, daughter of a long line of illustrious ancestors, joins in the general gayety. During the festivities she meets and is attracted by Juan Estudillo, representative of an equally famous Spanish family. But these families have long been at swords' points with one another. Even the passing generations have failed to heal wounds a hundred years old. Neither Dolores nor Juan learns the other's identity and they part to linger on the happy memories of the day. In a quarrel Dolores' brother, Jose, is killed by his cousin, Pedro Toral. He fastens the crime on Juan and Dolores takes a vow to mete out vengeance to him.

The scene then shifts to Paris, where Dolores is living as the adopted daughter of an aunt. Juan, through his great work in the Secret Service, has been made a Marquis, and is in Paris hunting down an evil band of Apaches of which Pedro is the leader. Again the lovers meet and fail to learn their real identities because of the change in names. Juan woos Dolores and they are married. After the ceremony Pedro informs his cousin of the true identity of her husband. She is horror-struck and turns from him.

Later Dolores is made captive by Pedro's band and Juan is lured to their den by a trick. Pedro has worked Dolores up to the point where she is willing to kill her husband, but the police invade the place just in time, and with their coming the truth is made clear regarding Pedro's plot. So husband and wife ultimately find happiness with one another after the troublesome Pedro has departed from their lives for good and all.

CATCH LINES

At one moment she was supremely happy with her husband—it was the wedding feast and everyone was wishing them long life and happiness. At the next moment she had turned cold. She had heard something regarding her husband that she could never forgive! What was it? See "The Stronger Vow."

A picture laid in old Spain—as beautiful and romantic as any castles in the air you ever builded—see Geraldine Farrar in "The Stronger Vow."

She found that her vow of vengeance had to be carried out on the husband she adored! See "The Stronger Vow."

Which is the stronger? The vow at the marriage altar or the vow of vengeance? See "The Stronger Vow."

A picture laid in the land of true romance—Spain.

SUGGESTIONS

In advertising this story lay particular stress on the locale—Spain—and the beauty and color of its scenes. Play up the title and follow it up with catch lines repeating the two vows, the marriage vow and the oath of vengeance. The first catch line printed elsewhere on this page also plays up a good advertising point, as it arouses an interest in the story. The same idea is elaborated in the Program Reader. These seem to be the proper angle for you to follow in presenting the pictures to your patrons.

Those concerned in the production and the supporting members of the cast are also worthy of attention, as their work on previous Goldwyn pictures has attracted favorable attention.

"THE RED LANTERN"

bidden City and the tragedy that is enacted within its ancient walls.

And Nazimova as an Eurasian, through whose veins courses the blood of mixed races so that there is an eternal conflict of soul, will hold you spellbound with the artistry of her impersonation. You will see her in a dual role which is as widely different as the two poles, and when you leave the theatre we feel sure that you will exclaim, "There is an actress!" "There is a motion picture!" "The Red Lantern" contains everything that makes a big photoplay. It has a fine pictorial appeal brought out in vivid and colorful backgrounds, and a fascinating story that is logically told and capably acted. If you are looking for rare entertainment, we advise you not to miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a picture which presents so many angles for exploitation that if you only concentrated upon one of them it should fill your coffers to the brim. It has been heralded far and wide so that the mere suggestion that you will present it at your theatre on a specified date is sufficient to attract patronage. Yet on the other hand the advertising possibilities of the production are so great that they should be utilized, if for no other reason than that an opportunity like this one doesn't come every day. The picture is so impressive, so spectacular, and so extraordinary in tone and quality that it should be exploited fully two weeks before it is shown. Exploitation suggestions will be found in the Special Service Section elsewhere in this issue.

HARRISON'S EXHIBITOR REVIEWS

"For Better, For Worse"—DeMille-Artcraft

IF good cast, flawless direction, sharp and distinct photography that is most pleasing to the eye, lavish settings, pretty women's dresses, or the most careful treatment in general:—if the combination of all these elements is what makes your patrons form a favorable opinion of a picture, irrespective of the sort of emotions the story may appeal to, then "For Better, For Worse" is an excellent attraction, because it possesses all these elements at their best. They have been handled as only Mr. De Mille knows how—but if the impression the story leaves behind is what counts the most, then it may be considered as having fallen wide of its mark, because such impression is sad and leaves the spectator in an unhappy frame of mind.

To begin with, the story, at the very start, fastens itself on a feature that is weak and shaky. Following this are other features, which, from an entertaining angle, may be considered fully as weak or more so, as they are repulsive to a great many.

One of the bad features and one that might be looked upon with joy by Germans and by their sympathizers, is the utilization by an American soldier of a church steeple as an observation post.

In the crumbling of the steeple, after a sever bombardment, one of the principal characters is caught in—he is badly injured, his right arm and the left side of his face being badly crushed. Later on, his face is repaired and his arm replaced with a wooden one. Although the crushed face is never shown to the spectator, while in a mangled shape, the implication nevertheless is so strong that the effect it has upon the mind is none the less realistic; and after it is mended and healed, it looks too hideous.

With the exception of Mr. Griffith, Mr. DeMille is the one other director whose name means something to the picture going public; so, as far as this picture drawing the crowds for you is concerned, if you have played his other attractions and have pulled the crowds, there is no reason why this one should not do the same thing. Released April 27. Length, 7 reels.

"A Place in the Sun"—Triangle

"A PLACE in the Sun" was produced in Great Britain. As Compared to other British product, this picture is as good as any ever placed on the American market. The cast is excellent; the direction, as well as the continuity, first class; while the photography, with the exception of a few scenes, is sharp and distinct.

The story was taken from the book by Cyril Harcourt; it follows the usual lines of British novel construction, wherein men of rank and fortune fall in love with pretty girls of poor circumstances, and vice versa. In this instance, a love union results between the principals, a wealthy young man and a poor but pretty girl. To the distracted brother of the girl, the hero states that he loves his sister sincerely, but as his father will disinherit him if he marries her, and as he admits he is incapable of supporting her were he to be thus cut off, he is averse in doing so, lest they both suffer from poverty. The kind-hearted sister of the lover, however, purposely compromises herself with the brother of the girl, thus compelling the obstinate father to consent to her brother's union with his sweetheart. In the end, she also marries the brother of the girl, whom she secretly loved all the while.

Although the subject is of a delicate nature, the resultant picture is not "raw," because it has been handled with care; contrary to the press sheet that is to be furnished you by the distributors, however, there is not a single comedy situation in it, that element having been lost in the translation. Released May 4. Length, 5 reels.

"The Rescuing Angel"—Paramount

YOUR patrons will no doubt derive more enjoyment out of this picture than they have yet derived out of any of Miss Shirley Mason's past contributions. It is a light comedy drama of the most pleasing sort, wherein humor, action of plot, and human appeal, are cleverly interweaved all through the play.

A daughter's sacrifice of her happiness in order to save her bankrupt father, forms the foundation of the plot; it has been taken from the stage play of the same name by Clare Krummer. The heroine gives up her youthful lover and marries a wealthy man; but when the husband finds out that she married him for his money, becomes enraged and prepares to sue for a divorce. In the end, however, he finds out that her motive was praiseworthy, and that she really loves him; so they again become reconciled.

"The Rescuing Angel" should prove suitable for any audience, high or low brow.—Released April 6.—Length, 5 Reels.

"After His Own Heart"—Metro

THE originality of the story, as well as the various pleasurable elements, such as suspense, comedy, surprise, etc., that have been cleverly interwoven in it, make this picture a first class entertainment. The comedy element predominates.

The hero, now impoverished, finds a letter on his desk, advising him, if he wants to make a quarter of a million dollars easy money, to follow a certain person who is to call on him the next day. At the appointed time he follows the stranger, and is conducted to a famous surgeon's. There he is informed that his heart is to be removed and grafted on an old man, replacing it with the old man's heart. At the querry of the hero whether he has performed such an operation before, the doctor answers he had,—on two dogs, but they had both died.

As the picture deals with doctors and operations, you might take it for granted that the subject is gruesome; there is not one situation in it that might be called such: on the contrary, they are all laughable. The picture should have a wide appeal. Released April 28. Length, 5 reels.

"Something to Do"—Paramount

BOGUS Lords, former waiters and valets, introduced by an employment agency as the genuine article; the unscrupulous social ambitions of an ignorant as well as illiterate woman, who, through the help of a crooked doctor, contrives to place her brother in an insane asylum and thus enjoy his wealth; the desire of this woman to have her brother's beautiful daughter marry one of these supposed noblemen, thus furthering her ambitions; the accidental mixing in of the hero, who eventually rescues the wealthy brother from the net of the sister, in the end marrying the pretty daughter;—all these happenings have intelligently and in an interesting manner been woven into a story, ably put into a picture.

After the first reel or so, the action of the plot becomes brisk and rapid, and is so maintained to the very end. Some of the situations offer also some thrills.

The picture is clean and should offer your patrons a good evening's entertainment. Released April 13. Length, 5 reels.

"The Stronger Vow"—Goldwyn

THE general atmosphere in this photoplay, in many respects, resembles that of "Carmen," a picture that marked Miss Farrar's entrance into the screen world. As in "Carmen," murder and revenge are the motives in 'The Stronger Vow." It deals with Spanish life, first in costume, because the picture opens showing a Spanish Carnival celebration; it then shifts to Paris, among high diplomats as well as among Apaches.

While the story gives the star an opportunity to show her acting skill, it lacks emotional appeal, such as would please a modern American audience; it is nothing but an operatic spectacle, designed to please the eye rather than the feelings.

As far as drawing the crowds is concerned, you ought to know by this time, provided you have played her other pictures, what she can do for you; but as far as entertaining them, it all depends on whether they would care for a picture of this nature. Released April 27. Length, 5 reels.

"Greased Lightning"—Paramount

CHARLES RAY successfully again impersonates the role of a country boy, in a story built along the lines that have made him popular. In this instance, he is a blacksmith and an inventor. The picture opens showing him demonstrating his huge potato peeler to a committee of the most prominent citizens of his little town, including the banker, whose daughter he loves. For a while, the demonstration is successful, until something goes wrong and everybody seeks cover.

The girl likes automobiles, so he is determined to buy one; so he exchanges his potato peeler for one brought in by a farmer for repairs. He puts it into such a fine trim that, not only he takes part in the races and wins, but also chases and catches the bank robbers, who had held up the banker and looted the safe. Since he is a hero now, the banker has no objections in having him as a son-in-law.

Comedy and thrills are plentiful in the picture; it should appeal to all tastes. Released April 20. Length, 5 reels.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to February 3, 1919.

MINE!
WONDER-R-R-FUL!
IMMENSE!
AH-H-H!
PROUD EXHIBITOR

Let 'em know!

The Saturday Evening Post and the other national advertising of Paramount and Artcraft pictures is your advertising. It puts prestige into your theater and stamps you as the exhibitor of the best pictures to be had.

But, as far as you alone are concerned, it goes for nought unless you cash in on it.

Let 'em know that yours are the nationally advertised best pictures. Tell 'em to look for your ads every two weeks in the Saturday Evening Post, in Colliers, in the fan magazines and all the others. Put up the ads in your lobby so that when they see them in the magazines, at once they think of your theater.

Let 'em know! There's money in it!

"The HEART OF HUMANITY"
THE PICTURE THAT WILL LIVE FOREVER

Says the Magic Theatre of Omaha

Omaha, April 18th, 1919.

Having run all the big features that have been released to date including "The Birth of a Nation," I feel it is only just to extend my opinion of "The Heart of Humanity."

Never before in the history of our Theater has a picture shown such an increase on each day's showing. Although the picture was booked for three days, I was very doubtful at the start as to whether it would hold up for that period of time or not. However, I am proud to say the picture went four days instead of three, to the biggest crowds in the history of the city, and I can truthfully recommend it to other exhibitors, and with pleasure to yourself, as being the greatest picture of all times.

Whenever you get another picture like "The Heart of Humanity" you can rest assured the Magic Theatre of South Omaha will immediately arrange bookings.

Again I thank you for interesting me sufficiently in this production to cause me to break the rules of this theatre and to book it for a longer run at increased admission prices than any production I have ever shown. I have made more money than we ever dreamed could be made on any picture in the same length of time.

"OH, YOU WOMEN!"

With Ernest Truex and Louise Huff
A Paramount Picture

WHICH one would any girl rather be—the one that's got his job or the one that's got his heart?

Here's a comedy that is more timely than an alarm clock—as up-to-the-minute as a 10 o'clock extra—as full of swift, human, jazzy comedy as the whole world's fun rolled into one.

That's the reason it is going to be a big money maker for exhibitors. It hits the comedy nail right on the head and has an appeal that gets them all.

The chances for exploitation are inexhaustible. All sorts of accessories. And the 24-sheet is free.

The comedy of right now—today! Book it for an extended run.

Money-Talk

MOST folks won't take another's word as to the value of a picture. But when reviewers say this sort of things about "The Money Corral," they'll go see for themselves. There's a reason. Use these reviews in your ads. They sell the picture to your patrons:

"The picture never wants for action. Naturally it carries a big suspensive value, for everything is arranged to get the most of every scene. The humorous and sentimental touches give the picture tone and quality. Hart's resourcefulness is brought out with unerring skill. Jane Novak is appealing as the girl."—Motion Picture News.

"The story offers Mr. Hart excellent opportunity of the heroic sort that has made him famous, and is a decidedly agreeable vehicle."—N. Y. American.

"An interesting amount of comedy, an unhackneyed story and originality of locale, like all Hart films, it is admirably staged. No star on the screen is more expert at gauging his own type or works with more certain technique. Most audiences will like the picture immensely."—N. Y. Telegraph.

"One of the best productions Hart has put out. It has action galore, atmosphere in plenty, and a really appealing touch of sentiment. Not only correct in atmosphere, but moves with a snap right from the opening scenes and never permits the interest to wander.—Wid's.

"Fits the star to perfection. Moves at a rapid pace and embraces all sorts of exciting fights, tense moments and brisk by-play."—Exhibitors' Trade Review.

"A change from the ordinary, a complete and satisfactory performance, in lead, support, directing and nature of story."—Moving Picture World.

"A good, thrilling Hart movie."—N. Y. Sun.

"A flock of punches. The star has every opportunity to display his prowess with his gun and in horsemanship. Thrills shot into the action make it well worth while."—Variety.

"Good entertainment with Hart at his best."—N. Y. Times.

A Spring Clean-up

THERE'S more money for exhibitors in "Come Out of the Kitchen" than in any Marguerite Clark picture ever before produced.

The book, by the popular women's writer, Alice Duer Miller, is known and loved by numberless women. The play by the famous dramatist, A. E. Thomas, ran two years in New York and for equally long runs all over the country. The story is as popular as "Peg o' My Heart"—the kind of story most popular with all classes of audiences.

Marguerite Clark hasn't had such a charming, humorous, human, lovable part since "Miss George Washington." She is supported by Eugene O'Brien as leading man.

A regular spring clean-up, this one. Worthy of an extended run.

Sure! We'll Finish Our Job.

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation's "job" is to pioneer for a wholesomer and friendlier relation with the nation's exhibitors. It is our "job" to show you that we can work on a clean basis with you.

It is our "job" to prove that exhibitors should not be saddled with program and star series selling systems under which producers insist upon tying in their weak product in your theatre to the damage and injury of your house and its reputation.

Our "job" is to prove to you that any producer who has to grind out pictures, with clock-like regularity, to keep his own distributing machine going will continue to make a low average of good pictures.

In contrast with other producers' systems of grinding out pictures in strings—like sausages—W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has determined to keep weak pictures off the market and distribute only pictures of provable drawing power.

We do not have to release any given number of pictures to keep our distributing machine going. The better productions we can obtain and offer you the fewer we will need.

There is no mystery about our Hodkinson determination to sell pictures singly on their individual merits. Every time we offer you a good big production singly we are making it possible for you to throw out somebody else's weaker picture that is hurting your box-office. An exhibitor who adopts this policy builds patronage for his house.

We are pleased to call your attention to "As A Man Thinks," the first of thirty productions offered you singly on individual merit, as being the type of production that will improve patronage conditions in theatres everywhere.

THE JURY'S VOTE IS: "GREAT!"

Every motion picture trade journal critic has praised the dramatic strength and the drawing power of the first Harry Raver-Augustus Thomas Four-Star Production

Some of their reviews are so favorable, so enthusiastic that we are afraid to print them because we know how exhibitors suspect over-praise.

But, because of the great power of the picture, because of its immediate welcome in the principal first run houses of the country from New York to San Francisco we know that

Here's a feature worthy of all the extra advertising and exploitation that you can possibly give it.

It's a powerful story—a segment of life itself—that holds an appeal and a message for every woman in the world.

'THIN ICE" is the story of a girl who took chances—not because she wanted to, but because she had to. She was skating on thin ice—for a purpose. A Powerful Thing!

The effect of Florence Reed's performance is fairly stunning. One sits in awe and wonders whether he is looking on a mere celluloid figure or a flesh-and-blood reality.

Miss Reed has the benefit of an excellent company, in which William Desmond and Alec Francis are prominent, but it is the actress herself who makes "HER CODE OF HONOR" the powerful thing it is.

Just contracted for "The Eternal Magdalene" to play our entire circuit, twenty houses. When more producers awaken to the fact that it is better to have forty-five hundred feet of drama with speedy action than six or more reels that drag and are unconvincing, everybody concerned will be better off. It is the kind of a picture that human beings like to see because it depicts things as they really are. Going to use the prologue idea suggested in your Goldwynner and big newspaper copy, because of the great possibility that the theme suggests. Regards.

Like Millions of Americans She Loved Tom Moore

She had him "broke"—disgraced and demoted. For, you see, this traffic cop had had the effrontery to stop her speeding chauffeur and save her life.

Why? Just the eternal feminine? Maybe. BUT that young fellow was—

Tom Moore.

Tom Moore, the "90 horse power romantic star," as a trade reviewer called him.

Tom Moore, the youngster with the love of a fight or a frolic in his Irish eyes.

Tom Moore, who has established himself with exhibitors and public as the find of the season.

To the exhibitor who booked Tom Moore or watched his success in a competitor's theatre, there is only one thing that need be said about "One of the Finest."

It is another of those Tom Moore pictures—a hundred per cent star, a hundred per cent story, and Goldwyn quality through every foot of it.

Bennison—Box Office Star

There are machine-made stars. There are stars manufactured in the publicity departments. And good old strong-arm bunk accounts for some.

Louis Bennison is none of these. He won his stardom at the box office.

His warm, vibrant personality, his skill as a player, and the prompt recognition of his worth and his pull by second and third run exhibitors, have landed Bennison securely with the "big fellows" of the first run houses.

Under all Bennison's work has run the rangy, good-natured Western Americanism of his first pictures—an even, buoying ground-swell. Through this—like the up-lash of some deep hidden ledge of rock when seas run heavy—there flashes now in "The Road Called Straight" another Bennison of hard, raw power and sure decision.

This is the Bennison of stronger and stronger productions yet to come.

CAPITOL COMEDIES

there's more than slapsticks and funny falls. There are brains—the grey matter that makes clean, swift, laughful comedies—producer brains.

"Smiling Bill" Parsons can do what many a comedian and many a producer cannot do, because "Smiling Bill" is comedian and producer.

The same constructive ability which went into Parsons' business career and into the creation of "Tarzan" and many another big feature, has put over the 26 Capitol Comedies of the past year as the biggest laugh-getting series on the market. It will broaden the scope and better the quality of Capitol Comedies in the coming year.

REPERTORY SEASON

Out from the far places he comes once each year bringing with him the matchless treasure of his long labor.

Up from the South with "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," the most popular dramatic entertainment ever created.

Then from Babylon and glorified Palestine with "INTOLERANCE," the mightiest spectacle man has ever conceived.

Last from the Fields of Flanders with "HEARTS OF THE WORLD," the epic of the war made for the French and British Governments.

And now, from London and China, DAVID WARK GRIFFITH brings for its first showing to the world

"BROKEN BLOSSOMS"

As startling an advancement in the cinema art as were the other triumphs of this world genius.

A drama of profound emotion; of exquisite delicacy; of terrific strength.

It is a worthy expression of Mr. Griffith's great talents in their rich maturity.

The offering will be introduced by an impressionistic prologue of original conception.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S Repertory Season denotes a world-epoch in the history of the theatre.

Following the premier of "BROKEN BLOSSOMS," other offerings are to include "THE FALL OF BABYLON," an expansion and amplification of the thrilling Babylonian episode in "Intolerance," and an American story, "THE MOTHER AND THE LAW," based on the modern story as first related in "Intolerance," with additions and changes.

THE SAVING OF A RAVISHED NATION

By MRS. OLIVER HARRIMAN

The drama of which Mrs. Harriman writes has been filmed under the auspices of the American Committee for Relief in the Near East, to interest all America in the tragic story of the annihilation of Armenia. Co-operation has been secured in all large cities for an advance showing of the picture which will later appear in the theatres. "Ravished Armenia" is true in every detail. See it, for you can help

FAR to the East toward the rising sun, the shepherds were tending their flocks on the plains. On the hillsides, Armenia's little homes clung to the rocks and nestled under the trees. Through swift summers and long, snow-driven winters, the men worked in the fields and in the towns, and year by year the industry, agriculture and trade of Armenia became more firmly established. Moons rose and fell, the rains of spring and the suns of summer came and turned their fields to gold for the harvest. Here and there over the country were seen machines bearing an American manufacturer's name.

In the towns American men and women gathered the children together in schools and colleges and taught them how to live and love and work and play and think, America-wise. And at last Armenia dared to look up and began almost to be glad.

Then, one day, a shadow came creeping over the hills and valleys. Men shuddered. Fear haunted the eyes of the women. The sheep roamed the hills untended while their shepherds were scattered far and wide. A chill descended upon the hearts of the people. Once again massacre was abroad in Armenia and famine and disease stalked close on her trail.

Swiftly their misery descended upon them. Shops were closed. Homes were destroyed. Men, women and children were herded together like their own lost sheep and driven over the hills, across the plains, into the deserts. Many fell on the road and did not rise. Many were murdered in the towns until the narrow streets ran rivers of blood.

Young women and girls with tortured bodies were left by the wayside to call upon God for release. Children were tossed upon the tides of rushing rivers and vanished from their mothers' eyes.

Unaided and alone, the stricken women falling by the roadside brought forth more little ones on that march of death. Tiny seeking lips clung to barren breasts in vain. Even mother-love could not save them and they were left under the bushes, dead, a pitiful trail of little bodies to mark the path of the beast.

Half-grown daughters, who had been rescued as children from the massacres of earlier years, were saved only to suffer unspeakable things from the Turkish soldiers. One of the loveliest of these was Arshalous—"Light of the Morning"—or as we say, Aurora. She was fourteen when the massacre came again and until that day had known only what fourteen years should know—love, a happy home, careful shelter from the world. Her father had prospered and life had been kind to her.

Then came the hour that plunged her world into an inferno of misery and blotted the sun from her sky. Her father was driven away and cruelly murdered, that father whose every thought had been for the welfare of his family. Her mother and brothers and sisters were beaten to death before her eyes.

AURORA MARDIGANIAN

is the girl with her head on Anna Q. Nilsson's shoulder

Torn from her mother's arms by brutal Turkish guards, she was dragged through years of such utter degradation and misery as only the moral conditions—or the lack of them—throughout the Turkish Empire can signify. With dozens, sometimes hundreds of other young girls of her own kind, she was made the victim of the vicious ceremonies of apostasy by which the Turkish Kiamakans justified their lust and their lawlessness.

Times without number she was witness to the foulest of crimes ever committed by so-called human beings. She escaped from the horrors of a Turkish harem only to be recaptured by Kurds and wandered for two years in the desert.

All this is the merest outline of the devastating experiences of Aurora Mardiganian through four unspeakable years. Finally rescued by friendly Kurds, she eventually found her way to one of the relief stations of the American Committee for Relief in the Near East, and from there was sent to America to be cared for and educated.

Arriving in this country, as soon as she could take cognizance of her own safety, her thoughts went back to the millions she had left behind in the Death Valley of the Near East. Filled as her heart was with hurts of her own, she could still find room for the burning desire to help, to comfort, to feed and clothe and rescue her suffering countrymen, perishing on Armenia's plains and hills.

Briefly—her tragic story was written into a motion picture scenario by Nora Waln, publicity secretary of the American Committee for Relief in the Near East, in whose charge she was placed on her arrival.

With a courage past belief, Aurora threw herself into the part of motion picture heroine in her own life history. For the sake of the love she bears her people, this young girl lived over again all the horrors of those years of deportation and hunger and misery worse than death. She felt again the touch of fouling fingers upon her shuddering flesh, the whistling lash of the whip across her bare shoulders, the blistering sand under her bleeding feet, the glare of the blood-red sun upon her unsheltered head. With all a young girl's capacity for suffering, she passed a second time through the gates of hell—in order that her people, the stricken people of the Near East, might be saved.

The heroine's part was played with amazing power and with a skill beyond the reach of art—it was not acted, it was lived.

The story begins with the visit, on Easter Sunday, of Husein Pasha, Turkish Commandant and friend of the Sultan, to the Mardiganian household. He wanted Aurora for his harem. This was his fourth request, and although he backed it up by posting Turkish guards at the doorway, his request was again denied. Shortly after the Commandant left the house in great anger, word came that a general massacre of men, women and children had begun at Van. The Vali at Van was the principal Turkish ruler in Armenia and the most cruel. A massacre at Van meant but one thing, a general butchery of Christians throughout the whole province. By nightfall, couriers brought word that all Armenians were to be driven into the desert. At daybreak, husbands and fathers were forcibly separated from their families, herded in a jail, terribly beaten, and finally burned to death. Within two days, fifteen thousand women and children were staggering along a road that will long be known as the Road of Death. Aurora and her seventeen year old sister were separated from their mother and taken to the house of Kemal Effendi, one of the head men of the "Young Turks." Eventually escaping, Aurora succeeded in reaching the Armenian refugee camp. During the weeks of her captivity, all of the babies and children not able to walk had been bayoneted or drowned by the zaptiehs—soldiers.

It was while continuing her dreadful journey that Aurora passed the bodies of sixteen young women who had been crucified by the Turks as a warning. Twenty thousand refugees, the wretched survivors of forty thousand who had been driven from Van, joined Aurora's party at this point. Night after night, hundreds of girls and young women, many of them brides, disappeared from the ranks and were never seen again.

As they neared Arabkir, the Kurds descended upon them, and Aurora was carried off to remain a prisoner for many months. All in all, her wanderings and sufferings were four years long. During the last year, she was enslaved by Turkish farmers and made to do man's work in the fields. When her health failed she was driven forth into the desert. Then the Russians fought their way to Erzerum, and Aurora, emaciated and almost witless from the life she had led, was rescued. Through the Near East Relief Committee, she was sent to Petrograd and then to America. The story of Aurora's sufferings ended as she sailed into New York harbor. There she found friends not only for herself but for her country.

And so the picture of "Ravished Armenia" was made. Nothing that I have heard or learned about the toll that war has taken has so impressed me.

Always I see in my mind this brave little figure, standing alone with her face to the East, where lies the land of her birth. It has not for one minute occurred to her to try to forget the past for the sake of her own comfort and peace of mind. She is willing to relive it again and again, to perpetuate her own misery, if only that will help America to understand.

"Ravished Armenia" is a thrilling picture and a burning indictment of those who are responsible for Armenia's woes. It is a story all America must know. And when we know, we shall justify this little Armenian girl's faith in us. We shall help, so that her sacrifice and her suffering shall not have been in vain.

Some of us feel that this Little Sister of the Wilderness is very especially our own responsibility. It is for us to see that the crimes inflicted upon Aurora Mardiganian are never again enacted while the world stands.

Meanwhile, clothes, work, food and shelter must be furnished immediately to those suffering refugees for whom her compelling appeal is made.

The American Committee for Relief in the Near East, of which Cleveland H. Dodge is treasurer, will receive your contributions which you cannot in the name of humanity withhold after you have seen on the screen the story of little Aurora in "Ravished Armenia."

of one of America's most successful playwrights.

IN producing the Rothapfel Unit Programme, Mr. Rothapfel has striven in every detail, to make it in its entirety the acme of artistic work in motion pictures.

EXHIBITORS OF AMERICA

SIX distinct features characterize the first Rothapfel Unit Programme: Music, Effects, Magazine, Novelty Prelude, Dramatic Feature and Comedy.

The whole is distinguished by the artistic touch of one who has demonstrated that he knows the public's likes and dislikes, appreciates the high standard of the motion picture as an art, and is able to present to this public quality in entertainment.

The Effects represent his idea of synchronization—making the action of the picture on the screen speak through the orchestra, the stage settings, the general environment—the whole worked out with a view to accentuating and making more vivid and more realistic, a pantomimic performance.

The result is what is perhaps the most appealing complete motion picture programme ever presented in any theatre.

Arrange your bookings immediately and announce the Rothapfel Unit Programme at your theatre as soon as possible so that you may profit by the tremendous amount of advertising and publicity it is now receiving.

Of the 7-reel feature at the Rivoli Theatre, week of May 4, the New York papers say:—

". . . the scenes are magnificent and the entire production is the most pretentious that has come to Broadway for some time."

AND

". . . the Pekin scenes are so picturesque one becomes nettled that the producer (of the feature) did not take them in Prizma colors."

BUT

" Far more interesting and impressive than the feature film are a series of views in which the Prizma films have caught all the color of Chinese life."

Poor Prints Ruin Good Pictures!

¶ What profit a manufacturer to produce good pictures if his positive is poorly developed and printed. The best picture loses its entertainment value if the positive is defective—and time and money are wasted. ¶ The Spoor-Thompson method of processing film by automatic machinery positively does away with over or under development and inequality in printing. ¶ This machine does not vary as does human judgment, but insures a high grade quality, uniform throughout, and at a price that none can equal. Congratulations and Expectations

THE approaching anniversary of the Universal Film Company will suggest to the minds of many the amazing and swift advances in pictures and industrial conditions within the past seven years.

During these seven years and their always exciting sequence of events, Universal has kept intact its general organization, its executive personnel and its original status as a producer-distributor. In all of these respects the company stands alone today; it is now the oldest producing-distributing company in the industry.

On the changes that have taken place a volume could be written.

Pictures, projection, music, advertising, theatre management—have evoluted so fast and so far that contrasts are startling.

Consider, for instance, the store show of seven years ago and the recent announcement of a new $2,000,000 picture theatre; think of the music, if any, in a little "grind" show and the symphony orchestra today with its weekly cost of $4,000,00. The picture then was a midway novelty; today it is the foremost entertainer and educator of the world's millions of people.

There were these great possibilities inherent in the picture and the public constantly asked for them; the picture theatres speedily met the requirement of seats, comfort and presentation; the picture has expanded to meet the new tastes of the greater picture public.

This swift and remarkable development put a tremendous seven years' strain upon the original producer-distributor; and that strain was doubled by the economic jars and hardships of a new, big and fast growing industry.

Certainly, we may expect much from the future of a company with the virility and ability to have met, measured, and mastered the past and even thrived under its many and heavy exactions.

The Story Crowds the Star

WE are informed that within the past three months of 1919, the sum of over $850,000.00 was spent by producers on books and plays for pictures.

This is the story year, evidently, as last year was the star year.

A healthy sign; but it won't be healthy if story competition goes to the extreme of star competition.

The picture should not be loaded down with unnecessary expense; and expense is unnecessary when one producer bids a value sky high just because the other fellow wants it and just because he wants what the other fellow wants.

Let's have a little sane originality and less frenzy and blindness.

It has been definitely proven that new stars can be made—right along and fairly quickly. Therefore, it is silly to attempt to corner the star market, a market that won't stay put; and it is equally unwise, therefore, to overbid for the star in front of your nose when another is hurrying right up and into sight from behind your back.

The same principle applies to stories.

The story market can't be cornered because creative effort, from old and new authors, is going merrily on. And again, it isn't good business to overbid for the story of today when there's sure to be a new one tomorrow.

What we need, of course, and what we are eventually going to have—it will be the new step in the evolution of the story for the picture—is the story created expressly for the screen.

The easiest way, and that is the present way, is to grab the big story success of the day, pay any old price for it, and let the picture carry the burden.

In time we shall have the picture playwright, altogether, and the price he gets will be his share of the picture's earnings, like the author's and stage playwright's royalties today.

Then there won't be the scramble for books and plays that now exists; and the picture won't be burdened with a heavy load at its very start.

The Needs of Tomorrow

THERE is one point to bear in mind in connection with the million dollar picture theatre era which is now with us—and that is the big overhead of this new kind of entertainment palace.

The theatres of the past era had little overhead—in comparison. This has been particularly true of the stage theatres. A show could afford to open in one of these theatres and stay there long enough to test its full strength.

Shortly, in every good sized city, there will be one or more theatres with upwards of 2500 seats.

These seats must be filled—right off the jump, and kept filled. The overhead demands it.

To accomplish this, the best of pictures and the best of advertising must be used.

These theatres are going to put a heavy strain upon picture production. And they are going to demand the very best of advertising men.

The pictures must lend themselves to exploitation—big exploitation. They must be such that their appeal will not let down once they are launched, nor must the advertising let down.

And, furthermore, there will be a new class of people in these theatres, people more exacting in their tastes; people who like present day audiences are equally pleased with that which appeals to the human heart and mind, but who also will demand artistry and naturalness and who will be less tolerant of obvious crudities and unoriginal themes.

More newspaper cooperation will be needed; and a closer cooperation between producer and exhibitor will be demanded, so that advertising will pull for all the picture is worth.

Probably longer runs will be inaugurated by this class of theatres. The exhibitor will not want to let a sure success leave him while the advertising effort is still filling his many seats.

The theatres lead the way in this business. We saw that in the opening of the Strand in New York. This year they are jumping 'way ahead of past standards.

And the rest of the industry, the two great factors of picture production and picture advertising, must meet the swift pace.

The Story is Only Half-Told

IT is about time, it would seem, to warn exhibitors on the subject of war pictures.

We are well aware of the fact that the public is tired of certain types of war pictures. Many aspects of the war have utterly ceased to be news and are of no interest any longer; mere copies of previous war picture successes disgust the present day audience; and people are thoroughly tired of pictures dominated by marching Huns and fiendish brutality. They are demanding a decided relief from this sort of picture in the way of light comedy, drama and melodramas of American life, optimism and "humanness."

Because of these certain types of war pictures and because the public makes very plain its disapproval of them, the exhibitor is demanding that all war pictures be tabooed.

This is entirely wrong; and the sweeping and thoughtless verdict will hurt the exhibitor as well as the motion picture.

In the first place some of the best box office successes at this moment are war pictures—war pictures with a new angle and new treatment, to be sure, but pictures, nevertheless, which must be classed as strictly war pictures.

We must have more such pictures, and we will have, unless the motion picture is to be the one medium of expression, which, after presenting most vividly the first lights and lessons of the great world crisis now resolutely closes itself to all else that is to be told.

That is just what will happen, however, if the exhibitor continues to shout a manifesto against all war pictures. The author today is afraid to create a war photoplay; and the producer feels that, whatever its character, it will have a hard booking route to travel. The odds are against it; and that is highly destructive. Books, stories, dramas will be created out of this world crisis for the next half century.

The trouble with war pictures today is duplication—a lack of originality in theme and treatment. That is all.

We don't want more imitations; but we do want more, many more original themes. And the encouragement for the creative effort must come from the exhibitor and his intelligent analysis of what is a good war picture and what is not.

Falling Into Line

MESSRS. Cohen, O'Reilly and Berman and their loyal co-workers in the New York State League of Exhibitors are now energetically helping along the local effort throughout the State to secure open theatres on Sunday.

Last week Binghampton exercised its option in favor of Sunday opening by a Common Council vote of eight to five. The local exhibitors presented the names of 8200 residents favoring Sunday pictures as against 1500 from the opposition. Speakers were sent to Binghampton by the State organization as well as instructions on the preparation of petitions.

Oswego and Hudson have already declared for Sunday opening. The matter is soon to come up in Ithaca and with every favorable indication.

The officials of the New York State League take the commendable position that their success at Albany in helping along the bill for Sunday option and their further success in the towns now exercising this option is simply due to the fact that through their organized efforts the people were permitted to make definitely known their choice of Sunday pictures.

That is the point to make clear everywhere; and exhibitor organization plus the necessary zeal and work can accomplish the task.

In Time of Peace—Prepare

WISCONSIN now joins the roll of states in which, through organized and concentrated effort, exhibitors have scored splendid victories over the minority who would control motion pictures and picture theatres.

The state legislative committee killed the bill to create a censorship board by a vote of four to one.

District Attorney Zabel of Milwaukee in a spirited address said: "Nor have I ever had brought to my attention a single complaint that a moving picture exhibitor in this county (with upwards of 100 picture houses) was obscene or immoral. If there had been, that condition is already covered by Section 4590 of the Statutes of Wisconsin which prohibits the exhibition or circulation of obscene pictures or reading matter and which would apply to moving pictures."

And again: "Simply because in extremely infrequent films some scene of a daring exploit appears is no more reason why the entire industry should be placed in a strait-jacket than that newspapers should be placed under the control of a commission simply because in their news items they print stories of crimes."

Attorney Zabel's speech appears in full in this issue.

The victory in Wisconsin will give added courage to exhibitors in other states confronted with regulation measures.

In each state conditions differ; but there is one fundamental situation everywhere. It is this: That the effort to establish official censorship, to close picture theatres on Sunday and to regulate in any such manner the production and exhibition of pictures emanates only from a decided minority of the public.

And the one way through which to meet this movement successfully everywhere—the one sure way of success—is to let the voice of the majority of the people be heard.

Organization of exhibitors and the circulation of petitions in each picture house will do this.

Only those states unprepared for the work need fear this ruinous regulation.

Dealing in Personalities

You'll

Hear of Him

In St. Louis

In July

THE hot weather that was handed New York early this week made us think of Pete Schaefer.

Or, rather, of the coming exhibitors' convention in St. Louis.

Haven't heard much about the convention so far, but just take a look at the calendar and you'll see that the time is not very far off when we will all be looking toward St. Louis.

And then Pete Schaefer will be in the limelight for many weeks, so we are taking time by the forelock by running his picture this week.

Ought to be an interesting convention with the many legislative problems facing exhibitors. Especially interesting will it be if the New York, Wisconsin and other exhibitors are on hand to swap experiences and advice on beating the cranks.

It would be worth a trip to St. Louis in July to hear the story of New York's one hundred per cent organization.

We feel very much flattered. Fred Warren in a striking broadside on Hodkinson's open market plans quotes "One of the wisest of the motion picture trade paper editors," and then goes on to publish something we said on this page a few weeks ago. Gosh, golly, gewhillikers! Wonder if the boss saw that? Well, maybe he'll read this page this week.

You don't want to miss this week's contributions to the open market discussion. Marshall Neilan, Harry Reichenbach and Bert Adler are the writers. The articles are on page 3182.

And as usual, whether he's right or wrong, Harry Reichenbach alone is worth the price of admission.

By the way, wonder if A. H. Blank has succeeded in digging up that bank-roll to star Harry in "King Lear."

If we owned a laboratory we'd swap half the ordinary accounts on our books to get a set of resolutions such as the First National Exchange Managers handed Watterson Rothacker. No wonder that Chicago boy always wears a smile. And no wonder he worries and fumes over those First National prints just as much as either J. D. Williams or Harry Schwalbe.

Prepare for an invasion from Los Angeles. Latest reports from the coast indicate that many of the prominent figures have bought their Pullmans.

Maxwell Karger, f'rinstance, was seen on Broadway during the week. Bet that smile he wore was due to the praise heaped on "The Red Lantern."

George D. Baker, of the Metro staff, is also on the way.

Harry Garson and Clara Kimball Young are others journeying eastward during the week.

While David Griffith left Los Angeles on Monday to supervise the opening of his New York season at the Cohan theatre on Monday, May 13. What does D. W. care for "13"?

From Los Angeles we hear that Jesse Hampton has disposed of the J. Warren Kerrigan contract to Robert Brunton and associates. Kerrigan Pictures, Incorporated, has been organized and the star will continue to release through Hodkinson.

To W. A. J. comes a postcard from Edgar Lewis in far-off Japan.

Harry Maze Jenks sailed for England last week. Harry Howse remains in New York and has opened offices for Harma Productions, Inc., at Room 1526, 46 West 24th Street. Just to complete the details we might add that the phone number is 3153 Gramercy.

Paul Lazarus, advertising manager for Vitagraph, will be hanging his hat in the "Big Four" offices after May 17. A real big fellow on a real big job. Good luck, Paul.

D. A. Poucher, of the Sherry Service, returned to New York during the week from a trip over the exchange route, while William L. Sherry has just started on a trip to talk things over with the salesmen.

Word comes that Earl Hammons has arrived safely in England.

We thought it might have been a sub-division of Tuesday's parade. A crowd of at least fifty gathered at the corner of Broadway and Forty-fifth. We hastened to learn the cause of the excitement. And found all eyes focussed on a twenty-four sheet! This is plain, uninspired fact—and we want it to go in the records that Broadway strollers paused to look at a poster. The subject? "Auction of Souls." The location—on the north side of Loew's New York Theatre.

Lieut. Bob Kane, sporting the Belgian War Cross and the D. S. O., and Nat Brown were in our midst during the week. Have some big plans brewing as soon as both are released from the Government service.

J. Parker Reid returns to Los Angeles this week. As we hobble to press rumor has it that the Louise Glaum special will be distributed through Hodkinson.

Comes to our desk a series of postcards from H. H. Van Loan. The popular one-time Broadwayite stopped writing scenarios long enough to journey to Mexico for a real inside line on the bull-throwing art.

"Mr. Fox joins in sending personal regards.—W. R. Sheehan." So reads a postcard from Rome, Italy, to W. A. J.

Is it any wonder that Paramount paid a record price for the one-reel Briggs comedies when good short comedies are so scarce that not one of the three Broadway houses had a comedy on the bill this week? Strand, Rivoli and Rialto relied on animated cartoons for their laughs. And speaking of the price that Zukor paid for the successful Briggs subjects reminds us that we have heard that James Montgomery Flagg has decided that the movies are not for him.

W. H. Gueringer, of the Saenger Amusement Co., New Orleans, is still in our midst. A likeable chap.

Prizma has opened new offices at 71 West 23rd Street.

Rumbling merrily to press we have gathered together the last-minute list of prominent exhibitors who will be in New York tomorrow to view S. L. Rothapfel's initial unit-programme.

Here it is:

L. Fennyvessy, Rochester, N. Y.; Wm. Shirley, Schenectady, N. Y.; Chas. Sesonskey, Gloversville, N. Y.; Fred Elliott, Albany, N. Y.; Phil Gleichman, Detroit, Mich.; Henry Bernstein, Richmond, Va.; Carr & Shad, Reading, Pa.; Wilmer & Vincent, Harrisburg, Pa.; Harry Smith and Mr. Houston, Philadelphia, Pa.; Joseph Trinz, Chicago, Ill.; Bernard Depkin, Jr., Baltimore, Md.; H. M. Crandall, Washington, D. C.; Mr. Jones and Mr. Schwartz, Wilmington, Del.; H. C. Horater, Toledo, Ohio; C. W. Deibel, Youngstown, Ohio; Jake Wells, Richmond, Va.; Thomas Saxe, Milwaukee, Wis.; O. H. Potter, Erie, Pa.; Frank L. Newman, Kansas City, Mo.; H. M. Thomas, Omaha, Neb.; A. G. Talbot, Denver, Colo.; J. Lourie, Boston, Mass.; Irving W. Smith, Woonsocket, R. I.; Mr. M. Houzzner, New London, Conn.; V. Morris, Boston, Mass.; Walter Stumffig, Philadelphia, Pa.; Marcus Benn, Philadelphia, Pa.; Albert Fisher, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mr. Moule, Detroit, Mich.; F. H. Dowler, Chattanooga, Tenn.

New Angles on the Open Market

Marshall Neilan Discusses the Subject from Producers' Viewpoint—Publicity Men Answer Query, "Who Opened the Open Market"?

A FRESH turn is given to Motion Picture News' open discussion of the open market this week by contributions from the viewpoint of producers and publicity men. Marshall Neilan takes his pen in hand to tell of the effect the open market will have on "the man in the studio." "Six months of open market distribution by all companies will give the studios' casualty lists of a size that Motion Picture News will not have the space to publish," is one of the startling declarations he makes.

Harry Reichenbach throws his hat in the ring with the statement that all the claimants for pioneer honors are wrong and that Louis J. Selznick is the man deserving the glory of the open market discovery. Bert Adler gave the credit to the newer methods of publicity and promotion that have evolved within the last few years.

The Producer's View

Marshall Neilan's recent screen successes make him a producer unusually well fitted to discuss the open market, and its relation to the creator of screen entertainment. His letter follows:

Dear Mr. Johnston:

In reading the statements of distributors and exhibitors in recent issues of Motion Picture News anent the open booking system and the program method I have wondered whether the representatives of these two branches of the industry realize exactly what the open market means to the other phase of the business—the producer.

It means a house cleaning. Six months of open market distribution by all companies will give the studios' casuality lists of a size that Motion Picture News will not have the space to publish. It will be a veritable Christopher Columbus for others. There are directors on the West Coast who have genuine ability. The open market will discover them.

Possibly the exhibitors do not appreciate the great moral effect the open market will have on the sources of productions. Its first recommendation to them is the freedom from exchange dictation that it brings. Admittedly, that is of vast personal importance to every exhibitor. It gives him the latitude to pick and choose releases that will satisfy the individual screen interests of his particular clientele. A certain star is exceptionally popular in a given locality. Under the program system the average exchange would be quick to fasten a premium on that star's productions. The exhibitor wanting her would be obliged to contract for a number of the features that the exchange could not book on their merits alone. The open market eliminates this practice.

If I may recite to you something of my own thoughts before I signed my contract with First National Exhibitors' Circuit for a series of eight special attractions. I can better explain the backfire that the open market system will have on the studios.

My first question was: "Can I make eight successful productions in succession—productions big enough, strong enough, and sufficiently entertaining in each instance to induce the exhibitors to book them strictly on their merits?"

If I couldn't, then I was lost. The open market system of renting each release independently would cook my goose with the first slip-up I make. The exhibitors could walk all over us. But—if I signed a contract with a program concern I would have a measure of protection. I would know that if I "fell down," literally, on one or more of the series, and attained only an ordinary result, that the releases of other producers or stars on that program would, in an ample number of cases, be strong enough to pull my "weak sisters" over the hill, and let me out with at least a nominal profit.

So much for the angle of self-preservation. It looked "safe" at first blush. It would be a nice, safe easy berth for a year or two. I could loaf along, turn out one or two phenomenons to start things off, get the exhibitors all pepped up about "Mickey" Neilan, and then cut expenses, and take unto myself a fair little profit on the difference between the actual negative cost and the production cost limit provided by contract. Meantime, exhibitors would be renting my "jip" pictures to get others that they wanted, and I would have an additional revenue in percentages on the gross.

Easy, I'll say. But——

What would happen if I produced eight successes for program release? Would I receive a just return for the effort, the ability, the experience, the talent I put into them if they were on program? Wouldn't they, perhaps, be used to club the exhibitors into line for other productions of lesser value and which they would not book excepting by pressure? And wouldn't that deprive me of revenue?

Therefore, I came to the conclusion that the best thing for me to do was to rise or fall on my own. If I couldn't make good for myself, I would only be marking time and postponing for a few months, at most, the listing of my name among the studio casualties. If I did make good, I would have no hindrances, no handicaps for my productions on the open market. There are other inviting features of the open booking system. It does not harass me with specific release dates, demanding that I sacrifice quality to speed; it gives me absolute independence from dictation of any character, and it makes me alone responsible for results.

There is a far greater incentive to any producer or star in knowing that his or her success is strictly an individual accomplishment than there is in an arrangement which compels its sharing with others.

All in all, as I view the matter from the standpoint of a director on the verge of becoming a producer, the open market is the exhibitor's salvation in many ways. When he refuses, in sufficient numbers, to book by any other method he is going to shelve a lot of individuals who now are safely under cover. He is going to make one quick, deep incision right to the very core of production, and he is going to automatically find out, and eliminate, the conditions which now make for inferiority in productions. He will make the fellows at the studio end work mighty hard to get one hundred per cent quality. He will compel us to make good or get out. There will be no alternative. It will be: "Either we're mighty good or we are mighty punk."

In your editorial in which you started off the discussion of the open market you questioned the source of supply with an independent booking plan. I am of the opinion that every distributing company will be obliged to release a minimum number of productions each year to defray overhead and make a profit. This will have to be at a rate better than one a month. And with from six to ten concerns active with even that comparatively small number of releases per month, exhibitors who cannot play an attraction for longer than two days will have an abundance of subjects to choose from.

You opened a large and juicy grapefruit when you touched off the discussion on the open market. Its juice is pretty well splattered over the country, and because I am now just within range, and because, within the month, I'll be well inside the maximum firing range, I feel constrained to "tell the world" that I, for one, welcome the open booking policy for my eight productions through First National because I will either satisfy myself that I am good or that I am not good. I think I'm good. That's why I voted the Circuit's ticket on the Distribution Ballot.

Sincerely yours,

Marshall Neilan.

Hand It to Lewis J.

Harry Reichenbach, of the Macauley Photoplays Company, goes back into film history a bit to find the man whom he deems worthy of being called the open market pioneer. He hands this title to Lewis J. Selznick in the following characteristically snappy letter:

Editor Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

The controversy regarding who opened the market, noted with keen interest.

It will be fairly easy for you to establish the real opener of the market. Just mount the elevator in your building, get off at Select's floor and say howdy to Lewis J. Selznick, and you've seen the Columbus of the controversy.

First National, Hodkinson, Frank Hall and all the other organizations, now doing business are simply following in the lead of the above mentioned Selznick.

At the Exhibitors' Convention, three years ago in Chicago, it took the combined efforts of Zukor, Brady, Ochs, Trigger and Irwin to fight off the effect of Selznick's talk in behalf of open bookings and Selznick followed his talk by putting his policy into practice.

At that time, First National was not heard of and W. W. Hodkinson was the greatest exponent of series booking, program booking and deposit.

Mr. Hodkinson was out of Paramount several years before beginning to discover the efficacy of open bookings.

J. D. Williams was in Australia.

Fred Warren was editor of a newspaper out west.

Frank Hall was buying rights on films for Jersey.

AND YOURS TRULY HAD TO FIGHT THE ENTIRE PARAMOUNT ORGANIZATION IN ORDER TO GET THEM TO BOOK "HYPOCRITES" ON THE OPEN MARKET.

If you run back through your own paper for the past five years you will find that I have, personally, handled most of the big open market pictures, including "Hypocrites," "Enlighten Thy Daughter," "Manxman," "One Law For Both," "Tarzan of the Apes," "Romance of Tarzan," "Whom the Gods Would Destroy," etc.

The Warner's with "Four Years in Germany," Jeff McCarthy with the Griffith pictures, Maurice Tourneur, Leonce Perret, Edgar Lewis and other independent producers opened the market. It is their courage and showmanship alone which is responsible.

THE DISTRIBUTING CONCERNS NOW CLAIMING RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE OPEN BOOKING SYSTEMS SIMPLY WAIT UNTIL SOME CAPABLE MAN MAKES A FILM, OPENS IT AND PUTS IT OVER IN SHOWMAN-LIKE MANNER, THEN PAY A PRICE AND SECURE THE DISTRIBUTION RIGHTS.

THERE IS NO COURAGE IN BUYING A SUCCESS. NO SHOWMANSHIP IN WAITING FOR A PRODUCER TO MAKE HIS PRODUCT SUCCESSFUL. IT IS SIMPLY A CASE OF HAVING THE FUNDS WHEREWITH TO PURCHASE THE READY-MADE HIT.

High rentals are the result of the distributor sitting back waiting for sure-fire hits and then being compelled to pay the maker several hundred per cent more for the picture than if he bought it as an untried product.

Marcus Loew books films from one source, before the scenario is complete. He rejects other good films, even after seeing them.

WHO'S NEXT?

We Want to Hear from an Exhibitor on Open Market Question

DISTRIBUTORS, Producers, and Publicity Men have come to bat vigorously in the pro and con discussion regarding the Open Market.

Who's Next?

Isn't there some exhibitor who has his own views on this whole question? And who believes that none of the speakers so far have stated the case as he would?

Let's hear from him.

Keep the ball rolling!

The one principle lacking throughout the entire industry is "SHOWMANSHIP." It is lacking in studio, parent office and exchange.

A good salesman is the man who can sell a questionable film (in so far as its drawing power is concerned) at a top rental.

In the legitimate, a good salesman is the advance agent who goes to a town and arouses interest in the show to follow.

An oversold exhibitor is an injured outlet, a clogged channel.

There are no oversold exhibitors in the legitimate field, all is harmony there, with the producer, agent and exhibitor absolutely pulling together.

A great exhibitor is a man who takes big space in the papers, and gives all pictures similar treatment, to wit, Tom Moore of Washington.

A good one night stand exhibitor in the legitimate, as known to New York producers, is the man who knows the desires of his public and appeals to them individually as the merits of his play dictate.

L. J. Selznick, Harry Sherman, Harry Garson, Edgar Lewis, Ivan Abramson, W. E. Schallenberger and other independent producers are alone responsible for open bookings—the present day exponents simply discovered the necessity and fitted their policies to meet the condition.

Very truly yours,
Harry S. Reichenbach.

Another Publicity Angle

"Showmanship" is also declared to be the prime need by another publicity writer, Bert Adler, of Interocean Film Corporation, who contributes this letter:

May 4, 1919.

Editor Motion Picture News:

With all due respect to the "controversialists," it was the film publicity men and trade press that made "open booking" possible. There isn't a doubt of it and the reputed "discoverers" ought to quit kidding themselves. Once upon a time when there was only an imitation trade press and worse-than-that publicity men, the pub policy of the producer was—well, it wasn't!

But the new class of trade-papermen weren't satisfied with the old-line "announcements": they wanted advertising and yelled for it out loud.

So men with ideas gradually came to write production ad copy. They discovered the selling points of these productions. Instead of release dates, they featured the things about the picture that would attract the public. "Release date" copy ceased. So did the programs, which couldn't live in a day that saw films advertised on the individual merit of each.

With real advertising men in the producers' office came a better grade of publicity men to theatres, to put over the plans that producer ad writers outlined. You see, it didn't take much of a press man to play ball with old-line producer publicists. It was usually the habit to just reprint on throw-aways or in newspaper ads the mere "announcement" stuff of the producer whose films your theatre was showing. That was "selling" a theatre—think of it! Of course, the boys who do it today use one stunt after another, never letting up on their public until they have exhausted every advertising angle of the film exhibited, getting 100 per cent show value out of every picture booked.

The call of this new-idea publicist was quickly heard by his boss, the exhibitor; and soon you found pictures being booked on a plain basis of showmanship, which has nothing in common with "programs" or other enemies to advertising progress.

The program came in because exhibitors wanted a guaranteed supply of films.

It went out when exhibitors realized that the "guaranteed supply" was an evil rather than a benefit, that it left no room for showmanship, and that showmanship—much of it!—is essential in a show business.

Blame the new publicity and the new publicity men for the change! !

Very truly,
Bert Adler.

Bob Kane Returns from Battle Front

Bob Kane—First Lieutenant Robert T. Kane, 91st Division, A. E. F.—is back from France and ready to take up his motion picture work where the war stopped it. He returned unheralded, the modest little ribbon bar of the Belgian Croix de Guerre on his breast, a citation entitling him to the American Distinguished Cross in his pocket and with three gold service chevrons and a wound stripe on the cuffs of his blouse.

Lieutenant Kane saw fighting in the three decisive campaigns of the war—St. Mihiel, Argonne-Meuse, and Lys-Scheldt.

When the war came to America Bob Kane was among the most successful managing producers.

Cohen Leases One

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, has leased the Bronx Strand theatre at Westchester-Union and Prospect avenues, for a long term of years at an aggregate rental of about $175,000. Same consists of a closed and open-air theatre with a combined seating capacity of 2,200.

Rothapfel Shows His Programme

More Than a Thousand Representative Men of Film Industry Throughout Country Gather to Witness Complete Program at Rialto

OFFICIAL picturedom was represented at the premiere showing of the first Rothapfel Unit Program at the Rialto theatre, May 9, when more than a thousand exhibitors, newspaper critics and trade paper represenatives from every important center in the United States gathered to see Samuel L. Rothapfel's complete programme of pictures—from overture to curtain.

The program opened with the overture, "The Rothapfel Unit of 1919," Mr. Rothapfel's own arrangement, played by the Rialto Orchestra, with Hugo Risenfeld conducting. Following the overture, introductory remarks by the producer were flashed on the screen. A picturization of Massenet's "Elegie" followed, and to this work, titled "The Last Hour," the house have its heartiest approval, and displayed keen interest.

The magazine number of the programme followed "The Elegie," and some most interesting subjects were presented, including scenes of the marines in action at the battle of Belleau Wood, taken under the supervision of Major T. G. Sterrett, of the U. S. Marines; contributions by Stewart C. Whitman, editor of "Everybody's Magazine"; Sergeant Owens of the Marine Corps, and others.

The dramatic feature followed, a screen version of an original story by E. Lloyd Sheldon, titled "False Gods," and presenting in the all-star cast of players Grace Darling, Hugh Thompson, Harry Mestayer, Florence Billings, Alfred Hickman and Ida Darling. The general theme deals with the pursuit of happiness and has for its chief characters a young architect and his wife. Through the influence of others she is led to believe that happiness comes through wealth. She sets up false gods as her idols and not until she is brought face to face with the true situation does she realize that her happiness is with her husband, not in seeking the wealth of the world or its "false Gods."

The comedy number, conceived by Mr. Rothapfel and written by George V. Hobart, playwright, is titled "Wild Flowers," and presents, according to the expressions of opinion of the critics, something new in the comedy world. There are no spoken sub-titles. Poetic titles embellish the action, which cites incidents in the lives of those who seek pleasure. Yvonne Sheldon, formerly of the Midnight Follies; Helen Weer, who was seen in the role of "Jennie" opposite David Warfield in "The Music Master"; Templar Saxe, Walter McEwen, A. J. Herbert and Eugene Acker.

In the musical numbers accompanying the features of the program, Mr. Rothapfel is said to have surpassed anything he has ever done in this connection. The musical phase of his work as producer was carried throughout the programme, and in building his subjects he kept in mind this phase, with the result that he has fitted the production to the music and the music to the production.

Frank G. Hall, vice-president of Rothapfel Picture Corporation and president of Independent Sales Corporation and Film Clearing House, through which organizations the Rothapfel Unit Program is distributed, said, following the premiere of Mr. Rothapfel's production, that he had expected great things from the former director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, but never for once entertained the opinion that his work as a producer would measure up to the quality of entertainment that flashed before him on the screen of the Rialto theatre.

The showing was well attended by prominent exhibitors, press representatives from out of town and representatives from the leading trade and daily papers of New York.

The same evening at Hotel Astor Mr. Rothapfel gave a banquet to more than three hundred exhibitors, newspaper men, critics and other prominent men in the motion picture industry.

Holland Buyer Arrives in New York City

J. C. Barnstyn, director of the British and Continental Trading Company, has just arrived in New York City from Holland and has registered at the Astor Hotel for a prospective stay of four months.

He is also directly representing the H. A. P. Film Company of The Hague in Holland. This concern is said to serve seventy-five per cent of Holland theatres and is described as one of the most perfect film buildings in the world.

Mr. Barnstyn declares that the H. A. P. Film Company have what they consider the most perfect system of marketing and distributing in vogue. He buys not only for Holland but also for Italy, France, Belgium and the Scandinavian countries. Later on when things become more settled the H. A. P. Company will also operate in the Central Empires.

"Unpardonable Sin" Runs in Twin Cities

Preceded by a newspaper and billboard advertising campaign, "The Unpardonable Sin," the superdrama, starring Blanche Sweet, and distributed throughout the Northwest by the Friedman Film Corporation, is reported to have started an indefinite run at the New Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, Sunday, May 4, to record crowds.

Admission prices ranged from twenty-five cents to a dollar. A two weeks' showing of "The Unpardonable Sin" is scheduled to begin at the New Liberty, St. Paul, Sunday May 11. Following the close of the Twin City showings the film will be shown at Duluth, Superior, La Crosse, Eau Claire, Fargo, Grand Forks and Aberdeen, according to Benjamin Friedman, president of the Friedman Film Corporation.

Organize Exhibitors in Association

It was announced this week from Winding Gulf, W. Va., that working plans for the Winding Gulf Exhibitors' Association have been completed and as soon as reports can be received from the managers of theatres connected with this association active work will be begun. It is expected that these reports will all be received by the latter part of the present week or first of the coming week. Contracts made for service will not be effective until June 1st, it was thought wise to let each theatre continue its present method of securing service for the month of May as one month's time will be required for the secretary to outline and arrange routing for service.

The Winding Gulf Exhibitors' Association will book service for the following theatres; Fireco Theatre, Fireco, W. Va.; Affinity Theatre, Affinity, W. Va.; Winding Gulf Theatre, Winding Gulf, W. Va.; Mc Alpin Auditorium, Mc Alpin, W. Va.; Stotesbury Amusement Hall, Stotesbury, W. Va.; Golden Gate Theatre, Tams, W. Va.; Besoco Theatre, Besoco, W. Va.; Vanwood Theatre, Vanwood, W. Va.; Wyco Theatre, Wyco, W. Va.; Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va.; Glen White Amusement Hall, Glen White, W. Va.

Theatre buildings at Fitzpatrick, W. Va., Hotcoal, W. Va., Maben, W. Va., and Herndon, W. Va., are now under construction and will receive service through the Winding Gulf Exhibitors' Association as soon as completed, which is expected about July 1.

The Association officers are: C. R. Stahl, president; Hiram Sizemore, 1st vice-president; J. T. Morris, 2nd vice-president; J. H. Spencer, secretary, treasurer and booking manager.

The four officers together with J. B. Clifton constitute a board of directors.

Office room for the secretary's use is now under construction at Winding Gulf, W. Va.

Gets Good Reception

The Salvation Army special production, "Fires of Faith," produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and endorsed by Commander Evangeline Booth and other high officials of the Salvation Army, had an auspicious opening Monday night at the Harris Theatre where it will remain for an indefinite run prior to its release throughout the country. A capacity audience was present and many prominent persons were noted among the seat holders.

The program was opened with a Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue, "With the Yanks in France." The setting for the main feature was then revealed, consisting of a reproduction of the interior of Rheims Cathedral. The spotlight was thrown on Miss Alice Mertens who, in the garb of a Red Cross nurse was moving about the interior of the church, ministering to four wounded soldiers. Miss June Day, attired as a Salvation Army lassie, then entered the edifice and distributed doughnuts among the men, after which she sang "Fires of Faith."

Wisconsin Censorship Bill Defeated

United Action Does the Trick—Bill Goes Down to Defeat in Committee by Five to One Vote—One Speech That Helped Is Worth Preserving

MILWAUKEE, WIS. (Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS).—As the result of a splendid fight staged by the Wisconsin exhibitors, operators, exchange men and others interested in the industry, a bill to create a Wisconsin State Bureau of Censorship has been killed in the assembly committee by a vote of five to one.

The united action of every one connected with the industry in Wisconsin may well be followed by motion picture men in other States in which the censorship "bugaboo" has been brought up.

No effort was spared to line up arguments against the passage of the bill. One of the strongest knockout blows ever registered against censorship advocates was made by District Attorney W. C. Zabel of Milwaukee.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS prints this speech in full because of its value in suggesting points to exhibitors in other sections.

HOW HE KNOWS

Cincinnati Manager Tells How to Tell About the War

THE great world war is over, according to William Sheridan, superintendent of the Family theatre, Cincinnati. He bases this conclusion on the fact that soldiers no longer leave the cords from their campaign hats in the theatre.

On his desk reposes a collection of hat cords that rank as follows: Ordnance Department, four; artillery, three; Quartermaster Corps, two, and infantry, one.

When the war was in progress it was a common occurrence to find many of the cords, but in the past week or so none has been found.

Point Out Censor "Bulls"

An artistic touch was given the committee hearing by the presence of Rose Tapley, Lasky star. She told how an eastern censor had mutilated a Preparedness picture, depicting a tragic scene of ruthless invasion, because it was not suitable for children. She held that while this might be true, the scene meant much to men and women.

R. W. Jackman, Madison attorney, who represented the exhibitors, stated that the production of Geraldine Farrar in Carmen was barred from the scene in Pennsylvania by the censors.

Romeo and Juliet were eliminated, he said, because the censors thought it improper for Romeo to kiss Juliet at the age of sixteen, and only five of Shakespeare's plays were passed.

In Chicago where a policeman was censor, no films were shown where anybody hit a policeman, and a photoplay showing a policeman being bribed was cut, because Chicago policemen did not do such things.

District Attorney Zabel made the following forceful statement which played a great part in defeating the bill:

"My attention has been directed to a proposed bill contemplating the creation of a board or commission to regulate moving picture theatres and moving picture films in the State of Wisconsin. Having been district attorney in the most populated county in this state and in which there are upwards of one hundred moving picture houses, I desire to go on record against that bill for various reasons. First, because throughout all my official experience as district attorney of this county, I fail to find any crying need for any direct legislation concerning moving pictures or the creation of a commission to control them. Having personal charge of thousands of criminal prosecutions of various offenders, old as well as young, I have never had occasion to prosecute a case in which the crime was suggested or instigated by any moving picture. While it may be true that men or boys who commit crimes have been to moving picture houses, nevertheless it was not the moving pictures but the criminal instinct of the individuals that prompted them to commit the offense.

"Nor have I ever had brought to my attention a single complaint that a moving picture exhibited in this county was obscene or immoral. If there had been, that condition is already covered by Section 4590 of the statutes of Wisconsin which prohibits the exhibition or circulation of obscene pictures or reading matter, which would apply to moving pictures as to any other form of obscene exhibits. There is no more need of placing moving picture houses or moving picture films under the control of a commission than there is for placing any other line of exhibits or the legitimate stage productions under such a commission. It appears to me as merely another attempt to regulate the conduct of the poor and to restrict a legitimate form of amusement, open only to those of limited means. To circumscribe that form of pastime and amusement is to characterize particularly the great mass of plain people in the community as unable to take care of themselves and as catering to a form of innocent amusement and entertainment as deleterious to their welfare. Simply because on extremely infrequent films appears some scene in which is pictured some daring exploit is no more reason why the entire industry should be put into a straight jacket than that the newspapers published throughout the state should be placed under the control of a commission simply because in their news items they print stories of crimes; and newspapers are circulated more freely and come to the attention of a greater number of people, old and young, than the moving picture. The same is true of plays given on the legitimate stage.

"The moving picture theatre has become a place of instruction as well as a place of amusement. It is patronized in the open by the public generally. You don't sneak into a back door in order to go and see it. And the very fact that it is open to the public is of itself a sufficient deterrent against exhibiting either immoral or degrading pictures, aside from the fact that there is a law already upon our books sufficiently able to control that situation should it ever arise. The general public's desire for things that are instructive, amusing and elevating and at the same time harmless prompts every producer and exhibitor to cater to that public desire. No producer or exhibitor would find it a paying proposition to exhibit pictures other than those which meet the appreciation of the general public. He could not afford to cater to any morbid sentiments or taste which might perhaps be found in an individual here and there.

"I cannot see how a commission, no matter how well constituted it might be, could serve any useful purpose to the public, except to delegate to themselves the power to determine a standard of pictures which would meet their own ethics, taste or contracted viewpoint, and serve to emphasize what is not true, namely, that the public needs the guardianship of such a body. It is impossible for a producer to meet the individual taste of the people constituting a community. All they can hope to accomplish is to strike a happy medium, basing it upon what is generally accepted as moral and decent as well as entertaining, and no three persons in my opinion are better able to determine what the public is or should be permitted to see in a public place than the law-abiding people of the community. Most theatres showing moving pictures depend for their patronage upon the community wherein they are located, and any theatre that would attempt to furnish anything but decent and harmless pictures could not hope to exist for any length of time. The public can certainly be depended upon to regulate by their patronage, or withholding of patronage, the standard of a theatre. There is of course in every community a class of people who consider themselves so much better than the general mass of mankind, who feel compelled to regulate and uplift their fellow men, they being that class which put a harmful construction and interpretation upon what to the average individual would be merely entertaining or amusing. There is not a piece of literature of any value, not even excluding the Bible itself, upon which some poisoned mind could not put a harmful interpretation.

"Then again another objection is the useless and unnecessary expense put upon the already burdened taxpayers for a proposition that can serve no useful purpose, except to furnish a salary for those who hold the position. It is axiomatic that when you build the mill you will have to furnish the grist to keep the mill going. So with the commission, that when once created will have to go through the state with a fine tooth comb for the purpose of finding a way of keeping busy and to furnish an excuse for its existence.

"If there were any crying need for the creation of such a commission, this county would certainly be the place where it would have made itself felt by reason of the large number of theatres existing here and the density of the population. Such, however,

Paramount Managers Meet Here

District Managers and Special Representatives in New York Next Week to Plan Campaign

DISTRICT managers and special representatives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will discuss plans for the coming year's campaign at a meeting to be held next week at the offices of the corporation, 485 Fifth Avenue. The meeting is in response to a call issued by Walter S. Greene, vice-president and managing director in charge of distribution.

Co-incident with the issuance of the call for the meeting, Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution, has announced the following promotions in the department:

Frederic Gage, formerly sales manager, has been promoted to the position of secretary to Walter E. Greene, vice-president and managing director in charge of distribution.

Sidney R. Kent, formerly special representative in supervision of the Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha and Des Moines branches, has been promoted to the position of sales manager and took up his new duties in New York May 1.

Myron H. Lewis, formerly manager of the San Francisco branch, has been promoted to the position of special representative with permanent supervision of the Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha and Des Moines branches.

John W. Allen, special representative, has been placed in permanent supervision of the Chicago, Detroit and Minneapolis branches.

John W. Hicks, Jr., has been appointed manager of the Minneapolis branch. Mr. Hicks was formerly branch manager for Goldwyn at Minneapolis and previously had been associated with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the St. Louis and Omaha offices.

Those who will attend the meeting in New York next week are the following district managers: Harry Asher, Boston; W. E. Smith, Philadelphia; C. E. Holcomb, Atlanta; Louis Marcus, Salt Lake City; Herman Wobber, San Francisco, and the following special representatives: H. H. Buxbaum, Pittsburgh; John W. Allen, Chicago; Myron H. Lewis, Kansas City.

B. K. Bimberg Leases the West End Theatre

Beginning September 1, the West End theatre, at 125th street and Eighth avenue, New York City, will be operated by the Bim-Webb Corporation.

B. K. Bimberg, president of the Bim-Webb organization, signed a five years' lease this week, and has the option of renewal. When Mr. Bimberg opened the Schuyler theatre at Eighty-second street and Broadway, ten years ago, it is stated that he was generally scoffed at by theatre men who believed that he was pioneering in this territory without any chance of getting results.

. The West End lease now gives this concern six theatres in all, located in upper Manhattan, the Bronx and Washington Heights districts.

No Censorship for Florida

It was announced from Tampa, Fla., this week that the censorship bill introduced by Senator Baker has been unfavorably reported by a vote of four to one.

Senator Baker introduced a censorship bill providing for censorship of all motion pictures by judges of the County Courts, or judges of the juvenile courts. The bill provided for fines from $50 to $500.

New Theatre Announced at Astoria, Long Island

Lynne and Ward, proprietors of the Alhambra and Century theatres in Brooklyn, announce that Architect Thomas Lamb is working on their plans for a new motion picture and vaudeville theatre for Astoria.

The site secured is at the corner of Steinway and Grand, and the exhibitors declare that the building will cost them in the neighborhood of $400,000. A seating capacity of 3,000 persons has been provided, and a roof garden will also be one of the features.

Give Banquet to E. R. Pearson

Members of the Minneapolis film colony gave a farewell banquet at the Radisson Hotel in honor of E. R. Pearson, who has resigned as manager of the Minneapolis First National Exchange. All of the Minneapolis exchanges and a number of local picture houses were represented at the banquet. Mr. Pearson, whose successor with First National is J. F. Cubberly, plans to go to New York after a visit in Nebraska. He will leave many friends in the northwest.

Wisconsin Censorship Bill Defeated

is not the case. And if it is not true in this locality, it can hardly be urged for other communities where fewer picture houses exist and the population is not so great.

"The present system under which moving picture houses are being supervised, namely, by a commission appointed by the mayor, the personnel consisting of citizens who have no desire to be officious or to perpetuate a position for the sake of a salary, has been sufficient for all useful and necessary purposes. And as one who has been brought in close contact with the criminal side of this community, I do not hesitate in saying that the morality and decency of this community do not require or demand the passage of this bill, and I therefore respectfully go on record as opposed to its passage."

The following persons, prominent in film activities in Wisconsin, were present at the assembly committee hearing:

R. W. Jackman, Madison; P. Laufer, Milwaukee; Jos. Schwartz, Milwaukee; A. Berg, Milwaukee; F. Kadow, Manitowoc; E. Harris, Milwaukee; Leo Landau, Milwaukee; Frank Paradise, Milwaukee; C. Rodow, Milwaukee; Thos. Saxe, Milwaukee; Fred Sugert, Milwaukee; Geo. Fischer, Milwaukee; T. J. Coffey, Marinette; J. Siliman, Milwaukee; Geo. Bauch, Milwaukee; Robt. Dietrich, Milwaukee; Rose Tapley, New York City; Paul Langmark, Milwaukee; Louis Nelin, Milwaukee; H. Sturyer, Milwaukee; E. Langmark, Milwaukee; John Grauman, Milwaukee; Jas. Rhode, Kenosha; Miss R. Katz, Milwaukee; G. McWilliams, Madison; Ed. Whalen, Waukesha; W. H. Norton, Watertown; J. E. Slack, Mazomania; T. H. Lueneman, Madison; P. T. Trowbridge, Washburn; Mrs. Geo. Garson, Prairie Du Chien; C. S. Erickson, Soldiers Grove; Louis Limmet, Nekoosa; Jos. Zinkle, Milwaukee; Ben Doescher, Platteville; J. H. Wall, Highland.

N. A. M. P. I. Now Has Real Estate Department

A real estate department has been started by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, under the direction of H. L. Manheim. The department will list all studio or office properties available for use by motion picture companies and will undertake searches for parties desiring particular locations.

Free service will be rendered to members of the Association while those not affiliatd with that body will be charged the customary rates, depending on the nature of the transaction.

Irene Castle Marries

Irene Castle, motion picture actress and dancer, was married at noon Saturday to Captain Robert E. Treman, of Ithaca, N. Y. The wedding took place at the Church of the Transfiguration, on Twenty-ninth street, known as "The Little Church Around the Corner," the ceremony being performed by the rector, Rev. Dr. George Clarke Houghton.

The bride was accompanied to the altar by her godfather, Mr. Philip Boyer, and was given in marriage by her mother, Mrs. Elroy Foote.

New Ohio Company

The Sigma Theater Company, $100,000 capital, has been incorporated in Ohio by A. J. Ritzler, D. H. Kirwan, T. Reed Duncan, Oliver Kies and H. E. Garling, all of Lima. The company will operate a motion picture theater in that city.

Dalton Flies in Behalf of Victory Loan

Dorothy Dalton, who has been very active in behalf of the Victory Loan since her arrival here several weeks ago, had the distinction of making the first hydroaeroplane passenger trip from lower New Jersey to Albany, N. Y., and established a unique record for adventure and spectacular advertisement for the Victory Loan campaign, recently.

Miss Dalton in a three-passenger flying boat piloted by C. J. Zimmerman, left the factory grounds of the Aeromarine Plane and Motor Company at Keyport, N. J., at three o'clock in the afternoon and arrived in Albany at eight-forty, or nearly six hours later. The trip was made without a single mishap.

The purpose of Miss Dalton's trip was to convey to Governor Al Smith, a Liberty Loan message from Governor Benjamin Strong of the Federal Reserve Bank.

Brady Sails for Europe with Grace George

William A. Brady, accompanied by Grace George (Mrs. William A. Brady) sailed for Europe last week on the Aquitania, on a trip that combined motion picture and theatrical business.

In his official capacity as president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry of America, Mr. Brady will discuss with British and French film men various matters affecting the industry here and abroad, and will endeavor to further the cordial relations and general understanding existing between them and American motion picture producers, distributors and exhibitors.

Acting for himself, Mr. Brady will arrange for the production of a number of pictures in England. While abroad, Mr. Brady will be equally active from a theatrical standpoint.

Chernoff of Omaha is New York Visitor

M. J. Chernoff, who is associated with Paul Marquand in several state right productions for the Mid-West, was a New York visitor and while in the metropolis he purchased additional states on the health picture, "Fit to Win."

In addition to Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska, Messrs. Chernoff and Marquand now control the rights on "Fit to Win" in Wisconsin, Minnesota, South Dakota and North Dakota. The headquarters of the concern has been moved to the Empress Theatre building, Omaha, Nebraska.

Takes Up Study of Cause and Effect

W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Hodkinson Corporation, was the guest of honor and speaker of the evening at the Association lodge rooms on the night of April 15, which was the beginning of a study by that association of motion picture directors to try and discover certain laws of cause and effect which may uphold the very foundations of this new screen art.

Industry Hits Hard in "V" Loan

Well Organized Efforts in All Branches of Motion Picture Industry Helps Put Loan Over the Top

THE fifth loan drive has closed, and, according to reports received from all branches of the motion picture industry throughout the country, it has left the members almost completely exhausted physically because of their whole-hearted valiant and successful campaign for the benefit of the United States Government.

And, according to the many large contributions by the vast army of workers within the industry, it is declared a wonder that many were not exhausted financially as well as physically. As one official put it: "The motion picture people were not only ardent workers, but they were willing givers."

Of the various organizations of the Southern California Liberty Loan Committee, none proved more active or efficient than that of the motion picture industry, of which D. W. Griffith served as chairman, and had the assistance of R. N. Stevenson, who was secretary to chairman of former drives, Charles H. Christie.

The studios that made their quota at the start were: Griffith's, $60,000; Wm. S. Hart, $32,000; National, $36,000; Brentwood, $6,000; Morosco, $10,000; Hampton, $8,000; Goldwyn, $50,000; Lasky, $100,000, and Christie, $7,000.

War time buying bonds became epidemic on the night Sessue Hayakawa was in charge of the meeting, and he sold $20,900. The same spirit continued on the following night, with Bill Duncan as chairman, aided by other Vitagraph players, including Earle Williams, Edith Johnson, Montgomery and Rock, and others. At this meeting $39,350 were sold to the public. Monday evening, April 28, was Madge Kennedy Goldwyn Night, and in addition to the purchase of $40,050 by employes of the Goldwyn studio, $27,100 was bought by the crowds.

The Jesse D. Hampton studio gave a very entertaining program, and made the Tuesday evening meeting a most enthusiastic one. William Desmond sold one man, in several lots, an aggregate of $40,000, bringing the total of the night to $63,000.

Wednesday, April 30, Metro studio people made all of downtown Los Angeles take notice by a spectacular circus parade, which passed over three miles of the business section streets. Bert Lytell was chairman, and in his usual patriotic and enthusiastic manner, brought an avalanche of buyers to the counter at the conclusion of his opening speech. The total sales of the night were $54,000. Lytell made the offer to the crowd he would buy as much as they did in thirty minutes, and he was forced to take $15,000.

In New York Miss Marion Davies purchased $5,000 worth of Victory Loan Bonds at the Selwyn theatre from Loney Haskell, and actually kissed the seller, when dared, to promote the sale of something like five times that number of bonds.

The daily Victory Loan meetings in front of the Aeolian Building, where the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation gave a motion picture attraction of some kind or another every noon hour, became widely known and attracted many Victory note buyers not only from the different sections of the city, but also from Brooklyn, New Jersey, Staten Island, and other outlying districts.

The stunt of taking motion pictures of bond purchasers and projecting these films on the screen at the Strand theatre, made a big hit, and itself accounted for some $50,000 worth of Victory note sales during the first week.

Covington Fixes Seating Tax of Theatres

City Commissioners of Covington, Ky., have amended the motion picture license ordinance to fix a tax upon the seating capacity of these places of amusement. The new ordinance provides that where theatres have a minimum seating capacity of 325, the annual tax shall be $200; more than 325 and up to 500, $300; 500 to 750, $400; 750 to 1,000, $5,000, and more than 1,000, $600. Rosedale theatre managers who operate in the suburbs of Covington asked for the 325 minimum seating capacity because they claimed that they could not operate at a profit if the license called for a tax of more than $200.

Watts Wins Election

According to an announcement this week from Springfield, Ill., W. W. Watts, owner of the Gaiety and Vaudette Theatres, Springfield, was on April 29 at a meeting of exhibitors in Chicago elected president of the Motion Picture Association of Illinois. Watts is one of the most popular show men in the business, and also one of the most successful.

"Ticket Scalpers" Bill in Pennsylvania

Reports coming from Harrisburg show that one of the numerous bills aimed at "Ticket Scalping," applying not only to motion picture houses but all theatres in general, passed in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives on April 30, and now goes to the Senate for action by that body.

This proposed law would require all theatres to print the price of admittance on all tickets, and prescribes a fine or term of imprisonment or both for persons found guilty of selling tickets in excess of the printed prices or for otherwise violating the provisions of the act.

Sells Six Bartolas

Six Bartola Musical Instruments were placed in as many motion pictures in a single week due to the combined efforts of the sales force and the declared superiority of the instrument.

H. J. Terry, sales agent, declares that Mr. Barton, the inventor of the Bartola Musical Instrument, is also a champion salesman as he disposed of four during the week.

The Reader has His Say

Advocates Several Reforms to Help Small Town Exhibitors

Motion Picture News:

In renewing my subscription to your much valued and appreciated publication, I want to take this occasion to thank you for the efforts you are making through the columns of the "Motion Picture News" to better the conditions in the "fillum" business in general and existing condition with respect to the small exhibitor in particular. Speaking as a small exhibitor, let me say that they are much appreciated by a few of us who are really desirous of better service and are willing to do our share to obtain it. However, judging from the smal exhibitors I have met I have come to the sad but too true conclusion that if the exhibitors are not receiving the service they justly desire today, it is largely their own fault. Too many of them seem to labor under the delusion that because they can't afford to pay big prices for pictures that the exchange is doing them a big favor when they give them pictures under any condition.

I am happy to say, however, that these kind are not subscribers to the "Motion Picture News," or if they are they only glance over the advertisements. I am optimistic enough to believe, though, that conditions are steadily improving, but satisfactory service to the small exhibitor will never reach its proper status until the exhibitor himself realizes that he is entitled to receive film in good physical condition, the right kind of advertising aids when he is ready to pay for them, press sheets to aid him in exploiting the picture, etc., and that it is up to him to fight for those things. In justice to the distributor he must also use every effort to return the film in good condition.

Before going any further let me properly introduce myself. You will see that I am in a position to speak from the standpoint of the small exhibitor when I tell you that I am manager of the Strand theatre here in Prairie du Rocher, a town of less than 500 population. At our last performance we showed to 350 people at one performance. As our seating capacity is only 250, that means that 100 people were glad to see our show with only S. R. O. privilege, and I know that they left our house satisfied notwithstanding. I attribute our success to the fact that through personal effort I have secured at all times almost wholly satisfactory service from the distributors with whom we do business and have added to this the proper kind of advertising on each production, having first booked only the kind and class of productions that go over best with our patrons.

Another thing, we will not burden or tie ourselves up with program contracts which compel the exhibitor to show the mediocre productions on that program (and there are plenty on every program), thereby hurting his business; or delve into his legitimate profits to buy another picture while his expensive program "fizzle" adorns the shelf. This latter alternative is, of course, impossible for the small exhibitor. All of which leads me to remark with absolute conviction that the "small potato" who ties up to a 52 or 104 picture program contract has undoubtedly sounded the death knell of his business.

In this connection I note with much satisfaction that all leading distributors are going to adopt the only safe, sane and proper form of picture distribution—open booking. Under this system every one gets an even chance, from the star to the exhibitor who retails it to his patrons. It is the only real, honest test of a star's popularity and drawing power. It gives the exhibitor a chance to get what his patrons want, thereby increasing his profits and enabling him to pay proportionately higher rentals. Each production then lives and waxes successful or dies and falls by the wayside according to its own individual merits. I firmly believe the open booking system of distribution will be the means through which a higher quality of pictures will be maintained in the future and will clear the chaotic condition now existing in the industry and place it on a firm and lasting business basis.

In conclusion I should like to express my views relative to your very pertinent question contained in your editorial of April 12: "Should distribution be controlled by the producer, or is it healthier for the industry and more profitable to producer and exhibitor that the distributor be an entirely free agent, selecting and selling on merit only?"

Of course I realize that in asking this question you are soliciting the opinion of the producer and distributor who understand every phase of the business, rather than the opinion of the exhibitor and one in the "sticks" at that, but it strikes me that the exhibitor who is not interested in any exhibitor-controlled organization is really the fellow who can present a strictly unbiased opinion on the subject. So here goes.

By all means I believe the distributor should be an absolutely free agent, selecting and selling on merit only. The production of pictures is an art, while the selling or distribution of pictures is business and should be wholly in the hands of trained business men, the producers to be paid a certain percentage of the rentals derived from the pictures so distributed. Thousands of dollars are lost annually as a result of lax business methods among exchanges. Apply the "willy-nilly" business methods now in practice in the exchanges with which I am acquainted to any other business enterprise, and it wouldn't be long before that concern would be in the hands of a receiver. And here the much mooted question of service bobs up again. Correct this condition and exhibitor service will be relatively improved.

I am hoping I may be permitted to remain in the business long enough to see many needed reforms instituted, and to see the same degree of stability and sense of security obtained in this industry as in other lines of endeavor, and I have no doubt that when this is finally achieved the "Motion Picture News" will have enacted no small part in bringing it about.

Glenn Likes Open Market and Criticizes Average Posters

Motion Picture News:

I read every week with a great deal of pleasure the news from cover to cover and while I have not had the charge of the Gay theatre for the past three months I am still interested and will run it again myself.

I have just finished the article regarding the Star combination recently formed and that combination just suits me to a T.

The way it has been, these players all being good and divided up among the different companies it was mighty hard to have to book a lot of pictures that were no good just to get a few that were good and there was no one to go to for good pictures except these companies that had the high priced stars to pay, and that had to charge us more than the cheap pictures were worth in order to have the money to pay their stars.

Now these companies will be able to furnish good pictures for less money if they don't have any $560,000 salaries to pay. Then on the other hand the theatres in the small towns could not afford to pay the high prices asked for these big star pictures.

If the producers will just spend a little more on their advertising matter and not on stars we will get better results, and I want to ask you a question: The posters put out by most of the companies are so near alike I wonder if they don't all use the same picture for the posters and just change the wording on the to suit the picture?

It's a waste of good money to buy posters that don't have any pulling power at all. I think that a good six-sheet without any picture on it at all, gotten up in red and black, telling something of the story would be far better than a picture of a man kissing a woman, or a scene showing the players eating a meal or some other equally interesting scene from the play.

Now just forget who is writing this and take an hour off and go to fifteen theatres in your city and take particular notice of the paper they have out, the paper furnished by the ex, and see if you don't think that there are lots of opportunities for improvement there.

Pueblo Exhibitor Takes Up Star Question and High Rentals

Motion Picture News:

With much interest I read your exhibitors', distributors' and producers' letters of whys and wherefores in the motion picture field. Your tilt between E. R. Pearson and Geo. E. Carpenter prompts this, also your question, Who's Right? In my estimation Mr. Pearson comes nearer being right than Mr. Carpenter, but neither of them exactly puts his fingers on the real pulse of trouble, nor gets anywhere near a remedy.

To my notion in order to right conditions in pictures, the matter must be met by all ends of the business working for the common cause. Let's begin at the top end and consider the stars. Stars must have star stories and star production all the way through. Now let me ask a question. Are stars worth all they can squeeze out of the business? I don't think so. I believe there is a limit as to how much they should expect to get for their work. We all know this to be a money grabbing age and every one wants all they can lay hands on. But why not think of something else besides money? Does or does not the President of the United States work for less than Douglas Fairbanks gets? Is or is not his work more important?

I don't know what Chaplin, Hart, Fairbanks or Pickford get net yearly, but I do believe that their earning power should have a limit, and should be so gauged that the public pays them, the producer, the distributor and the exhibitor a fair profit all the way down the line and no more. When the grocer starts profiteering beyond the public's welfare, there is a howl and during this war we have learned to curb their profiteering and if we can keep Uncle Sam in the saddle some way to watch, we can continue to derive benefits from war experiences as to curbing profits. Well, it must be so in the movies, too. I will try to outline further.

From the stars we will jump to the other end of the game, the exhibitor. Exhibitors must expect to pay enough rental on real star pictures so that the stars and all intermediaries will get a fair profit. If they cannot pay the rental at ten and fifteen cent admissions, then they must sell admissions higher. All exhibitors all over the country should be charged at the same rate, according to population and picture attendance. All exhibitors showing star pictures shall charge the same admission prices, no variance anywhere. No exhibitor shall be supplied with star pictures unless he does maintain standard admission prices. This will satisfy patrons if the standard admission price is right. Now when this has been figured scientifically as near as possible from top to bottom then you get your results.

No pictures should have to be shown at continual losses to producers, as Paramount claims it does with the stars' productions and then try to recoup those losses by forcing other stuff that they can make a profit on. Let the exhibitor show what he wants to show and make the rentals right. Let the stars be satisfied with a right compensation, and then and then only will the picture business get right. This is the only kind of co-operation that will adjust matters satisfactorily. If Fairbanks, Pickford, Hart, Chaplin, Griffith have these ideas in view by all means let them get together and they cannot begin any too quickly. But if they are out to gouge, it's all off.

Further, if F-P-H-C-G do combine along these lines I would like to put time in for them, organizing exhibitors to talk with them and give them something besides the usual salesman's hot air bunk. Call on me.

Will Advancing Prices Crush the Small Town Exhibitor?

Motion Picture News:

Are Motion Pictures to remain the popular amusement at unpopular prices? That is the problem that is confronting the exhibitor today and a mighty hard one to solve. We are now in an era of so-called better pictures, and of course on a higher rental basis to the exhibitor, therefore the higher rate of rental must be passed on down as usual to the ultimate consumer, and I am here to tell you this ultimate consumer so called patron of picture theatres is beginning to wake up to the fact that they are paying a big price to see pictures that in a great many cases are most unsatisfactory.

If we were served with 100 per cent. pictures straight end ways then we could talk high prices, but as I find conditions from careful observation I believe most sincerely that we had better put the soft pedal on high prices and keep the picture game in the popular class of amusement.

A short time ago good pictures were within the reach of all, at present if you try to show the so-called better pictures, in your theatre you are continually compelled to advance the admission price. How long are the people going to keep on paying higher and higher prices? To see pictures that are but little if any above the average.

Take the small town of from 3,000 to 6,000 inhabitants for example, we all know in towns of this size you have from three to six hundred theatregoing people; now, will those people continue to pay these advanced prices, or will they gradually stop going, and will we finally lose them altogether?

My point is this: better keep a large patronage in touch with the theatre, by showing good clean pictures at moderate prices, than to get the masses out of the habit of attending shows, by putting prices above what the working man can continue to spend for amusement.

Again, what is to become of the exhibitor in the size town mentioned? The producer is not making pictures that he will sell to the small town exhibitor, on a rental basis that he can in turn continue to charge a moderate price at his theatre. The exhibitor must advance his price in accord with the price he pays the producer, and thus drive away his regular patronage.

Where will it end?

Plan Fight on Censors in Illinois

At a meeting of film men held on April 29 at the Hotel Morrison, Chicago, plans were laid for a vigorous fight in opposition to censorship legislation now pending in the Illinois legislature.

The censorship bill introduced by Senator Buck has already passed the Senate and has been referred to committee in the House. It leaves the censorship of all films in the state to the arbitrary decree of the Department of Registration and Education.

Plans for a state-wide educational campaign carrying the battle to the public were made. Four thousand slides are being prepared. An organization known as the Illinois Motion Picture Association was formed, with headquarters in Chicago.

The following officers were elected: President—W. W. Watts, Springfield; Vice President—Peter J. Schaefer, Chicago; Secretary—William Loeber, Jr., Springfield; Treasurer—W. D. Buford, Aurora; Field Secretary—Samuel Atkinson, Evanston; General Counsel—Lewis F. Jacobson, Chicago, who presided at the meeting.

Torres of Pathe Enters Export Business

Manuel Ramirez-Torres, who has been identified with Pathe for thirteen years—a longer time than other individuals connected with the Pathe Exchange, and with a record for tenure of service with one organization that is probably unique in the motion picture business, has resigned his position as manager of the scenario department to enter the film export business. Mr. Ramirez has organized the Selection Film Service, Inc., and has secured the agency for the Pathe films for the West Indies, and in addition will handle the Select product for that territory. He plans to widen his field of operations at a later late.

New Cassinelli Feature

A sensational Parisian stage success from the pen of Pierre Wolff, the French playwright, has been selected as the story in which Dolores Cassinelli will make her debut as a star under the banner of the Albert Cappelani Productions, Inc. The production, which will be known as "The Gutter," is adapted from Mr. Wolff's "Le Ruisseau," which played in Paris for over two years, it is said. Work on "The Gutter" is already well under way at the Capellani studio, Fort Lee, under the direction of Albert Capellani.

C. E. Schmidt of Omaha Leaves Fox Exchange

A bigger field in the motion picture business is planned by C. E. Schmidt, assistant manager of the Fox Film Exchange of Omaha, and he resigned May 10.

Previous to his Omaha affiliations he was at one time a branch manager for Pathe and later became assistant to the sales manager in their Home Office. He is said to have made an excellent record at the Omaha Exchange of Fox Film Corporation.

Nelson B. Bell

Nelson B. Bell Made Publicity Manager for Crandall Theatre Chain

NELSON B. BELL, for the past thirteen years assistant Sunday and dramatic editor and special feature writer on the Washington Post, has been appointed by Harry M. Crandall to the position of general press representative of the Crandall Theatres in Washington, D. C.

Mr. Bell is a native of Valparaiso, Indiana, but received his education and first newspaper experience in Chicago. For four years he was a resident of San Juan, Porto Rico, where he introduced the first slang baseball stories ever printed on the Island, through the medium of the San Juan News, the first American newspaper established in the Caribbean. In 1905 he removed to Washington and served for a time as tariff expert with the Interstate Commerce Commission. His affiliation with the Washington Post, however, followed soon and has continued without interruption since. He is the author of many short stories and a dramatic critic of recognized attainment.

For eighteen months Mr. Bell served as press representative of Moore's Theatres Corporation, resigning from that position effective April 12, last.

As a member of the Crandall organization Mr. Bell will have complete charge of the advertising and publicity for the Metropolitan, Knickerbocker, Crandall's, Savoy, Avenue Grand, Apollo and Meader's Theatres, comprising the Harry M. Crandall chain—the most extensive in the National Capital.

Association Sets Meeting for September

It was announced this week that the third annual meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will be held in Rochester, N. Y., on September 23, 1919. This decision was reached at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Association held at the Hotel Claridge in New York last week. The meeting was presided over by Walter W. Irwin, and attended by William A. Brady, Richard A. Rowland, Gabriel L. Hess, J. E. Brulator, P. A. Powers, Paul H. Cromelin and Frederick H. Elliott.

It was announced that President Brady was scheduled to sail for Europe on May 3, to return in June.

In view of the decision which had been previously reached to proceed with the nation-wide organization of Censorship, Sunday Opening and other National Committees during the summer months, it was deemed inadvisable to hold the annual meeting of the members during the summer. J. E. Brulatour, treasurer of the National Association, thereupon extended an invitation on behalf of the Eastman Kodak Co. for the directors to hold their meetings in Rochester on September 23, when the members of the board will be the guests of the Eastman Kodak Co. and a private car will be chartered for carrying the officers and directors of the Association to Rochester and return.

Richmond "Movie Ball" on May 24

Plans for the big "Movie Star" ball, which will be given for the benefit of the home-coming fund of the Richmond, Va., Grays, under the auspices of the First Virginia Regiment Association and the Woman's Auxiliary, on May 24, in the Grays Armory, are completed, and committees to look after the various features to be shown in connection with the affair were appointed.

Invitations to attend the ball and aid in the work have been accepted by Eugene O'Brien, Virginia Pearson, June Caprice, Bessie Barriscale and Creighton Hale.

Among others now expected to attend and to whom special invitations have been forwarded by the local committee are: Constance Talmadge, Alice Brady, Marguerite Clark, Dorothy Dalton, Billie Burke and Irene Castle.

Moss Plans New Bronx Theatre

Still another theatre will be added to the B. S. Moss string of photoplay-vaudeville houses round Greater New York. Mr. Moss has completed negotiations with Henry Acker for the purchase of the property at the northwest corner of Prospect avenue and 161st street for the erection of a theatre structure calling for a capacity of 3,500 seats. It will be the ninth theatre owned and operated by B. S. Moss. Plans also include an adjoining amphitheatre with a capacity of 3,000. An outdoor pipe organ will be one of the innovations.

Grauman at Los Angeles Plans Longer Runs

Indications of a policy which provides longer runs, has been made by Sid Grauman, of Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles, in the continuance of showing the D. W. Griffith Artcraft Program picture "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," the second continuous week. The business during the second week's showing up to and including Wednesday, was on a par with the average week's business, which lead officials of the theatre to state that the picture could be shown at thre consecutive weeks to attendance estimated almost normal.

When the Grauman Theatre was opened in February, 1918, the policy was announced providing for weekly change of program, and Sid Grauman held steadfastly to this policy until early this year when he continued C. B. deMille's Special Artcraft "Don't Change Your Husband" for the second week. The deMille picture held up for the second week, and drew such big business that the receipts of the theatre for the second week were greater than any two consecutive weeks.

Fifty-two "Ham and Bud" Comedies Offered

Not only the Tom Mix single reelers made by Selig have been acquired by Jans Productions, Inc., but announcement has just been made that fifty-two of the single reel comedies featuring that familiar team "Ham and Bud" have been purchased from the Kalem Company.

These single reel comedies and also the single reel Selig series starring Tom Mix are offered to state right buyers in the various territories, and F. E. Backer, general sales manager of Jans Productions, Inc., declares that a flood of applications for territories have already been received.

"Fully ninety per cent. of those who attend motion picture shows today would not enter one five years ago as the general opinion was that the picture theatres were merely a sort of a 'nickleodeon,'" declared Mr. Backer. "These single reel Ham and Bud comedies will therefore come as a new and pleasant surprise."

Ascher Brothers Invade Cincinnati

Ascher Brothers, not satisfied with a chain of twenty-four houses in the Chicago territory, have invaded the Cincinnati field. They have secured a lease for forty years on the northwest corner of Seventh and Vine, one of the best locations in the city.

It is expected that the $40,000 house which will be erected on the site will be open for business by Thanksgiving Day. The house will seat 2,500. The property has been leased from the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company, which also will install the organ, which will be slightly smaller than the huge orchestrion, costing $90,000, installed recently in the municipal auditorium in Denver, Colo.

The main entrance will be from Vine street, with a 35-foot lobby beginning at a point 20 feet north of Seventh street.

Ernest Shipman to Manage Curwood Productions

Ernest Shipman announces that he has signed a two years' contract with Canadian Photoplays, Ltd., of Calgary, Canada, as business manager of the film productions of James Oliver Curwood.

Nell Shipman of "God's Country and the Woman," and other Canadian stories by the same author, will be the star of the company.

James Oliver Curwood, who now has a monthly following of twelve million readers it is said through his recent affiliation with the International Publishing Company, has given the Canadian company a two years' option on all his published and unpublished stories.

Curwood's new picture now in production establishes a unique record as the "Farthest North" of any film drama yet produced.

David Hartford of "Peg O' My Heart" and "Bird of Paradise" fame is the director, and in a long cast of notables are Ronald Byron, Wheeler Oakman, Wellington Playter, Charles Arling. Dal Clawson and Joseph Walker stand sponsors for the photography.

Mr. Curwood spent a month "on location" supervising the correctness of the scenes. He claims this to be his greatest film drama.

A whaler frozen in the ice, a great fighting dane, the North West Royal Mounted, and over a third of the picture shown in the long Arctic night are some of the features.

The project demands such concentration of management that Ernest Shipman has disposed of all other picture interests and will devote his exclusive time to Canadian Photoplays, Ltd. The offices established at 17 West 44th street, New York City, will be retained for the use of the Canadian company.

Capellani Exploits Film in Novel Manner

An advance advertising trailer of striking originality has been prepared by Albert Capellani for "Oh, Boy," the first of the June Caprice-Creighton Hale series for release through Pathe Exchange. It is introduced uniquely by a bill-posting outfit rambling down a street and stopping in front of a billboard stand.

The bill-poster jumps down from his seat and does a little comedy, after which he covers the board with a 24-sheet. Upon the completion of his job he surveys the result and smiling clambers aboard his wagon, but not before casting a last glance at the poster, which reads, "Albert Capellani presents Creighton Hale and June Caprice in 'Oh, Boy,'" etc.

Keenan Works on Feature for Pathe

"A Nameless Story" is the working title of a five-part drama that Frank Keenan Productions, Inc., is filming at the Robert Brunton Studios, Los Angeles, Cal. Frank Keenan has the stellar role and it is the fourth of a series of eight dramas by Mr. Keenan under the Pathe contract.

The scenario was prepared by Jack Cunningham from an original story by F. X. James. Ernest C. Warde is directing. In the cast are: Joseph McManus, Kathleen Kerrigan, Jennie Lee, "Snitz" Edwards, Edwin Tilton, Janice Wilson, Clark Marshall and Sheffrey Taylor.

Johnny Dooley to Appear in Two Reelers

Details of the plan to present the comedian, Johnny Dooley, in films, are being made public by Clarence L. Bach, president of Johnny Dooley Comedy Films.

Mr. Bach states that Mr. Dooley will be seen in a series of two-reel comedies based on Bide Dudley's humorous newspaper stories. "The Office Force," now a popular feature of the New York Evening World and other publications throughout the United States and Canada. In each picture the comedian will appear as the office boy whom Mr. Dudley has made so entertainly unctuous.

Johnny Dooley today is regarded as the funniest pantomimic comedian on the American stage, it is said.

Levy Makes Trip Through the Middle West

Harry Levy, general manager Universal Industrial Department, is making an extended trip through the Middle West. One of his many stops will be at Cleveland, where he plans to make final arrangements for the release of a good roads film, which bears a startling message and is to be backed by national, government and state officials. This film will be released to exhibitors all over the United States.

Class Doesn't Mean a Lot of Money

MORE than a year ago we had a letter requesting advice from a man who had just taken over a theatre in a city of fair size. It has been a complete failure and he had bought it for a song. The house was badly run down in every way and was even physically unattractive and without the slightest appeal as a theatre. The people who went there went simply because they had to have some place to go.

This theatre was in a neighborhood where the great majority of the people were workers. They were prosperous, but not wealthy. They were able to pay a reasonable price for their entertainment, but they demanded something for their money. A survey of the neighborhood showed that either ninety per cent of the people did not go to a motion picture theatre, or that they patronized one of the downtown houses.

We advised this man that the first thing to do was to clean up the house, inside and out. He did. He used paint and kalsomine freely and while the house wasn't anything wonderful architecturally it was soon as neat as the legendary pin. There was a freshness about the place. We advised him to use flowers liberally in the interior decoration and he soon had real atmosphere. He put an electric sign in front of the house—a big one that indicated prosperity.

Then he told the employes that were still there to start practising smiling. The ones that didn't get the hang of it didn't stay around much longer.

THERE had never been any real music in the theatre and this man spent quite a sum for his organ that would enable him to really play the pictures. He paid just a little more for the musician than he had to so that he would be sure to get one who could deliver the goods.

He did not go in for the "fancy" music, although class was maintained there. He used the simpler selections and played the scores of the features and then lively airs for the comedy and dreamy, descriptive compositions for the scenic. The patrons of the theatre had no idea that they were being educated to music, and if this manager had told them in advance that he was going to make them like music they would have resented it. But the music came to them as an incidental thing and in a few weeks they were converted.

One evening the organist was sick and there was no music. Everyone wanted their money back.

Lots of these people could not speak English very well. That is one of the main reasons why the other managers had not believed that any part of the success of the house lay in the music.

They must have forgotten that in the early days when S. L. Rothapfel was operating in a little Pennsylvania town where his patrons were largely foreigners that he put great stress on this end. As a matter of fact right here was born his great inspiration for the proper combination of music and the picture which has had such a wonderful influence on exhibition.

THESE are some of the things that this manager did. We are not undertaking to recite them all here, but there is just one point that we want to bring out.

Recently we were in the exchange city from which that theatre is served. We were discussing the matter of showmanship with one of the exchange managers.

"You want to visit——theatre down in——" he suggested. "It's the class even if it is not a Rialto or a Strand."

Of course we smiled, recalled the first letter that we had received from this manager and the later ones telling them things that he had done, of the ideas that he had used and of where he had gotten most of them.

This is an extract from a recent letter of his:

"I am preparing to build a new house, and I am sure that it is going to be a great deal better than this one. There are a lot of ideas that I have gained that are physically impossible to incorporate in the present building.

"You know that I feel that the MOTION PICTURE NEWS is really building this house for me, for a great share of the success that I have gained has come from reading the articles telling of the work of other exhibitors. I have never hesitated to use these ideas. On a few occasions they have failed in my particular case. In most instances they have aided wonderfully. But even in the cases of failure they have aided me, because they have made me think more and find out for myself what was wrong.

"If anyone tells you that my theatre is the CLASS of this selection, it is because I have been lucky enough to reflect some of the spirit of other men who are doing things and who have not been afraid to tell the exhibitors in general through the NEWS what they are doing.

WE are not seeking to take any credit for this success. It belongs to the scores of exhibitors who are allowing us to tell here week after week what they are doing—to reflect their best ideas for the benefit of others.

We only claim that we have held to our pledge that all the matter that appears here shall pass the test of merit—that the good of the exhibitors shall be the slogan of the department and not individual flattery or catering to some producer.

If you will study these pages carefully you can put more CLASS into your theatre week by week—and without spending a lot of money. Annex idea after idea and supply them to your house. Some may fail, but as this man has said, that will make you think.

Dolly Spurr Shows Way to Convince Patrons by the Way She Uses Newspaper Advertising

Of course, you have heard of Miss Dolly Spurr, who manages the Lyric, Indiana, and Royal-Grand theatres in Marion, Ind. Miss Spurr believes in advertising, and when she has anything to say she goes to the newspaper, buys the necessary space and then tells her story so strikingly that everyone must read it.

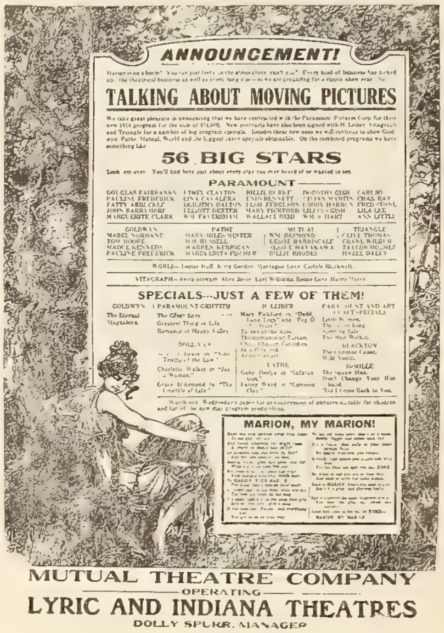
And when you find a theatre manager pursuing this policy you are pretty sure to find that this theatre is in the lead in that city. The theatre itself is going to earn the co-operation of the newspaper and the patron is going to conclude that the theatre which literally puts the cards on the table is the one worth patronizing.

Here is a recent example of that. Miss Spurr has just signed the contracts for the pictures for the Mutual Theatre Company, which owns the three theatres, for the coming year and she wanted the public to be impressed with the number of stars that are to be seen at her houses. So she went straight to the newspaper, not merely with a news story that she expected to be printed for her because she advertised her three theatres regularly and in generous space, but took a page advertisement in which to make her statement to the public.

We haven't the slightest doubt that the newspaper would have printed the same news story that it did print without the advertisement. Probably a greater portion of the fans would have read the news story —and from one angle the amount paid for the page ad might have been "saved." But they would not have been impressed to one hundredth the same extent as they were when they saw this formidable list in the advertisement. You have to figure the psychology of it. Without the page display one would have read the news story and possibly comment that it was interesting.

But the unconscious result of seeing the page announcement is for everyone to say: "Gee, the Mutual Theatre Company is certainly doing things. Looks like it has the market just about cornered so far as the big stars are concerned. Guess I'll have to take a little more interest in pictures now that all the good ones are coming to these three theatres."

This announcement was largely built on the announcement of signing the Paramount-Artcraft contract and also one for the First National product, Vitagraph and Triangle, and that the services of Goldwyn, Pathe, Mutual and World will continue to be shown at the three theatres. Then with the names of the stars listed there is certainly an impressive effect—and fifty-six of them are listed. Then there are added the titles of special productions that are to be seen soon.



ANNOUNCEMENT!

Marion is on a boom! You can just feel it in the atmosphere, can't you? Every kind of business has picked up, the theatrical business as well as every thing else—so we are preparing for a rippin show year. So

TALKING ABOUT MOVING PICTURES

We take great pleasure in announcing that we have contracted with the Paramount Pictures Corp. for their new 1919 program for the sum of $16,000. New contracts have also been signed with H. Leiber, Vitagraph and Triangle for a number of big program specials. Besides these new ones we will continue to show Goldwyn, Pathe, Mutual, World and the biggest state specials obtainable. On the combined programs we have something like

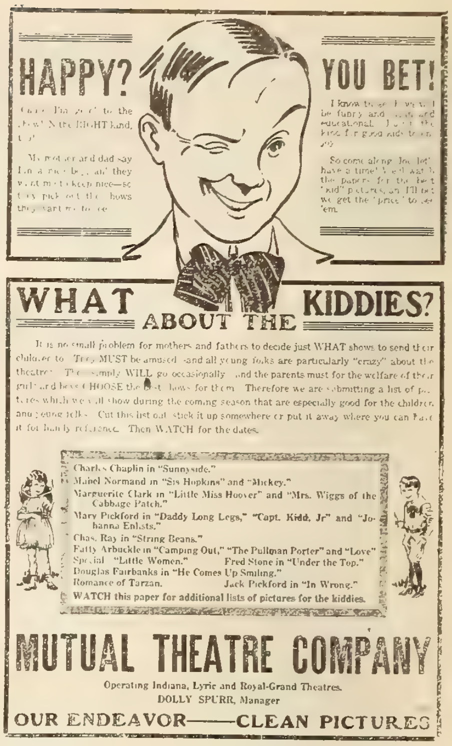
DOLLY SPURR, MANAGER

Miss Spurr uses whole pages for her big announcements

And even better than that we like the five-column fifteen-inch ad that Miss Spurr used a week later. In the page display she mentioned the fact that she would have an announcement of special interest to the children. And here she achieved a display that any exhibitor will do well to copy.

She wanted to get the confidence of the parents in her selection of pictures for the younger folk, and she has done this admirably here, although on the surface addressing this to the children themselves. She has been able to get an attractive cut of a smiling, winking boy, and then with the caption, "Happy? You Bet!" she goes ahead to say:



HAPPY?

'Cause I'm goin' to the show! 'N the RIGHT kind, too!

My mother and dad say I'm a nice boy, an' they want me to keep nice—so they pick out the shows they want me to see.

YOU BET!

I know those shows will be funny and clean and educational—just the kind for good kids to enjoy.

So come along, Joe, let's have a time! We'll watch the papers for the best "kid" pictures, an' I'll bet we get the "price" to see 'em.

WHAT ABOUT THE KIDDIES?

It is no small problem for mothers and fathers to decide just WHAT shows to send their children to. They MUST be amused—and all young folks are particularly "crazy" about the theatre. They simply WILL go occasionally—and the parents must for the welfare of their girls and boys CHOOSE the best shows for them. Therefore we are submitting a list of pictures which we will show during the coming season that are especially good for the children and young folks. Cut this list out, stick it up somewhere or put it away where you can have it for handy reference. Then WATCH for the dates.

Charles Chaplin in "Sunnyside."
Mabel Normand in "Sis Hopkins" and "Mickey."
Marguerite Clark in "Little Miss Hoover" and "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch."
Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs," "Capt. Kidd, Jr" and "Johanna Enlists."
Chas. Ray in "String Beans."
Fatty Arbuckle in "Camping Out," "The Pullman Porter" and "Love"

Addressed to the children, but really meant for the parents

'Cause I'm goin' to the show! 'N the RIGHT kind, too!

My mother and dad say I'm a nice boy, an' they want me to keep nice—so they pick out the shows they want me to see.

I know those shows will be funny and clean and eduuational—just the kind for good kids to enjoy.

So come along, Joe, let's have a time! We'll watch the papers for the best "kid" pictures, an' I'll bet we get the "price" to see 'em.

Then below this with the caption, "What About the Kiddies?" Miss Spurr says:

It is no small problem for mothers and fathers to decide just what shows to send their children to. They MUST be amused—and all young folks are particularly "Crazy" about theatres. They simply WILL go occasionally—and the parents must for the welfare of their girls and boys CHOOSE the best shows for them. Cut this list out, stick it up somewhere or put it away where you can have it for handy reference. Then WATCH for the dates.

Then follows the list of pictures to which she refers. A lot of people may conclude that because the dates of none of these pictures is given and because this is all advance advertising the greater part of the value of it is lost. This is far from the case. The end that Miss Spurr sought was to get the confidence of the parents.

Advertising Leaders and the Way They Look at Film Exploitation

Advertising Double Bills

By Chas. H. Williams

Manager, Strand Theatre, Providence, R. I.

AMUSEMENT advertising has made the same degree of progress that has elevated all advertising from its one-time questionable statue to its present capacity as the most dependable means of spreading a truthful message in the most convincing way, in the shortest time.

The Strand Theatre of Providence has always believed that first of all its advertising must be truthful. Perhaps I can best illustrate our determination to stick to the policy of honesty by telling the readers of MOTION PICTURE NEWS about an incident that occurred three years ago. Another house in the city, announcing the inauguration of a new program, stated in a prepared publicity notice which was run in one of our papers, that the "So-and-So features were conceded to be the best made."

Naturally, as we are also advertisers in the same paper, we took up the matter with the editor and were told that if we cared to make the same statement about the productions on our program we would be permitted to do so.

Do you think we did it? Not for a minute. We told that editor that nobody's pictures were the best made, that readers of his columns did not realize that the theatrical advance notes and motion picture newspaper reviews were written by press-agents and publicity writers, and that the continuation of such a free-for-all policy would lower the confidence of the public to such an extent as to render the paper valueless as an advertising medium. You can imagine the result.

Anita Stewart's picture dominates here and serves as the puller. Mr. Williams always centers the display on ONE of the two features

We don't believe in blurb in our advertising. We don't go in for firework effects although, of course, we do try to make our advertising as effective as possible by clever typographical effects and interesting descripitions of the picture. We vary these ideas according to circumstances. If the star is a money-getter, we play up the star and don't worry much about the story. If the star is not so well known we have to play up the story and create curiosity and interest that way. Our expenditure is governed more or less by the same things and we don't hesitate to spend the money on something we think the people will like.

The double-feature bill has given us a lot of worry but we think we have solved the problem of how to advertise a two-feature program. In the first place we run two features because we want every patron to get his money's worth. Not all people like the same things, so we try to have a balanced bill that will delight as many as possible. While there is a great deal to be said about the wisdom of such a policy, that is not the subject of this discussion and I am going to stick strictly to telling about how we advertise it.

In the first place it seldom happens that we have two features equally as good on the same bill. If such a thing could happen every week we probably wouldn't have to run two features. At any rate, we do the same thing in our advertising that any advertiser does when he has several things to advertise—push the good number. You'll notice that in the several pieces of copy that accompany this article we allow one of the features to dominate the space. By doing it that way we accomplish two things. First we avoid having an ad that is spotty and unreadable and secondly we manage to put over the better of the two films in a way that gets us the most business.

Charles H. Williams

You know that a piece of copy set in all caps cannot be read. Its the same way with trying to emphasize everything we show on our program—we'd fail to emphasize anything if we did it that way.

We use plenty of pictures, as you can see by examining the reproductions of our advertisements. These are taken from many sources, mostly from the trade-paper advertisements of the producers.

We use the halftones large enough so they look right, which is an important consideration in newspaper advertising, where you are confronted with mechanical difficulties which quite often make it very hard to put over artistic effects that will catch the eye because of their beauty and readableness.

THERE is no appeal stronger than that of a picture of an attractive child and pets and in preparing this advertisement the America, Denver, realized that fact. The half-tone showing little Ben Alexander and the puppies will certainly get the eye of every one.

In the upper right-hand corner the writer uses a paragraph calling attention to the past work of the child player.

> This little six-year-old chap has scored some distinct successes in big productions, his most notable achievement being in "Hearts of the World."

There is plenty of white space in this display, and the names of the players are listed as they should have been, but we would like to have seen a little more of the selling argument used. With the sentence, "Full of laughter and tears—a screen play that will make you happier because you have seen it." That is suggestive of the beauty of the picture and its wonderful sentiment, but instead of merely suggesting that fact we believe the theatre would have gotten more attention by telling why it is so pleasing.

Opportunity knocks every day in motion picture advertising possibilities.

RATHER a unique style of advertising has been started out in Urbana, O., where Billy Clifford, well known to vaudeville, owns two theatres, the Clifford and the Ideal. Of late Mr. Clifford has been using half pages daily covering the announcements at the two houses and then including a talk to the public. It has been very successful in bringing people to the theatre, and that this matter is read is proven by the comment of the patrons that is heard around the two houses.

This matter is printed under the caption: "Billy Says." For instance, in the middle of the announcement that carries the fact that Clara Williams is to appear at the Clifford we have his selling talk in the middle:

> All ready for the big week-end show at the Clifford? If not, get ready. Never mind the weather if the heart's right. Snow doesn't make a winter or chilly days a season. How's that? Thought it all up right out of my head. Smart, ain't I? Sure.
> But say, people, I have SOME show at the Clifford Friday and Saturday.
> Remember when the Clifford offered "The Spoilers"? I wasn't here, then, but I know what a sensation the picture was. Now, "Carmen of the Klondike" is another "Spoilers"; and there's a fight between two men in it—Oh, Boy! it's a real play with plenty of action; something to get you awake and keep you awake. Of course, I needn't say anything to the "Hands Up" fans—they'll be there, anyway. It's you people that want to see the feature I am appealing to. We'll show the Vod-a-Vill Movies, then "Hands Up," and then "Carmen," and repeat.
> Got your Easter suit yet? Got mine. It's last year's Easter suit. Going to have it cleaned up and no one will know it. Bod don't tell anybody. That you? Good-by. Ting-a-ling.

It is a pretty hard thing to go in the face of what some tells you is bringing business, but we would not endorse this style of advertising for many theatres. You have to figure in this Clifford's personality and reputation as a fun-maker, for that puts it over though there is some mighty foolish stuff in it, especially that reference to the Easter suit. We believe that the secret of the success is that the two theatres are now using bigger space than before, that their advertisements are always found in the same place—and that these "Billy Says'" talks attract attention because of the local pride in the comedian. It is evidently because he plays square with the public that this sort of a thing helps, while in other cases it might cheapen the appeal.

Evidently something slipped somewhere, for the advertisement that we have just discussed appeared in the Friday papers and along comes the Saturday issue with no mention of the "Carmen" picture, but a talk about Easter in the "Billy Says" column. Typographically the displays are very good, except that we do not like the ragged effect in the selling talk on "Carmen" and in the case of the other display we would have centered the other matter.

WERE we running a theatre in Birmingham, Ala., the first thing we would do would be to plead with the newspapers to give us better printing. Here is an advertisement of the Strand theatre that meets every requirement of what a display should be except the printing. We believe that much better results could be achieved if the stereotyper would underlay these cuts. We don't believe that it is the fault of the cuts or mats themselves for even the type portions of the display do not print well and the pressman has shown a hesitancy to use ink.

In this eleven-inch, three-column display there is everything that there should be and just about in the proper ratio. There are two striking pictures of Miss Clark—or rather they would be striking with proper printing—and then the title of the picture is further backed up with the words, "The Naughty Wife" in the boxed effect. It was all right for the Strand to use the very small type in the selling argument and we believe that every one of its patrons read it. This is what it said:

> There's a crowd on the honeymoon, especially when a wife runs away with another man.
> And if the third party is ex-Friend Husband, it starts considerable complications.
> Eloise thought her husband neglected her, so she decided to neglect him for life. A lover, a hastily packed trunk, a scribbled note, and she was off to a fresh start on the road to married bliss.
> That is ALMOST off.
> For husband found a way to hold his naughty wife, a new way, an original way, full of surprises and laughs.
> "Let's Elope" is a new kind of Marguerite Clark picture, and one with a REAL PLOT, not the fairy story kind.

The way the other attractions and the bill for the last half of the week meets our idea of the proper way to do it.

Satisfaction is heart deep.

It was able to get the co-operation of the Grand Rapids Herald, with the result that several merchants were induced to advertise around the idea, all of the space working toward giving the picture itself publicity. As a matter of fact, this production seems to be just about breaking the records for co-operating advertising in various sections of the country.

Now, the same Robertson-Cole idea was carried through the other theatres owned by the company, which figured that this was an excellent way to get the public acquainted with the class of pictures the company sponsors. During the first part of the week "Captured by Cannibals" was shown at the Majestic Gardens, while at the Strand there was Sessue Hayakawa in "A Heart in Pawn," and "The Eleventh Hour" at the Idlehour.

Of course, the whole result of this was to get really a solid page of advertising for the theatres the company owns. It pays once in a while, but as a habit we are not very strong for it from the theatre's point of view.

"Some day" is most often too late.

NEMO theatre, Johnstown, Pa., has just finished a four-day run with "Salome" to big business in spite of the terrible weather prevailing there. The advertising campaign used by L. W. Barclay, who has charge of all of that work for the Grand Amusement Co., should be given a large share of the credit.

This was started six days before the opening and the result was that the weather didn't count for much, because the patrons had read so much about the picture in the advance advertising that the greater share of them were "dated up." Practically the entire weight of the exploitation was put on the bigness of the production, for the spectacle angle was the one played, together with Theda Bara, of course.

The next displays increased in depth to nine inches and carried somewhat the same selling arguments, still built around the character of Salome and the circus idea. For instance, the theatre again resorted to the big features of the picture and the "See" idea that is so familiar with the three-ring show:

SPECIAL MUSIC SCORE

On the day of the opening the space was increased to four columns, eleven inches, and carried a striking picture of the star and then a sketch showing the end of the tragic Salome dance. Here the caption used at the top in boxed effect was: "The siren who sowed sin in ancient Galilee, whose tempestuous blood has traced a scarlet thread through the centuries." Then we are told that here is the greatest vampire of history portrayed by the screen's greatest vampire, which is certainly a good line. The picture had really been sold by the advance circus advertising, and, except for mentioning that the picture cost a million and there were 5,000 people in it, the rest of the display was confined to this sentence:

> Spectacle and drama so welded as to bring acutely to your consciousness that feverish day of high-pitched passions and short-lived dynasties when Herod ruled 40 years before Christ.

Advertising did not stop with the opening of the picture, for the next day Mr. Barclay used six inches across six columns and in his boxed effect at the top used this: "If you hate crowds come early. 3,579 persons witnessed 'Salome' yesterday. Ask your neighbor, then see it." A column narrower, the display on Friday was along the same line, and Saturday, the final day, smaller space was used.

It was an excellent campaign. Frankly the appeal of "Salome" is sensational, and Mr. Barclay put this over without saying anything that would offend any one. He went to the right limits, used the circus for all it was worth, and capitalized the star and the greatest vampire in history idea.

DIDN'T take Wonderland theatre, Kansas City, Mo., long to take advantage of an attractive cut. This cut of Priscilla Dean appeared exclusively in the Motion Picture News on a special insert advertising her in "The Exquisite Thief." But the picture fitted just as well any of the other recent productions in which Miss Dean has appeared and so the Wonderland did the right thing in going to it. There is only eight inches, single, used and this forms the most striking display on the whole page of the Kansas City Star amusement advertising. The display would have been much better if there had been a different type used for the words, "Fire, Nerve, Love, Thrills." The sameness of the type hurts the eye a little and gives a crowded effect which actually does not exist.

Exhibitors who want to do attractive advertising should watch the display pages. Much of this, including the four-page displays on Universal Special Attractions, appear exclusively in the NEWS and furnish some mighty good ideas and the work of the best artists that exhibitors can borrow.

Old man Chance doesn't hang around when Gen. Enterprise is in command.

ARTISTRY in display has been called forth in several cities by "The Eternal Magdalene," and we much prefer this style of advertising to any of the more sensational sort that exhibitors might be tempted to use with this picture.

Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga., has used ten inches across three columns and has used for the illustration the picture that was employed in so much of the advertising in the NEWS. The display is hand drawn and therefore the whole effect is decidedly pleasing. Just above the cut there has been used the question: "What are you going to do with her or for her?" Then the center panel is devoted to the name of the picture, the name of Maxine Elliott and then this selling argument:

She is everywhere.

Alhambra theatre, Toledo, O., gets the eye even more quickly and we believe that it has stronger selling argument by using the matter straight from the Goldwyn exploitation offices. The figure here is another one used by Goldwyn in its advertising and is so unusual that it is bound to attract attention, but it is unfortunately true that advertisement which depends upon a nude woman, though it may be artistic, and suggestive only to those who seek to give it that turn, does furnish an argument for the prudes who are urging censorship, and that should be borne in mind in exploitation everywhere.

We would say that there is distinctive atmosphere to both of these displays and that this is needed to get the fullest pulling power with this picture. Advertising of this sort will appeal to people who are in the habit of passing by the ordinary motion picture display and will convince them that the offering is one of the artistic, unusual sort that is worth their attention.

WE are constantly dwelling on the argument that exhibitors should use freely the ideas of other exhibitors that they see recorded in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and we have been insistent that all exhibitors send us their best work so that it may be reproduced for the betterment of all.

In the April 26 issue we printed an article under the heading, "Swiping the Moon to Exploit a Picture," analyzing the campaign of S. Barret McCormick of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, in exploiting Anita Stewart in "A Midnight Romance," and reproducing, though necessarily in much smaller space, a number of his displays.

Already there has come to our attention two theatres that have seen the advertising of Mr. McCormick. The Regent, Toronto, takes bodily one of the displays, and though it does not use the halftone effect, line work is employed and the same reading matter. It is probably better that this was used if the theatre was not able to get the very best of printing from its newspaper.

This fact is evidenced by the display of the Hippodrome, Waco, Texas. Her halftones have been employed and the result is little more than a smear. Here the moon idea has also been used, but the border effect employed has only served to confuse and the idea is not carried out sufficiently to get all of the value of the moon idea. The lettering in of the words, "Another success," in white interfere with the moon standing out as it did in the McCormick advertising, although the same picture is used in the upper right. The designer of this display should also have used the same style of type for the sentence, "At midnight a queen in satins" as he did at the lower left for "At noon a maid in gingham."

SOMETIMES it is necessary to stress a big tragedy in advertising a picture, but plain bloodshed is something that should always be avoided. Anything indicative of crime should be omitted unless the reason is made clear that the plot centers around this event and then there should be something to stress the happy side of the picture—if there is one.

A Romance of the Days of '49 In California

The METROPOLITAN CONCERT ORCHESTRA

We cannot imagine this quarter page display of the Metropolitan, Cleveland, O., bringing any women and children into the theatre. Here we have a very crude sketch that shows at least two men with revolvers in hand and a third man lying dead in the street. The fact that the characters are in the garments of gentlemen of the old days doesn't take the curse off. We would much rather have simply used a picture of J. Warren Kerrigan and then the line, "A romance of the days of '49 in California." That would have indicated action enough to those that are seeking action and would not have given a shudder to the women and children who looked at the display.

Bind your theatre to your patrons and you will get the volume of business.

IT is mighty hard to beat this piece of work of the Old Mill theatre, Dallas, Texas. We have told you that it is the policy of the E. H. Hulsey houses to keep the name of the theatre the dominant thing in the advertising, and this is another evidence of it.

There is a good line with "That wonderful girl in a wonderful play." The entire space occupied is eight inches, three columns.

"COMMON CLAY" The HUMAN PLAY

"For the Colonel's Lady and Judy O'Grady are sisters under the skin"—Kipling

"You, my son's wife? Preposterous! Why, we are the Fullertons—and you—you are nothing but our' maid—just common clay."

So thought the wealthy Mrs. Fullerton, but Ellen Neal proved herself to be of as fine a mold as they—of a finer mold in fact—for when it came to the supreme test she proved to be pure gold.

Here's an Honest Heart to Heart Talk

Personally I think "Common Clay" one of the greatest and strongest dramas of human frailty ever pictured. The photoplay is too powerful and too varied to be related here and do it justice, but it is enough to say, a story is presented of the greatest dramatic power.

It is a woman's play through and through, pulsating with feeling which stirs the deepest emotions and digs beneath the skin.

Although a delicate question is dealt with, at no time does it prove offensive; whatever offense might be conveyed by such a story in an ordinary picture is thrown in the background in this one by the intense human appeal.

THE MANAGEMENT.

And Here's Something Worth Hearing

"Easter Chimes" - - Lake

By Harry Silverman and His Orchestra

Harold Lloyd Comedy Pathe News

OF all the displays on "Common Clay" that have come to our attention, this is distinctly the best. It gets the eye, it sells the main points of the picture and it puts over the strength of the story without the slightest hint of resorting to anything of the sordid or sensational. You will remember that in commenting on several of the displays on this picture we condemned the use of such statement as "she fell for the lure of the dance hall" and that sort of thing. As a matter of fact the girl in "Common Clay" did nothing of the sort.

Now immediately under the name of the theatre, the Strand, Omaha, says:

> Presenting for your approval a screen version of one of the greatest stage plays which had as its stars Jane Cowl and John Mason.
> It was a decided hit on the stage and it is better in photoplay form.

Then followed the Harvard play idea, title and name of star and the quotation from Kipling occupying just the right space. Then with the picture of the society woman and her maid we have this selling talk:

> "You my son's wife? Preposterous. Why we are the Fullertons—and you—you are nothing but our maid—just common clay."
> So thought the wealthy Mrs. Fullerton, but Ellen Neal proved herself to be of as fine mould as they—finer in fact—for when it came to the supreme test she proved to be pure gold.

Earl L. Crabb, manager of the Strand, Buffalo, going after his own aeroplane views of the city

Buffalo Manager Goes "Up in the Air" And Brings Back Pictures of City for His House

EARL L. CRABB, manager of the Strand theatre, Buffalo, probably has the distinction of being the first motion picture manager to go "up in the air" to get pictures for showing at his own theatre. Certainly he is the first to take pictures of Buffalo from the cockpit of a government aeroplane, one of the fleet that has been working for the Victory Loan.

At one time in the course of the flight, a leg on the tripod of the camera became loose from the floor of the machine, and Mr. Crabb took off the belt that helped to keep him in the cockpit, stooped over and fastened the leg. It is doubtful if Rickenbacker could have done it better.

The flight started from the Curtiss field on the Niagara Falls boulevard and continued over the city parks, downtown section and Lake Erie. The machine maintained a speed of 100 miles an hour, and flew at an altitude of 2,000 feet. In the downtown section the plane swooped almost over the tops of the buildings and all-Buffalo stopped and gazed.

The result of the trip was about 500 feet of unusually good film views of the city. The films were developed and printed by Mr. Crabb in the Strand theatre studio, and shown as the feature of the current week's News-Strand Local Events, now one of the most popular pictures in Buffalo.

Mr. Crabb surmounted difficulties which many an aerial photographer of much experience, has fallen down on, according to officers of flying circus. The first difficulty with which he was confronted was the smallness of the cockpit in the plane which was chosen for the flight. It was said by the officers that none but large ships were used for this purpose.

With Lieutenant Norris' assistance, however, Mr. Crabb manages to get the camera and tripod tightly in the observer's pit, the seat being removed to enable Mr. Crabb to stand, and he remained on his feet throughout the 40-minute flight. Mr. Crabb was a target for the wind, the pressure on his body being very heavy because of his practically unobstructed position. After it was over he declared it to be the greatest experience of his life.

The pictures when shown on the screen created no end of favorable comment, and, what is better, through the co-operation of the Buffalo Evening News on the local events proposition, the Strand got some very valuable publicity.

NOT OURS—YOURS

Service is Our First and Last Name, So Let Us Help

THREE letters received in the morning's mail carried so exactly the same sentence that we cannot hesitate to comment on it. Here it is:

"I do not want to occupy too much of your time with my request."

We just want to say right here that what you call "our" time is not ours at all—it is YOURS. And we want you to use just as much of it as you need, as often as you need it and for any purpose in which we can serve you.

The season is at hand when you ought to be brushing up—planning to do bigger and better things. Just because business usually falls off in summer there is all the more reason to do more.

And there's another thought. A lot of the boys are coming back to you now. They've seen a lot more than they had when they left home and they are going to demand more. They've distinctly progressed, and you will have to.

HOW CAN WE HELP YOU?

Our advertising is handled by Danielson & Son, a local advertising agency. D. Gus Schneider, now a partner in this agency, was our publicity man when we opened in 1915. As a member of our State forces, he was called to active service in July, 1917 and was then succeeded by Miss Emily Williams, who is detailed by Danielson & Son, to look after our publicity.

One thing more I want to refer to and that is the use of superlatives in advertising. Since the very beginning we have made it an inflexible rule never to overstate and only under rare circumstances do we use superlatives.

The best film in the world hasn't been produced yet—it would be a superhuman task to determine who is the very finest actor or actress alive—and we believe so firmly in the need for constant improvement that we never claim to be perfect. Finst, best, greatest, most and other words of that character are never seen in our advertising, except with some qualifying expression, as in the Mary Pickford advertisement in which we say, "One of the best," and the community knows it can believe what we say, because of this policy.

Every admission sold at our box-office to some person who comes here under a misapprehension is a good friend lost—and we don't believe in losing friends. So we let our patrons use the superlative language if they like our bill well enough to do that. Our advertising informs people of what we are showing and attempts to interest them in it.

In conclusion let me say that the best way to get the most out of your advertising expenditure is to retain either a first-class advertising-man or let a good agency handle it for you. There was a time when you could hire some fellow to get up your ads and take tickets and do other odd jobs, but that time has passed. You are penny wise and pound foolish if your advertising is not taken care of by some one that expects real money for doing it.

Advertising is the one thing in this world that almost anybody will take a try at and most people fail to understand that training and experience, as well as a natural aptitude, are as necessary in a good advertising man as in an actor or an operator or a manager. You wouldn't allow the doorman to run your booth, so don't have the janitor write your advertising.

The right kind of advertising pays—and pays big. And producers and exhibitors must realize that the principle by which manufacturers and distributors of merchandise are guided—namely, that the goods must be as good as the advertising says they are, applies with double force to film productions. The era of bunk has passed, the day of delivering the goods or falling by the way-side is here for good.

Use of Chinese lanterns in the long lobby of the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, resulted in a most attractive display. At the left is a "close-up" of the entrance shown in the distance at the right

Many Merchants Aid in the Exploitation Of "The Red Lantern" for Milwaukee Showing

WHILE he could not have seen the Special Service Section we issued on "The Red Lantern" for the simple reason that he showed the picture a week in advance of the general release and before the issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS reached him, Manager E. C. Bostick, of the Merrill Theatre, certainly followed the suggestions made there about getting the whole city of Milwaukee to advertize the new Nazimova production.

His exploitation was carried out not only in the interior and exterior of the theatre, but through store displays of all sorts that gave the picture the sort of advertising that money could not have bought. Merchants of all sorts cooperated with him in making the displays all the way from the five and ten-cent emporiums to the highest class houses dealing in ladies' wear.

The lobby of the Merrill is about a hundred feet in length and this was transformed into a Chinese street, decorated with real Chinese lanterns. Mr. Bostick realized that there is a distinct difference between the Chinese lantern and the ordinary Japanese sort that are generally seen in this country so he sent to San Francisco for the real thing. This display, especially at night, kept a throng constantly in front of the theatre.

Girl ushers and other attendants wore Chinese costumes during the engagement and there was a special stage setting with a quartette of young women in costume singing the song dedicated to "The Red Lantern."

Adding to the liberal newspaper advertising Mr. Bostick also had sixteen young ladies call at thirty thousand homes, distributing a twelve-page colored booklet, which reproduced scenes from the production and told some of the most striking facts about it.

All of the five and ten-cent stores cooperated in the sale of the song. The windows were occupied with copies of the music and then with striking cut out figures of the star and numerous scenes from the production. Some of the displays are illustrated on the next page.

Exhibitors in other cities will do well to follow the example of Mr. Bostick in arranging these displays. If there is any question about the stores cooperating take along this copy of the NEWS and show them what the shops in one of the leading cities did.

Where you can keep the name of the production and the picture of the star before thousands who are passing up and down the streets you are getting the very best advertising possible next to that in the newspapers. Don't expect these stores to give up their whole windows to directly advertising your attraction, but be satisfied where you get a fair show and you are more apt to get the favor done again.

Cooperation of the music stores is especially valuable, since this music continues as an advertisement for the production after it has been sold and taken home. You will generally find the music store willing to do its part when you can show where some profit will accrue to it.

Many managers report such displays, especially in increasing matinee business, because they remind the women shoppers that the picture is being show when many of them would not remember the matter merely from the advertisements they had seen in the newspapers.

Manager Bostick carried out the atmosphere by costuming the girl ushers

Grauman Holds Ford Assembling Contest on Stage of Theatre, Interests Audiences, Gets Publicity

SID GRAUMAN, one of the country's greatest showmen, staged an act at Grauman's Million Dollar theatre, Los Angeles, in connection with his feature photoplay and program of nine parts that will no doubt be an interesting one for other exhibitors over the beaten trail to read about. It is one of the most novel, unusual and appealing from the public's point of view that has ever come from the brain of an amusement promoter. The foundation for the stage presentation was the Ford automobile—the assembling of two Ford cars on the stage of the theatre by two picked factory teams.

Fifth on the bill the Ford act was presented. The curtains were drawn and lying in perfect order, one on the extreme right of the stage, and the other on the extreme left, were two Fords, completely apart. On the one side appeared the blue team of six men, and on the other the red team of as many brawny toilers. On a signal the two teams started. No faster work has ever been seen in the history of the world. The symphony orchestra assisted matters by affording rapidly moving music, increasing the tempo as the two "tin lizzies" were put together. The hurried actions of the workmen, the fast music and the general state of excitement completely enwrapped the audiences until finally when the task of assembling the two Ford cars was complete, they fairly burst forth in enthusiastic applause. The novel act became the talk of the town, and people thronged the theatre from the opening show in the morning until the last show at night. It was also necessary to stage an extra show at night. The winning team was presented with a cash prize, as well as an elaborate pennant by Sid Grauman on the last night.

The local Ford assembling plant, which is the largest on the Pacific Coast, grasped Mr. Grauman's suggestion at once, and also the opportunity to exploit the Ford car. For three days of the week the city streets were alive with Fords, Fords and more Fords, all on parade. The parade consisted of 300 new Fords from the factory, and about 300 more individually and patriotically owned cars, all anxious to have the world know they owned Fords. Large banners were displayed announcing the fact that the great assembling act was being offered on the stage of Grauman's. Never in the history of the photoplay theatre has a stage presentation gone over with more of a startling rush than did this act, and it is something that can be executed in any town at little or no expense, and with the full co-operation of the Ford agencies in the specified community.

Another box-office attraction that was introduced by Sid Grauman on the stage of his huge theatre was during the playing of D. W. Griffith's photoplay the week previous, "The Girl Who Stayed at Home." During the second week of the well directed and cleverly produced screen drama, desiring to afford his patrons a little dancing novelty, Sid Grauman introduced Griffith's new and ingenious star, Clarine Seymour (Cutie Beautiful) in a ballroom dancing act, in New York's latest "craze-dance," the "London Tap Trot," in which Rudolfo Di Valentina, the world renowned dancer, appears. The dance is one of Di Valentina's latest original dances, and has taken Los Angeles quite by storm. While the photoplay was playing a strong second week, and would no doubt have run longer on its own merits, the specialty dance was staged as a matter of diversion, for the public.

Newspaper Man Manager of Strand Theatre in Omaha

TIME TO HUSTLE

Here Is One Exhibitor Who Realizes Possibilities

AN exhibitor who, for obvious reasons, doesn't want to be quoted dropped into the office the other day. He was in New York for the purpose of looking over the field and getting some new ideas. He told us some of his plans and then added:

"Do you know that you people are responsible for my taking this step? No, not because I have made so much money or anything of that sort, but because you have made me realize that I am not up to date and that I've got to come up to the times or some other fellow will be slipping into my city and getting the business.

"I have the leading houses there now, but I know that there's lots of room for improvement and that the public will patronize the best house. That's the reason I'm determined that it shall belong to me. Keep quiet about it, because I want the steel riveters on the job before anyone has a chance to beat me to it."

He is right. You have to be up to date these days. It probably doesn't require a new house, but it does require the best of methods.

Toronto Theatre Sends Patrons Greetings at Easter

Manager Herbert Jennings, of Allen's Bloor Street theatre, Toronto, never let's a special occasion go by without reminding his patrons that he is thinking about them. So just before Easter he mailed out a neat little folder carrying the greetings of the season in the name of the theatre.

During the Easter week there were special matinees given for the children. "A romance of Happy Valley" was used the first half of the week, and then "Johanna Enlists" on Thursday and Friday, with "Uncle Tom's Cabin" on Saturday, when there was a special morning matinee.

How New York Stages the Show

IT is a most unusual coincidence that big features, all of them built on dramatic and tense interest lines, are at all three of the leading New York theatres and also that animated cartoons supply the comedy element at all of them. This is possibly because of the length of the feature pictures, but it certainly shows that animated cartoon has gained probably the most remarkable recognition that it has known.

There is a further coincidence in that in each of the three theatres there is a vocal selection just before the feature and that this song is carried into the picture as the theme.

Nazimova in "The Red Lantern" is the picture at the Rivoli and here Dr. Riesenfeld has centered all of the program except the cartoon relief at the end right around this. There is a largely augmented orchestra and an especially wonderful "Chinese Fantasy" which takes the place of the overture and provides the atmosphere for the picture. This increased orchestra makes it possible to give the real Chinese music that is called for during the musical numbers and in the feature, affording a remarkable effect upon the audience.

There is no news weekly at the Rivoli this week, but there is a scenic and this gives some interesting glimpses of China. Mutt and Jeff supply the laughs at the end.

At the Strand there is an excellent musical arrangement for Anita Stewart in "Mary Regan," that original selection composed for the picture being used as a quartette number at the start and then taken as the theme of the picture. Managing Director Joseph Plunkett has produced a striking effect with his "Girl in the Bubble," an adaptation of the trademark of the theatre. There is the usual Strand Topical an Outing-Chester and a Bobby Bumps cartoon.

Maurice Tourneur's "White Heather" is the feature at the Rialto and here the music is right up to the Riesenfeld standard though many of the selections are numbered one that cannot be given here. Rialto Magazine benefits by having the material that is usually divided between the two houses. There is a Robert Bruce scenic and Judge Rumhauser provides the fun with the animated cartoon.

Strand Theatre

THERE'S just about everything except tragedy on the bill at the Strand theatre his week and people that want variety in entertainment certainly should be well satisfied. It is a case of the sprinkling of music and pictures that leaves a delightful feeling as one leaves the theatre.

This week Managing Director Jos. L. Plunkett is showing a real novelty in "The Girl in the Bubble," a special mechanical and lighting effect that astonishes the audience. It is largely carrying out the idea that is used in the Strand's announcement films, showing the large figure of the girl and instead of the usual revolving globe the girl in the bubble.

Liszt's "Polonaise No. 2" is the overture this week and it is played with the lights gold and without any special setting. It opens large on the brasses and then goes to the strings, with the harp and flutes coming in now and then and dominating the music. It makes an interesting number, but it is one that should not be attempted by theatres without large orchestras.

Strand Topical opens with International views of the arrival of the "Fighting Engineers," the Eleventh regiment, which was the first to get into the thick of it in France when they threw away their shovels and helped the broken British line hold back the German hordes. They are shown in their Victory march and there is a close-up of Col. Wm. Barclay Parsons that gets much applause. "Bullets and Bayonets" is the music. Pathe pictures show reproductions of warfare at the Victory Loan exposition in Van Cortlandt Park and here we have bomb throwing, firing heavy explosive, liquid fire, smoke barrages, tanks behind the smoke screen, and even the rockets at night. "Military Hurry No. 1" is used. Then there is a most human touch, with International views of veteran carrier pigeons back from the war, including a close-up of one bird that lost a leg and was decorated for bravery. Then we have a view of four of the captured German pigeons. "Ocean Breezes" accompanies these.

Then come along Topics of the Day, with the usual number of laughs. One of them that pleases the audience is: "War may be hell, but a peace conference is no strawberry festival." Then: "Prunes," we read, "are among the treasures of Serbia. Now we know what's been the matter with Serbia right along," and, "Conan Doyle makes the postitive statement that he can communicate with the dead. Written to W. J. Bryan, maybe."

Then we have a return to the news pictures, with Pathe showing American sailors bringing four German U-boats across the Atlantic and then some shots of them in New York harbor and of their American crews. "General Pershing March" is is played with these. From the same source come views of the Polish soldiers leaving France for home. When we saw these the audience was a little uncertain as to whether to applaud or not, but finally a title got them a hand while "Outriche Hongrie" is played. Pathe shows Mrs. Wilson visiting the Red Cross at Sorbonne, and for these "American Red Cross March" is used. The final wallop comes with International views of Belgium arising from the flames. It shows the work of reconstruction under way in Louvain and then pictures of Cardinal Mercier at the end that draw tremendous applause. "Omnipotence" is the accompaniment.

There is a pretty picture formed by the Strand Ladies Quartette, which renders a double number. The curtains part, revealing the four girls, two of whom are seated on a bench and two standing, with a railing and a number of blooming peach trees in the background. The first number, Herbert's "Molly," is rendered with the lights red, bringing out the colors of the blossoms, and then the lights fade down to blue for the second selection, "Mary Regan," a selection especially written for this production. The screen curtain is lowered just at the conclusion of the song, and the feature starts, the song being carried into the feature as the theme.

At the screening, Grondahl's "Serenade" is used, until Mary Regan is introduced, and then we have the theme for the first time, changing to "Crafty Spy" for Jim Bradley, one of the crooks. With the title "The Scandal," Barford's "Remembrance" is played, changing to Meyer-Helmund's "Dialogue" when the girl begs the man to please let her go away. Then there is a touch of comedy with the scenes in the cabaret, with "How You Gonna Keep 'Em Down On the Farm" used. With Morton, Sr., we have a change to "La Reve," and then "At Last" with the views of his home. At the title "In the vast silence," we get "Scaramouche," and then as Mary enters the hotel, "Crafty Spy," and the theme as she goes into her room.

When the crook knocks on the door there is a change to "Mme. Chrysantheme," and then for the scenes of the girl and young Morton together, "April Moods," shifting to "Tendre Amour" as the crook reads the letter to Mary. The next change comes with the scones showing Mary entering the restaurant, and then we have "Come On, Papa," with "Ma Cherie" following through. As she leaves the restaurant the music becomes "La Retour," and then to "Aida" as Clifford speaks to the telephone girl, changing to theme as he goes into Mary's apartment, and then to "Tu Ne N'Aimais pas" as she tells him of her decision to marry Morton.

With the scenes showing them in the hotel there is "Histoire de Blondinette" played, and when the youth sees his father there is a change to "Along Came Another Little Girl," and when the chief crook calls her on the phone, "Crafty Spy" is played once more. When the father asks whether Mr. Brown is here there is a change to "In the Garden." Then when we have the title reciting Mary's problems, Friml's "Melody" is used for nearly four minutes, and then when we see the youth away from Mary's influence, "Hindustan." For the scene at the table there is "How'd You Like To Be My Daddy?" and then the theme again as Mary enters her apartment, and there we have the theme for three minutes.

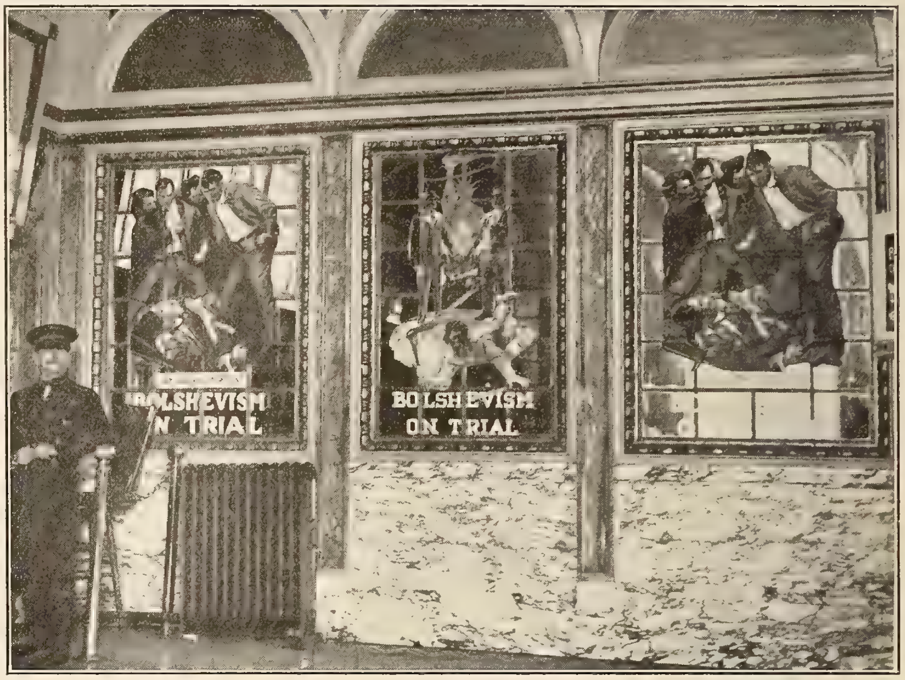
For the scenes where Morton is seen on the couch a dramatic andante is used, and then "Jocelyn" when the title "These crooks have tricked you." This is used for six minutes, and for the scene where Loveman enters Mary's apartment, Schubert's "Symphony in B Minor" is played for an eight-minute stretch, and then "Sicicial Vespers" as the girl is thrown in the auto. Garviel Marie's "Lamento" is played where the detective and Morton, Sr., enter the room where Jack is and the fight that follows. With the title "The City," "City of Sighs and Tears" is used, with the theme coming in right at the end.

Then comes the most effective "The Girl in the Bubble." As we have said, this is a huge reproduction of the cover of the Strand program and of the announcement film that is used in advance of the Topical and other portions of the program. It shows the draped figure of a girl seated, with her left hand extended a little higher than her head and her right elbow resting on her knee, the two hands holding between them the revolving globe. But in the case of this reproduction the figure holds a bubble, or crystal globe, in the center of which appears to be a girl. This is Miss Ann Rutledge, whose attractiveness adds no little to the whole picture. She is a girlish sort of a girl and wears a short white skirt that is simple and striking. As the curtains part she sings "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles For You." The lighting effects with the gleams of light on the revolving crystal are especially good and the blue background of the setting brings out the picture all the more strikingly.

"Mr. Outing Floats a Dream" is the Outing-Chester this week and it shows some adventures down on the Amazon and affording quite a few laughs, including the views of the village blacksmith and the young Manaos with the very fat "tummy." The organ carries the music for this.

Comedy's place on the bill is filled by Bobby Bumps in "A Night With Some Night Owls." This is a very funny one, showing the experiences of the kid and the dog trying to camp out and their experiences with the various pests. There is a scene at the start with the owls calling, "Oh, Hell—Oh, Hell—en," and therefore "Oh, Helen" is the first music, and then for the scene of the mosquitoes we have "Funeral March of the Marionettes," with "Come On, Papa" following through to the end.



By using cut-outs and mounting these on the glass lobby windows, Loew's Avenue B theatre, New York, achieved a striking effect with "Bolshevism on Trial"

Faulkes's "Theme and Variations" is the organ solo.

Rivoli Theatre

NEW YORK expected the long heralded "Red Lantern" with Nazimova as the star to be splendidly presented when it was shown at the Rivoli, and New York wasn't the slightest bit disappointed in the way that Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld is putting it on.

As a matter of fact the whole presentation is centered about the production. All of the usual features have been dropped from the program entirely and with the exception of the cartoon comedy at the end the Chinese atmosphere is around the entire bill, and all so artistically done as to cause a world of talk for weeks to come. It is truly the sort of presentation that advertises a theatre in the very best way.

In fact, one gets the atmosphere on entering the theatre, for there is a streamer of four Chinese lanterns in front of the curtained, box effects at either side of the house and all of the side lights of the theatre marking the exits are also covered with lanterns, while at times a slight touch of incense for the proper scenes brings the presentation close home.

For this occasion the overture has been entirely eliminated and there is in its place "The Glow of the Lantern," a most elaborate number arranged by Adolph Bohn of the Metropolitan Grand Opera House, with a stage setting of remarkable art and beauty by John Wenger. All of the house lights go out before the curtain rises and there is quite a little pause to impress the feeling of mystery. Then there is a crash of cymbals in the darkness and then the musicians' lights come on and there is a glow of red on the stage curtain. This rises, revealing an inner curtain which bears a huge Chinese dragon in vivid effects.

These curtains then part for the scene. In the center, with a huge idol as the background, is seated a figure representing the Chinese emperor and on a pedestal at either side is a guard and at the right a girl in Chinese garb is seated. Then the girl begins to dance a solo number and directly the two guards do a queer Chinese dance on their pedestals. Then a woman's voice is heard with a few strains and the girl dances again, this time with a lantern, which she finally places alongside the emperor. There is a bright light in this which flickers and then goes out. Toward the end the two guards come down from their pedestals and do a sword dance, and then when the emperor gives a command with his uplifted arm they disappear and the girl returns, flowers in hand, and the three dance together with a loud drum effect, and then with a final crash of the cymbals all sink back to their places and the curtains come together. It is wonderfully effective, and words can give only a bare idea of it.

It is the music too that adds a great deal here with the various Chinese effects. These instruments are actually in the orchestra and the huge pit was actually crowded on account of the number of artists and because of the large array of peculiar instruments that had to be employed to get the full effects.

Now we have the scenic—a Prizma. At the screening we have "Suite Exotique" until the scenes showing us the business houses along the Yangste, when it changes to "Dance Chinois," and then with the title "Eighty Years from Now" there is another change to "Lady Picking Mulberries," and with the picture of the Lotus flowers in the moat and the title "Its Million White Tongues" we go back to "Suite Exotique" to the end.

Now we have another one of the special numbers and another John Wenger set. This is from "Chinese Lullaby," which is presented by permission of the "East Is West" company now playing in New York. After a few bars of music in a rather mournful tone the curtains part, showing the interior of a Chinese home of the better class with a huge square window in the background. The room is hung with the Oriental draperies and actual Chinese furniture is employed. We see Miss Mary Ball in Chinese costume sitting toward the left of the stage and a Chinaman with a musical instrument in the center. After the first verse Miss Ball arises and goes to the left of the stage, where she continues the song, the curtains closing with the final notes, the screen curtain coming down and, after a clang of the gongs, the feature is started.

Drums prevail right at the screening with "Chinese Festival" used, and then with the title "In Pekin" the music changes to "Rebikoff" and then for the introduction of Mahlee we have the chorus only of "Chinese Lullaby" brought back as the theme for the picture. With the first sight of Sam Wang we have "Rebikof" again, changing to "Lance aus Peking" as she is seen talking to the soothsayer with the Chinese music as the flashes show the boy playing the queer instrument. One chorus of the theme is used again and Mahlee asks her old grandmother, "Why do they shun me?" and this is followed through with "Sarashi," a descriptive, haunting theme which is used during the scenes where the grandmother tells her that it is because she had a white father, and we have the scenes explaining the old woman's story.

For the shots of the American mission "Lyric Pieces" are used, and then with the title "With the Rising of the Moon" we have the theme once more, changing to a specially written selection for the death scenes that follow, this being played through with a ghostly effect that is moving. When the girl opens the window and the own is seen there is a low imitation of the owl, and then the various Chinese suggestive effects mingle in with the music.

At the point where Wang announces that he is going to America the organ takes up the music, a violin solo of the theme coming in at the place where Mahlee entwines flowers in her hair. The orchestra comes back with the introduction of Sir Philip Sackville and then with the sight of the girl takes up the theme, following through with Nevin's "Shepherds' Tale," and then with "As the Weeks Pass" we have "Festival of the Moon," with the Chinese instrument effects prevailing as we see the Chinese musicians performing in the garden. Then as Mahlee is handed Wang's note there is a change to "The Yellow Dragon," and when the girl goes to her room "Crane and Tortoise," with one chorus of the theme used after Mrs. Templeton leaves her alone. This is followed through with "The Yellow Dragon" again and then at the scene in Sam Wang's clinic we have the organ with the gong and cymbal effect, and then with "The Irretrievable Step," "Danse Sacre" is used again, following through with "The Yellow Dragon."

Superba theatre, Los Angeles, got a splendid effect by making the personality of Priscilla Deon dominant in the lobby

For the title "The Feast of the Red Lantern," "Jap Kriegsbilder" is played, and then a gong effect as Wang strikes the gong in the picture, the music changing to "A Japanese Sunset," followed by another gong tremulo effect after the goddess appears. This is followed through with "Kriegsbilder" and then, as the door opens, "Tam Tam." When the girl announces that she is the goddess of the red lantern "Dance of Egyptian Maidens" is played very slowly, followed by a numbered selection. Then when the girl sits down on the couch there is one chorus of the theme, followed by a numbered selection as Wang knocks on the door, and then with the change to the general's palace "Oriental March," played pp mysterioso. When we are introduced to the superstitious empress "Intermede Chinois" is played, and then "A Japanese Sunset" as Wang opens the curtains showing the goddess.

Then with the day for the uprising we have extracts from "Herodiade," followed by descriptive music and effects until the title "Dawn," when "Herodiade" is played again, changing to "L'Oracolo" as the girl asks Sir Philip if he doesn't know her, changing again with the title "You Have Severed" to "A Japanese Sunset" and then with the title telling that Mahlee's prophesy proved false "Pearl Fisher" is played. At the point where the wounded Wang enters the temple there is one verse of the theme played broad adagio, and after Wang's death the music reverts to "Pearl Fisher" with one verse of the theme for the vision of the soothsayer, then "A Japanese Sunset," with "Pearl Fisher" at the end of the scene and the theme at the end.

After this tense drama we have relief, but Chinese melody in selections from "A Chinese Honeymoon," with its light and lively music, and then there are a whole lot of laughs with Mutt and Jeff in "Sir Sidney."

"March Heroique" is the organ solo.

Rialto Theatre

ONE of the most enjoyable bills in weeks is that at the Rialto this week, with a splendid connecting up of the Magazine and musical number and feature in a way that has to be described to be appreciated. Again the musical arrangements form a considerable part of the enjoyment.

"The Bohemian Girl" is played as the overture with the lights all gold. At first it is largely on the strings and it includes a trombone solo and then a violin solo of two of the best known airs. Then follows the Robert Bruce scenic, released by Educational, "The Pale Pack Train." It tells the adventures of five white horses, two men and a dog and a half—the latter being the huge Dane that is so familiar to us and the "Whoosit" whose acquaintance we have made in other pictures. There are some fine shots in the snow clad mountains, contrasty effects being secured with the patches of snow that break off as if cut with a knife. There are some fine shots of the camping scenes, making it an altogether human document with nature as the background. "Woodland Echoes" is first played and this is followed through with "The Strand at Parame."

Educardo and Emanuel List then sing the duet from "I Puritani," and after that we have one of the most interesting Rialto Magazines we have seen. Production Manager Joseph LaRose didn't have to bother this week with dividing the material between the two houses and the Rialto has profited accordingly.

It opens with Gaumont pictures of San Francisco's welcome to its fighting men and "American Red Cross March" is played until we have the scenes of the marching men when there is a change to "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here" and then with Gaumont pictures of the yeomanettes parading "American Red Cross March" is again used. Kinograms shows us the Columbia oarsmen at practice and here we have "Speed 'Er Up" with the effects of the motor boats that accompany the rowers. This same music continues through Gaumont pictures of an express hold-up staged at San Fernandino, Cal., for the benefit of the Victory Loan.

The Kinograms shows us pictures of Charles Kaplan whose clue led to discovery of the bomb plot and then we have some views of the infernal machines and here we have a mysterioso used. Gaumont gives us a mighty clever effect here with the launching of the dreadnaught Tennessee where we have "Columbia" played and the whistle effects. And then we have a title beginning "If boats could talk," we have the film reversed and the big ship going back to the dock from which she had just been launched. Here the music is appropriately "How Dry I Am" played the first time on the trumpet and then with the full orchestra. It brings a roar of laughter, and also considerable applause.

International gives us a picture of the "Devil Dogs" at Philadelphia showing how they overcame the Huns to the music of "Goodbye, Bargaria" and then come another chapter of the fully "Sayinks of Topplitsky." At the end the usual kids tell the old man "What an oil can you've turned out to be." "A la Carte" is the music. Then Gaumont gives us "The story of four seasick camera men." Here are some remarkable views taken at sea from one of the destroyers showing others rolling around in the heavy weather and then mountains of water coming right at the little boat. Effects are used and "Victorious Democracy" played.

Kinograms shows us pictures of Versailles where the peace treaty is to be signed with American doughboys as sightseers and then we have Pathe pictures of Mrs. Wilson visiting the Red Cross, "Ponts de Paris" being used for both of these. Then Gaumont gives us some views of the war exposition at Van Cortlandt park similar to those described already. This with the bursting rockets forming the slogan "Buy Victory Bonds" would ordinarily have closed the Magazine, but we have a much better effect.

As a part of the Magazine we have a short scenic, "Through the Land of Bonnie Sweet Bessie" and just as this is started we see Miss Gladys Rice standing on the lower of the stage steps at the right; there is a red light upon her as she begins to sing "Bonnie Sweet Bessie." A few moments later the curtains over the side panels at either side of the stage part with two rural scenes in Scotland, lighted from the top in a glow of red. At the end of the first verse the screen curtains come together and the picture is finished and then Miss Rice slowly walks up the steps and sings the second verse as she stands right against the right hand column and with the last notes she sinks away behind the curtains. But the picture does not start just at that moment for from the right of the house up the steps and across the stage comes a bagpiper. There are just a few strains of this and he goes out at the left. It is a surprising and delightful effect. As these notes are dying away the feature, "The White Heather" starts. During his appearance and preceding the title there was a short picture of the bagpiper thrown on the screen.

"Songs of Scotland" is the music at the screening and then at the scene showing the bagpiper we have the real one playing himself and with the introduction of Marion Hume "Bonnie Sweet Bessie" is brought back. For the scenes in the London Stock Exchange there is "Henry VIII" and then with the introduction of Lord Angus Cameron a portion of "Pomp and Circumstance" is used and later when he greets his brother, "Meeting." There is an intermezzo used where Marion sees Lord Angus and then the theme again with Dick Beach. "Children's Suite" is used where Donald, the little son, is shown.

At the title "In the morning" "Poesi Pastor" is played and then with the title "Aye, lad" "Hunting Music" is used until the scene where Alex meets Marion when we have the theme. At the title "Hello" we have "From the Countryside" and then as they sit down to dinner there is a bugle call with the remainder of the orchestra tacit and then "From the Countryside" taken up again. For the scene at the Devil's Chimney "Ponticello" is played and then a pause as the shot is fired with a numbered selection and the organ taking over the music. During the time the organ is playing there is a 'cello rendering of the theme for the death of the girl's father and then with the title "The quest of love brings another searcher" we have the theme on the violin.

The orchestra comes back with "We'll Return to Town" and then a couple of numbered selections follow until the close-up of the wounded man and then "Melancholie" is used once through. The rest of the music to the end where Dock goes to the man on the bed "Berceuse" is played to the end.

We get a world of laughs with the Judge Rumhauser cartoon, "Rubbing It In" and Guilmant's "Marche Religeuse," an organ solo, ends the bill.

Live News from the Producers

George Spoor Reduces Film Jumping

"The troublesome jumping of film in projection, which has been a constant source of annoyance to the moving picture patron, has at last been reduced to such a minimum as to be practically negligible," says George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Company, "by the Spoor-Thompson method of processing film by automatic machinery.

"This was accomplished," said Mr. Spoor, "through feeding the film into the wet end of the machine in 1,000 foot lengths, thus requiring, with the ordinary run of film, but two splices to the reel, whereas under the old method anywhere from ten to thirty splices are needed.

"As it is the splices that cause the jumping and flickering of the film, it can readily be seen with what smoothness the film can be projected, with but two splices to a thousand feet.

"In the case of many various tints in the same reel, more than two splices are sometimes necessary, but even with numerous tints the machine reduces the splicing an appreciable amount over the old method of processing.

"Not only does the reduced amount of splices prevent the jumping, but it adds greatly to the life of the film," he said.

Seigmann Again with the Universal

George Seigmann, who created "My Unmarried Wife," Carmel Myer's screen success, has been mustered out of the army reserve list and is now in "civies." He has again joined Universal's producing staff. Seigmann will direct Priscilla Dean in her starring vehicle, "Pretty Soft," which is now being completed at Universal City. The story was written by Joseph Franklin Poland.

When the war was declared Seigmann abandoned a salary that would make a banker gasp, it is said, and offered his services to the government. He was commissioned in the signal corps of the army.

Regarding Health Films

The Public Health Films has received permission from Assistant Surgeon General C. C. Pierce, of the United States Public Health Service, to contradict the report recently published in Motion Picture News that the film "Open Your Eyes," was "the only official picture made especially for the United States Public Health Service."

"Fit to Win" and "The End of the Road" have the official backing and authorization of the Public Health Service.

Universal Enters Its Eighth Year

Big Producing and Distributing Organization Celebrates Seventh Anniversary in the Film Industry

JUNE, 1919, will mark the close of the seventh year of Universal activities and Carl Laemmle, president of the company, said: "Universal has about completed the most successful year in its history. During the last year and in preceding years Universal pictures have become known the world over and the company now has exchanges in every part of the world.

The Universal organization within the last year has been greatly increased. An extensive advertising campaign is soon to be launched and all the Universal Exchange managers are preparing for the greatest year in Universal history. There is not the slightest doubt but that Universal's business within the coming year will be increased at the very least, fifty per cent."

On May 20, 1912, Mr. Laemmle, at that time manufacturer of Imp films, Charles Bauman of the New York Picture Company and W. H. Swanson, manufacturer of Rex pictures, combined their interests and the Universal Film Manufacturing Company became a reality.

At the time the company was formed the Motion Picture Sales Company was waging war with the Patents Company, an organization which was endeavoring to prevent independent manufacturers from manufacturing film and selling them in the United States.

The offices of the Universal Company were first opened at No. 1 Union Square and on October 1 the offices were moved to 1600 Broadway, their present location. In July of 1912, Mr. Laemmle made a trip to Europe and opened the first American independent manufacturers' foreign offices. In September of the same year the announcement of the purchase of the 12,000 acres of land in the San Fernando Valley, California, was made. Universal City was later erected on this land but at the time of the purchase the Universal western plant was at Hollywood, Cal.

Later, the Crystal Film Company added its productions to the Universal company. In 1916 the Fort Lee, New Jersey, studios were erected and many Universal photoplays were produced at this location.

Recently it was decided advisable to produce all Universal pictures at Universal City, Cal., but the Fort Lee property is still owned by the Universal. The directors at Universal in 1912 were Otis Turner, Herbert Brenon, Thomas Ricketts, and David Powell.

"Upstairs and Down" Exploited in Portland

THE new Selznick plan of scientific exploitation has been put into active operation. The pre-release showing of "Upstairs and Down," the first of the the series of Olive Thomas productions, in the Strand Theatre, Providence, last week, was so successful that Charles H. Williams, manager of the Strand, sent the following telegram to the Selznick Pictures Corporation the day after the opening:

"Olive Thomas in 'Upstairs and Down' at Strand great big success; jammed to the roof, big crowds turned away; keep up the good work; good luck."

Cooperation with Manager Williams began two weeks before the opening of "Upstairs and Down." First of all, advantage was taken of a Movie Ball, held at the State Armory in Providence, Thursday night previous to the opening. Miss Thomas had been invited to attend the ball as the guest of honor, and led the grand march with the governor of Rhode Island, R. Livingston Beeckman.

Louis J. Selznick immediately assigned Randolph Bartlett of his publicity forces, and Morris Safier of the Boston branch of Select, the task of conducting a big exploitation campaign.

The first move was to secure every available billboard in the city and its environs. The total poster display consisted of 110 twenty-four sheet stands, 75 six-sheets and a great number of handsome one-sheet portraits of Miss Thomas, the latter being framed and displayed prominently in stores and other public places.

For the first week these stands were used in conjunction with the Movie Ball committee, the dates merely announcing that Miss Thomas would appear at the ball. The day after the ball every stand was posted with new dates, announcing the showing of the picture at the Strand Theatre.

Joins International Film

The International Film Service Company, Inc., producers of the tri-weekly news reels issued under the independent titles of Hearst News, International News and Universal Current Events, which are released through the Universal Manufacturing Company, has augmented its staff from among the many released men of the war, among them being Ed Guetlein.

Mr. Guetlein has long been associated with the film industry.

Robertson-Cole Cites Its Record

Wonderful Progress Noted in First Run Bookings Throughout the Country in Last Five Months

WHAT is said to be pronounced evidence of the Robertson-Cole Company's rapid growth is the large number of first run houses which are booking its pictures through Exhibitors Mutual. Less than five months after their initial feature had been distributed in the domestic field, Robertson-Cole are now placing their output in many of the highest type of motion picture theatres in the United States and Canada.

It was in December that Martin Johnson's, "Cannibals of the South Seas," led the procession of Robertson-Cole releases through Exhibitors Mutual.

In a period of less than five months Robertson-Cole has an alignment of first run accounts that made pessimistic predictions look narrow and without judgment.

An official describes the rapid growth as follows:

"Robertson-Cole entered the motion picture industry to accomplish results solely on the merits of its attractions. Soon after inaugurating its distribution campaign through Exhibitors Mutual, they issued definite instructions to sell each production on its real merit.

"The highest type of motion pictures were produced by the various units allied with Robertson-Cole. Some exceptionally brilliant specials, in addition to "Cannibals of the South Seas," were added to the star series, among them being "The Turn in the Road" and "What Every Woman Wants."

"It was only a matter of time before the Robertson-Cole pictures began to meet with the approval of audiences all over the country. There followed the placing of Robertson-Cole offerings in the biggest theatres in the biggest cities.

"The successful Martin Johnson features paved the way for pictures starring Sessue Hayakawa, Bessie Barriscale, William Desmond, Henry B. Walthall and Billie Rhodes.

"In Washington, D. C., Tom Moore and Harry Crandall, recognized the merit of Robertson-Cole features, and their best offerings appeared in Moore's Rialto and Crandall's Metropolitan, with big success.

Billie Rhodes is "In Search of Arcady" in the Robertson-Cole production of the same name, just released

"Jumping way out to Denver, first run bookings were made by Exhibitors Mutual in the Rialto, Majestic and Strand Theatres. Moving over to Los Angeles, Robertson-Cole offerings have appeared as first run attractions at Graumann's Theatre, Kinema, and Tally's Broadway."

The open booking policy won Robertson-Cole a host of friends. The fact that an exhibitor could select one or all of the Robertson-Cole stars or specials is said to have made hundreds of exhibitors staunch rooters for the product of the new organization.

Robertson-Cole officials attribute their rapid rise to several things. In the first place they have laid every stress on obtaining the most popular stars available. Then they set a high standard for production which has to be met by every photoplay before it is accepted.

Marshall Neilan Has Two Playing Broadway

WHEN Mary Pickford in "Daddy Longlegs" is presented at the Strand Theatre, Marshall Neilan, the director, will have to his credit two great big special productions playing Broadway at the same time, the other one being "The Unpardonable Sin" at the Broadway.

And he is soon to have the third, which in his own opinion will be the biggest and best production of his career, "Her Kingdom of Dreams" starring Miss Anita Stewart.

Mr. Neilan is just now putting the finishing touches on this and in its making he had under his direction what is declared to be the most remarkable aggregation of film stars ever before assembled in one picture.

The list includes Miss Stewart, Anna Q. Nillson, Kathlyn Williams, Thomas Sanschi, Mahlen Hamilton, Edwin Stevens, Tully Marshall, Fred Huntley, Thomas Jefferson, Frank Currier and Wesley Barry. Every one of these has at some time or another been featured individually in productions and their combined salaries alone is said to total far more than many producers put into an entire production.

When Louis B. Mayer, Miss Stewart's producer, engaged Mr. Neilan as her director, he did so because he believed him to be the greatest director now in motion pictures.

The First National Exhibitors' Circuit has signed Mr. Neilan for a series of big productions, and aside from David Wark Griffith, he is the only director who has received this honor from that circuit.

Simplex Notes

Uses Simplex in Industrial Field

AT the David Blumenthal mammoth textile plant in Shelton, Conn., where thousands of operatives are employed, it has been necessary to work on both day and night shifts, and in order to bring the employees going into work on the night shifts, to their various departments in good humor, Miss Kenyon, supervisor of the Factory Welfare League, had several Simplex Projectors installed in the enormous factory restaurant.

There the incoming night shift is entertained and fed, and after going into work the outgoing shift is similarly treated. The installation of the Simplex, it is said, is responsible for the greater spirit of cooperation between the employees and executives.

This installation was personally made by Cecil R. Wood, of the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, southern New England distributors for Simplex.

Naval Expert Sees Simplex Factory

Olan L. Hawk, chief electrician of the U. S. S. "Pennsylvania," was an interested visitor at the Simplex plant this week.

Mr. Hawk, who is known to practically every officer in the Atlantic Fleet, is an authority on naval picture projection and is also credited with inventing a most novel and practical method of moving his Simplex Projector from one end of the ship to the other without "taking down" or disturbing the set-up of the machine.

This consists of a substantial four-wheeled coal truck upon which are mounted the projector, the rheostat, the film case and a reel of cable. At convenient places on the deck are located plugging boxes, so that the plug on the end of the cable can be plugged in at a moment's notice, and the machine easily operated from any location.

Mr. Hawk, who has been supervisor of the picture projection for Admiral Mayo since the commissioning of the "Pennsylvania" in 1916, told of many interesting incidents attending some of the deep-sea exhibitions.

One of the striking incidents which he spoke of was that of the gun practice which was indulged in by both the five and ten-inch guns under the turrets on which the truck containing the projector happened to stand.

The concussion attending the firing of these guns tore the ventilator tops from their fastenings and ripped the half-inch rivet from the bulkhead doors. After the firing, Mr. Hawk fearfully approached his picture machine, expecting it to be racked to pieces, but upon running it there was just as steady a picture produced as could be found anywhere.

Engages Miss Hawley

Wanda Hawley, in many Paramount and Artcraft pictures and special productions from the Lasky studio, has been placed under contract for three years more to play leads.

Truex Signs for Series of Comedy Films

Ernest Truex, screen and stage star, has been signed for a series of comedy films by Amedee J. Van Beuren, president of the V. B. K. Film Corporation, producers of the Paramount-Drew comedies and Timely Topics, Inc., producers of "Topics of the Day" released by Pathe Exchange, Inc.

"In signing Mr. Truex to appear in two-reel comedies," stated Mr. Van Beuren, "I am continuing my policy established with my pictures starring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, in making refined comedies of feature quality with stars of ability and reputation. I am firmly convinced that this type of screen comedy is a favored institution in America and abroad, and that there is sufficient demand for comedies of distinction to warrant the appearance of stars of the calibre of Mrs. Sidney Drew and Ernest Truex in two-reel pictures." Good stories are wanted for the new comedy series and synopses are being sent to the V. B. K. Film Corporation, 220 West Forty-second street, New York City.

Newspaper Campaign for "Virtuous Men"

In order to assist exhibitors in getting the fullest possible exploitation value from the title of their production, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin have prepared at great length, it is said, a complete newspaper campaign for "Virtuous Men." An intensive study of local conditions as applied to the exhibitor and his newspaper was made before mapping out the campaign. It was ascertained in what local cities the exhibitor preferred to supply his local paper with photos, mats or cuts for advertising purposes, and also the expenditures in general necessary in connection with this campaign, in order that every exhibitor might secure the best possible results with minimum expense.

Wins First Run Honors, Says Vitagraph

First-run bookings pre-empting the foremost screens of the country are recorded for Vitagraph's new Gladys Leslie production, "A Stitch in Time."

This photoplay was directed by Ralph Ince, who in the past has directed many productions for Vitagraph.

In the cast suporting Miss Leslie are seen Eugene Strong, Julia Swayne Gordon, Agnes Ayres, Charles Walton, Cecil Chichester, Earl Schenk and Charles Stevenson.

Schedules Paramount-Drew Comedy for May 4

"Harold, the Last of the Saxons," the Paramount-Drew comedy, will be released May 4. This story was written by Florence Ryerson and the picture was directed by Mrs. Drew. Amateur theatricals furnish the basis of the story and the late lamented comedian is said to have the most uproariously funny role of his career.

Celebrates With Fox Features

Exhibitor Exploits His Anniversary Week by Selecting Two William Fox Features and Wins Heavily

Theda Bara in one of the many appealing moments of her William Fox production, "The Siren's Song"

It is said that Edward C. Klapp, manager of the Rialto Theatre, at Amsterdam, N. Y., never overlooks a bet when he is playing anything special as he has just demonstrated by the way he made a huge success out of his anniversary week program.

Not only did Mr. Klapp celebrate the week of April 20 as anniversary week, but the Rialto advertised it as "The Big William Fox Week." In a half-page advertisement, published in the Amsterdam Evening Recorder on the Saturday preceding the celebration, the Rialto printed this special note to the public:

"By special arrangement with the Fox Film Corporation we have been able to secure two of the most popular motion picture favorites on the screen. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, William Farnum in 'The Jungle Trail.' Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Theda Bara in 'The Siren's Song'."

In addition to Farnum in "The Jungle Trail," the Rialto on the first three days of the week also ran the Fox Sunshine Comedy, "Money Talks," so that the entire bill, except for vaudeville, was made up of Fox pictures.

The advertisement of the Rialto was the biggest theatrical advertisement ever printed in Amsterdam, and created considerable comment. On one side of the display was a symbolical line drawing of a woman blowing a trumpet as greeting to a knight, who on the other side of the page carried a banner bearing "Anniversary Week" in bold type.

But Mr. Klapp was not content to rest with heavy advertising and publicity. On Monday evening he heard that two whippet tanks, just arrived from France to help in boosting the Fifth Victory Loan, were scheduled to be in Amsterdam on the following night. He immediately made arrangements to have the tanks placed in front of the Rialto Theatre.

Then he advertised, through the newspaper and by means of display cards placed on the tanks, that a $50 Victory Note would be given away free that night.

Speaking of this stunt, Mr. Klapp says:

"This, of course, gave me a record attendance, and after that it was unnecessary to do any more advertising, as the show spoke for itself.

"I am more than pleased with the week's business, and am sure that in making it a William Fox Week as well as an anniversary, I did a great deal to make the week a big success."

Trade Showing for "Khavah" First Aleichem

A PRIVATE showing of "Khavah," the first Sholom Aleichem story ever filmed, was scheduled to be given to the motion picture trade and newspapermen by the Zion Films, Inc., the producers, on Monday afternoon, May 12, at three o'clock, at Wurlitzer Hall, 113 West Fortieth street.

The greatest interest, it is said, has been manifested not only by the big exhibitors throughout the country, but by film fans as well, over the initial release of a story from the pen of Sholom Aleichem, who is known far and wide as the Jewish Mark Twain. Sholom Aleichem is known to millions for his wonderful stories, all of which have either been written in Russian or Hebrew. But this is the first time that the American public will have an opportunity to see for themselves just what qualities have gone to make the Russian genius so beloved by the people of his race.

The story of "Khavah" is taken from the series of "Teveh der Milchekeh" stories, and tells forcefully of the love of a Jewish girl for a Christian boy, son of the village elder. How she disobeys her father by marrying her lover, and how she fares because of this is as enthralling a story as was ever written.

The title-role of "Khavah" is played by Alice Hastings, star of the original, "Turn to the Right" company. Miss Hastings is supported by Giacomo Masuroff and Alex Tenenholtz. The rest of the cast is made up of Sonia Radin, Phil Sanford, Billee Wilson, Ray Friedgen and Anna Kehlman. The picture was directed by Charles E. Davenport.

Selznick Promotes Another

In accordance with Louis J. Selznick's announced policy of promotion from the ranks, Walter J. Porges has been appointed secretary to the Director of Sales of Select Pictures Corporation, Charles R. Rogers. Although a young man in years, Mr. Porges has had quite an extensive experience in the film industry, and has been in Mr. Selznick's organization for a considerable term.

Distributors Honor Rothacker

At Convention Held at Hotel Astor, Resolutions are Adopted Praising His Good Work

AT a convention of the managers of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchanges held at the Hotel Astor, New York, April 22, a resolution was adoptted to express to Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, their appreciation for the splendid co-operation he and his organization have gone to in relieving emergencies and assisting in giving satisfactory service to their exhibitor customers.

Furthermore the resolution states that a fact proven by them by statements of exhibitors is that no other group of exchanges can boast of prints with superior tinting and toning, or with greater quality in any particular than that in the prints made by the Rothacker company for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Mr. Rothacker's excellent system for filling emergency orders with promptness and accuracy is also praised, as is his prompt service and accuracy; this last deserving the tribute of an uninterrupted continuation of all laboratory work for First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

The following are the resolutions:

Resolved: That we, the undersigned managers of First National Exchanges, express to Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co., of Chicago, our appreciation for the splendid co-operation he has given us and for the extremes to which he and his organization have gone—far beyond the usual limits of business practice—to relieve emergencies and assist us in giving satisfactory service to our exhibitor customers.

Furthermore. We feel that it is both merited and fitting that Mr. Rothacker be told that to each of us here it is a fact, proven by the statement of exhibitors to us, that no other group of exchanges can boast of prints with superior tinting and toning, with clearer definition, with more carefully printed lighting effects, or with greater quality in any particular, than that in the prints made by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co. for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Furthermore: The excellent system installed by Mr. Rothacker for filling emergency orders for replacements of short lengths of torn or destroyed scenes and titles operates greatly to our advantage in the promptness and accuracy with which they are filled.

Furthermore: We know, from our experience in the past with the laboratory work of other concerns that the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co., in comparisons of quality, service, accuracy and promptness, eminently deserves the tribute of an uninterrupted continuation of all laboratory work for First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Furthermore: It is resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent to Mr. Rothacker, and to the Board of Directors for First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Signed: Harry Weiss, R. C. Seery, Chicago; Boyd Cunningham, Washington; W. E. Lusk, Cleveland; C. R. Beacham, Atlanta; James Skirboll, Pittsburgh; L. Bickel, Dallas; Jack Brainard, Oklahoma City; H. J. Fitzgerald, Milwaukee; Harry Scott, Detroit; J. F. Cubberly, Minneapolis; Lieut. Jim Anderson, Richmond; Lee Goldberg, Louisville; Tom Spry, Boston; J. H. Von Tilzer, New York; W. J. Heenan, Philadelphia; F. A. Fischer, Seattle; Floyd Brown, Indianapolis; F. W. Falkner, New Jersey; E. V. Richards, Jr., New Orleans; Percy Smith, Buffalo; Harry Nolan, Denver.

We have read the foregoing, and declare it to be a true copy of the original resolution.

Lieut. Jim P. Anderson, Chairman.
Harry Weiss, Secretary.

United Picture Theatres Grow in Milwaukee

REPORTS come from Milwaukee to United headquarters that largely through the activity of its local representative Alfred Tanzer, of Milwaukee, United Picture Theatres, Inc., can point to a wonderful membership and business for its organization in that city.

Out of thirty available theatres in the Wisconsin industrial center, twenty-four are reported as being served by United and of these twenty-four no less than twenty-two hold membership contracts.

It is announced that United members who have purchased additional shares during the past week, doubling and in some cases tripling their holdings, include Sandon Bros., Mankato, Minn.; Anton Gilles, Breckenbridge, Minn.; G. A. Ward, Chicago, Ill.; S. Bauer, Milwaukee, Wis.; G. H. Meyers, Champaign, Ill.; Jane Gilliford, Pomeroy, O.; Myers Bros., Chillicothe, O.; J. F. Wuerth, Ann Harbor, Mich.; Clinton Sq. Am. Co., Albany, N. Y.; B. S. Jordan, Ottawa, Ill.; F. C. Seegert, Milwaukee, Wis.; Frank B. Hammond, Chicago, Ill.

New and additional members announced by United during the past week total forty-three, bringing the total number of United theatres to 2,451 on Saturday, May 3rd.

President Berst announces the appointment of Mr. J. D. Levine as Manager of the Boston Branch of United. Having been Boston Manager for the General Film Co., Mr. Levine is thoroughly acquainted, it is said, with New England conditions and with the exhibitors of that territory.

"Bolshevism on Trial" Receives Praise

In addition to the approbation for "Bolshevism on Trial" recently expressed by Governor Calvin Coolidge of Massachusetts and Mr. Charles Black, president of the Omaha Retailers Association and other prominent citizens of Omaha, Select Pictures Corporation, received recently an exceptionally interesting letter from Mr. Paul Burlingame, chairman of the Louisville Board of Safety, lauding the production and its wholesome effect on the public mind.

Lyons and Moran Complete New Comedies

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the pair of laugh producers in the Lyons-Moran brand of comedies released through Universal, are at work on several new comedies at Universal series. The titles of three of their newest comedies soon to be released have been announced as follows: "Harmony in a Flat," "The Bullshiviks" and "Three in a Closet." Grace Marvin and Mildred Moore are the feminine leads in the comedies.

"Harmony in a Flat" is a take-off on the neighborliness of two couple, Mr. and Mrs. Rackett and Mr. and Mrs. Bliss.

In "The Bullshiviks" Russian cigarettes prove the downfall of two newspaper reporters, Eddie and Lee, who are sent to interview a Russian countess.

"Three in a Closet" is a comedy of fast action and fun.

Arrow Photoplays Will Release Christies

C. H. Christie, of the Christie Film Company, has arranged with the Arrow Photoplays Company of Denver, for the release of Christie films through that company for the states of Colorado, Utah and Wyoming. Arrow Photoplays have not previously handled Christie films and secured both the Christie Comedies in one and two-reel Specials for their territory. The deal was closed during C. H. Christie's stay in New York City. Shipments have already been started to Arrow Photoplays, including the new Specials, "Sally's Blighted Career" and "Rowdy Ann."

Correction

In last week's issue of the News, an article appeared with a heading "Faralla now Comptroller for Select." This was an error as Mr. Faralla has been appointed comptroller for Selznick Pictures, Mr. Derham being comptroller for Select Pictures.

Ormi Hawley Appears with Bennison

Once more it is said Betzwood executives have scored a ten-strike in the selection of a screen vis-a-vis for their cowboy star Louis Bennison. Ormi Hawley is Mr. Bennison's leading woman in "The Road Called Straight." Miss Hawley, who was on the stage before bringing her talents to the screen, quickly established herself as a cinema favorite, and was starred by Lubin in "The Ragged Earl" and later in scores of other prominent screen productions, including "Where Love Leads," "Runaway Romany" and "The Antics of Ann." Miss Hawley is firm in the belief that her Betty Swiftmore in "The Road Called Straight" provided her with greater opportunities than any role she has hitherto portrayed.

Completes Timber Scenes for Next Feature

Bessie Love and her company is back on the lot at Hollywood, California, after several weeks spent in filming exteriors for her forthcoming photoplay of lumber camp life, "The Little Boss," in the big woods of northern California. Most of the scenes were taken adjacent to Eureka California.

"The Little Boss" was especially written for Miss Love by Rida Johnson Young. In it Wallace McDonald appears as Miss Love's leading man, with Otto Lederer, Harry Russell, Karl Formes, J. Morley, Joe Rickson and Clara Knight to complete the cast.

Ince Plans Film Weekly for Exhibitors

A scheme for the exploitation of his stars and pictures is to be inaugurated by Thomas H. Ince, producer of Paramount and Artcraft pictures, at his new studio in Culver City. Every week a film will be produced which will be called "The Off Stage Film Weekly," and which will show intimate shots of the different stars, Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett and others, at their homes and during their leisure hours. The film will also show how the scenes are filmed and will be in effect just like a visit to the studio. These weeklies will be furnished free of charge to exhibitors of Paramount-Ince pictures.

Independent Sales Books Third Blackton

"A House Divided," the photodrama shown to the trade press last week by the Independent Sales Corporation is the third Blackton Production to be released under the Independent banner and distributed through the Film Clearing House Exchanges.

J. Stuart Blackton's labor feature, "Life's Greatest Problem," starring Mitchell Lewis and Ruby de Remer, was the second picture acquired by the Independent Sales Corporation after its organization, and "The Littlest Scout," a Paula Blackton country life story starring little Charles Stuart Blackton followed it.

To Produce Guy Empey Pictures

Important Banking Interests Reported Associated with Soldier-Star in Production of Series of Big Features

WITH the entrance upon the fourth week of "Hell on Earth," the special attraction which is to be distributed through Select Pictures, and which has Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey for its author and star, it became known that a million dollar company has been formed to produce special features in which the author and hero of "Over the Top" will be starred as either featured player, author or both.

The incorporation of the company known as the Guy Empey Pictures Corporation, revealed the officers as follows: President, James F. Shaw; Vice-President, Arthur Guy Empey, and Secretary and Treasurer, F. C. Richardson. Messrs. Shaw and Richardson, it is understood, are executives of one of the oldest and best known financial institutions of New York. Both are said to have been identified for some time past with several important picture projects.

According to a statement issued from the offices of the company, the Guy Empey Pictures Corporation was formed to produce "purposeful pictures," in which the famous soldier of "Over the Top" will appear as star or playwright.

The release of "Hell on Earth" will be awaited with intense interest, it is stated, by exhibitors and motion picture patrons. It is claimed for the picture by its producers that it will be epochal in its effect on the industry and feelings of the public. It is described as a dramatic analysis of the after-the-war conditions and their relation to the future of the nation.

The Select Pictures Corporation is said to be planning a nation-wide billboard and advertising campaign to introduce it to the public.

Work on "Hell on Earth" has been under way for a month at the Biograph studios with Wilfrid North, who directed Empey in "Over the Top," in charge of the production. Sergeant Empey plays the principal role, with Evelyn Martin, who succeded Laurette Taylor as star of "Peg o' My Heart," and since has scored numerous successes on the stage and screen, appearing opposite him. Miss Martin is considered one of the most talented and promising of the younger stars of the footlights, and it is predicted that her success in a principal role before the camera will be equally as great. Others in the cast are Betty Blythe, who appeared with Empey in "Over the Top"; Sally Crute, William Dunn and Marguerite Courtot.

Warm Endorsements for Fannie Ward Feature

PATHE reports that "Common Clay," with Fannie Ward as star, still continues to evoke praise from exhibitors and reviewers. Following "Infatuation," booked for the week of April 25, Quinn's Rialto, Los Angeles, put in the screen version of Cleves Kinkead's Harvard prize play for the same period, beginning May 4. The opening day drew record crowds.

Thoms A. Brown, of the Strand theatre, Iowa City, Iowa, writes to Pathe Exchange expressing his hearty endorsement of the big feature:

"It is with great satisfaction that I endorse 'Common Clay,' which I played to a highly successful business at my Strand theatre. The picture is as close to 100 per cent in all respects as any production on the market today. When an exhibitor presents such a charming star as Fannie Ward in such a popular play as 'Common Clay,' that exhibitor has an unbeatable combination in a presentation which ought to cause a broad smile in any box office."

Garnet Warren, the author of "Modern Cameos," who sat at the private showing at the time that Police Commissioner Ellen O'Grady, of New York, saw the production, while, unlike her, he does not suggest, apropos, the filming of the Ten Commandments, declares the story to be rich in profound teaching: "I feel that any thoughtful person who saw 'Common Clay,' he writes, "must have been deeply impressed by the tremendous lessons portrayed by it, and by the psychologic subtlety of Miss Ward in her remarkable performance."

Resumes Work for World

Montagu Love, after having played a stellar engagement in the legitimate and taking a fling at vaudeville as a headliner for a few weeks, is back at work at the World Studio at Fort Lee. Mr. Love is working on "Through the Toils," a five-reel feature that will be released in July on the World program. He is being directed by Harry Hoyt, one of the oldest scenario writers in the business, and who has had over five hundred pictures of his creation produced, it is said. Mr. Love will have as leading woman Eileen Cassidy.

Boosts First National Admissions

H. J. Fitzgerald, Manager of Milwaukee Branch, Refuses to Allow His Productions to Show for Less than Fifteen Cents

SUBURBAN and small town theatres, with ten cents admission price, are due for a shock when they attempt to book "Virtuous Wives", "A Midnight Romance" and other First National attractions in the Milwaukee territory, for H. J. Fitzgerald, manager of the Milwaukee branch, refuses to allow his productions to be shown for less than fifteen cents admission price.

"We are following this policy with enormous success," said Mr. Fitzgerald. "In fact, we have had no kicks whatever. We endeavored to get a few ringleaders to take up the idea. Since their success has become known, it has gone splendidly. The suburban theatres and the theatres in the smaller towns couldn't afford to pay the price we had to ask for our productions, and make money for themselves. There was only one recourse—that is, increased admission price. As a result, none of the Anita Stewart pictures, and the other leading First National productions, have been shown in this territory at a price of ten cents.

"The great cry of the managers was that the patrons wouldn't come when the price was raised. We reasoned with them in this way: Why should a motion picture theatre manager ask the same price for shows ranging in purchase price from $10 to $75, any more than a merchant should ask the same price for merchandise which costs different prices? In the outlying theatres in Milwaukee we held up the downtown houses as examples of increased admission price with no loss in patronage. None of the downtown houses are showing at the old price now, and just because the picture is shown for a few weeks later in the outskirts is no reason why its price should be decreased.

"Throughout the territory we are urging an admission price of twenty-five cents, for all First National productions, and for the Mary Pickford pictures, the price of fifty cents. Why not? If Ruth Chatterton appeared in this part she would easily draw two dollars a seat and pack any theatre in which she appeared. Why should a star like Mary Pickford appear for a lesser price?

"The progressive managers are glad to take up this idea, and there are no other kind—they have long since gone into other business."

Many First Runs Booked for "Virtuous Men"

SEVERAL of the leading houses throughout the United States are preparing to show "Virtuous Men" with big exploitation campaigns, according to reports received from many of the state right buyers of this S. L. feature in the various territories.

Within the week of May 12 there were scheduled two special openings of "Virtuous Men" in two of the biggest houses in the United States. H. C. Sineral, general manager of Co-Partner Attractions, who purchased "Virtuous Men" for Ohio, western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, states that the production will be presented for a run in the Grand Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, commencing Sunday, May 11.

Sineral is spending an unusual amount of money in a pre-exploitation campaign in behalf of "Virtuous Men" and will conduct a big advertising campaign in the Columbus newspapers.

On Monday, May 12, "Virtuous Men" opened at the Garden theatre in Paterson, N. J., one of the largest of the chain of houses controlled by the First National Exhibitors' exchange of New Jersey, purchasers of the picture for that territory. Following a week's engagement at the Garden, the picture will be presented by A. M. Fabian, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Exchange of New Jersey in Newark.

Following these openings, the beautiful new Palace theatre of New Haven will present the S-L production beginning Monday, May 19. The Palace is one of the Poli circuit houses.

Announces "The Tiger Lily" Fisher's Next

THE AMERICAN FILM COMPANY announces that Margarita Fisher has commenced work at the American's Santa Barbara studios on her new production, "The Tiger Lily." This is said to be a vivid, swiftly-moving story from the pen of Joseph Franklin Poland, and was selected in fulfillment of the American's desire to present Miss Fisher in a role that would be more exacting emotionally than parts in which she has lately appeared. It is an absorbing story of the romance of a beautiful Italian girl living in America, and embodies a rare combination of humor and pathos that is admirably suited to Miss Fisher's capabilities.

For the star, Poland has created the engaging role of "Pepita," known among her people as "The Tiger Lily," because of the tiger-like fierceness and agility that commingle with her grace and purity. Through her efforts to keep peace and harmony in her little community she becomes involved in a chain of unusual circumstances from which she emerges as the affianced sweetheart of a young American millionaire.

Emory Johnson is appearing opposite Miss Fisher, and the cast includes also George Periolat, J. Barney Sherry, E. Alyn Warren, Mme. Rosita Marstini, Beatrice Van and Frank Clark. The production is being directed by George L. Cox.

Jesse Goldburg Returns from Coast Trip

Jesse J. Goldburg, General Manager of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, arrived in New York last week from the West Coast Studio, after an absence of four weeks. Mr. Goldburg is bringing with him "South of Santa Fe" and "The She Wolf," the first Western dramas starring Texas Guinan, also the first Mack Swain comedy. These will be shown to the trade at a private showing some day during the next week.

William L. Sherrill, President of the Company, is still at Los Angeles overseeing production on the Westerns and Poppy Comedies. He expects to return to New York shortly.

Mr. Goldburg's itinerary since leaving for the coast has included stops at Chicago, Minneapolis, Des Moines, and Kansas City on his way out. He remained in Los Angeles two weeks, and on the return trip stopped at San Francisco, Seattle, Chicago and Cleveland. Mr. Goldburg's stops were in connection with the six-reel production, "Once to Every Man," which has now been disposed of in all the territory covered on this trip, it is said.

Describes Next Feature for Dustin Farnum

United Picture Theatres through its president, J. A. Berst, announces that "Dustin Farnum will shortly be starred in a new and 'different' kind of drama, a play that will mark a radical departure from the plots and characterizations which have long been identified with that star.

Mr. Berst does not divulge the title of the forthcoming production, but states that it will be presented on a most lavish scale, and will mark, perhaps, a turning point in motion picture production. It is even predicted that other producers will follow suit when they see the popularity expected to be immediately won by the forthcoming new play. A great deal of speculation has consequently been aroused in motion picture circles, it is said, as to the character of this Farnum production.

New Feature for Evans

World Pictures announces the purchase of an original story, "Home Wanted," by Lucy Sarver, which will be used as the next starring vehicle for Madge Evans. Work on the picture is at the World Studio at Fort Lee. Mrs. Sarver has been quite successful as a scenario writer, having had a number of her scripts produced by Pathe and other well-known picture companies.

"Fires of Faith"

"Fires of Faith," the big special production made by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in co-operation with the Salvation Army, opened its New York run at the Harris Theatre, May 5. This picture depicts the wonderful work of the Salvation Army both in war and in peace.

MAE MURRAY

McElravy in the Moving Picture World says of "THE DELICIOUS LITTLE DEVIL"—"This picture is delightfully fresh and pleasing. Mae Murray is vivacious and appealing and is supported by a good cast. Some very attractive things in the way of settings and atmosphere have been accomplished by the director, Robert Z. Leonard."

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTIONS

Special Service Section on
"The Delicious Little Devil"

SHOULD you be one of those who are going to play Mae Murray in "The Delicious Little Devil" we would advise your attention to four points in the exploitation: the appeal of the star, the title, the comedy and the spice that is indicated in the scenes that show her as an entertainer at the road house.

You know the worth of the name of Miss Murray to your patrons, but you should figure at the same time that she came to the pictures as one of the stars of Ziegfeld's Follies and then realize that you can offer her in this picture as appearing in a role that is "made to order." This is a perfectly clean picture, but there is the fascinating element of the chorus girl and this should be brought out in the illustrations, with the selling arguments making it clear that she does no wrong.

In another column we are suggesting some of the musical possibilities, and that this should be made the central feature of an all-comedy bill. At the same time the thrills of the story should not be neglected and you should emphasize that you regard this as an ideal offering. If you are able to see it in advance and offer your personal guarantee, so much the better. Certainly, with this picture released just as the vaudeville and legitimate houses are closing you have an opportunity to get more people in the habit of visiting your theatre.

WE have this: Mary McGuire is one of the little Irish girls in whom is born the love of music and dancing. At home her surroundings are crude and unpleasant, and it is the little sunlight that creeps into her life in the role of a coat-room girl in a restaurant that keeps her happy. She literally cannot keep her toes still, and when a celebrated dancer enters the restaurant and deposits her wonderful wrap with Mary she cannot resist pirouetting about the room with the finery over her shoulders. The manager catches her—and she is fired.

But just at that time Larry McLean has been appointed press agent for the peach Tree Inn, a road house that has gone to sleep under the management of the staid couple who own it and he determines to introduce some spice. So he advertises, saying that the snappiest of all road houses wants a girl for hostess and solo dancer, adding.

"——she must be two jumps ahead of the latest and as wise as a bartender—must be personally acquainted with the best wine buyers—a good future for a girl with a PAST."

Now Mary hasn't any past, but dancing lost her one job and she doesn't see why it should not get her another one. The past is supplied when she picks up the Sunday magazine of a newspaper and reads the romance of the Duke de Sauterne and a dancer who has disappeared.

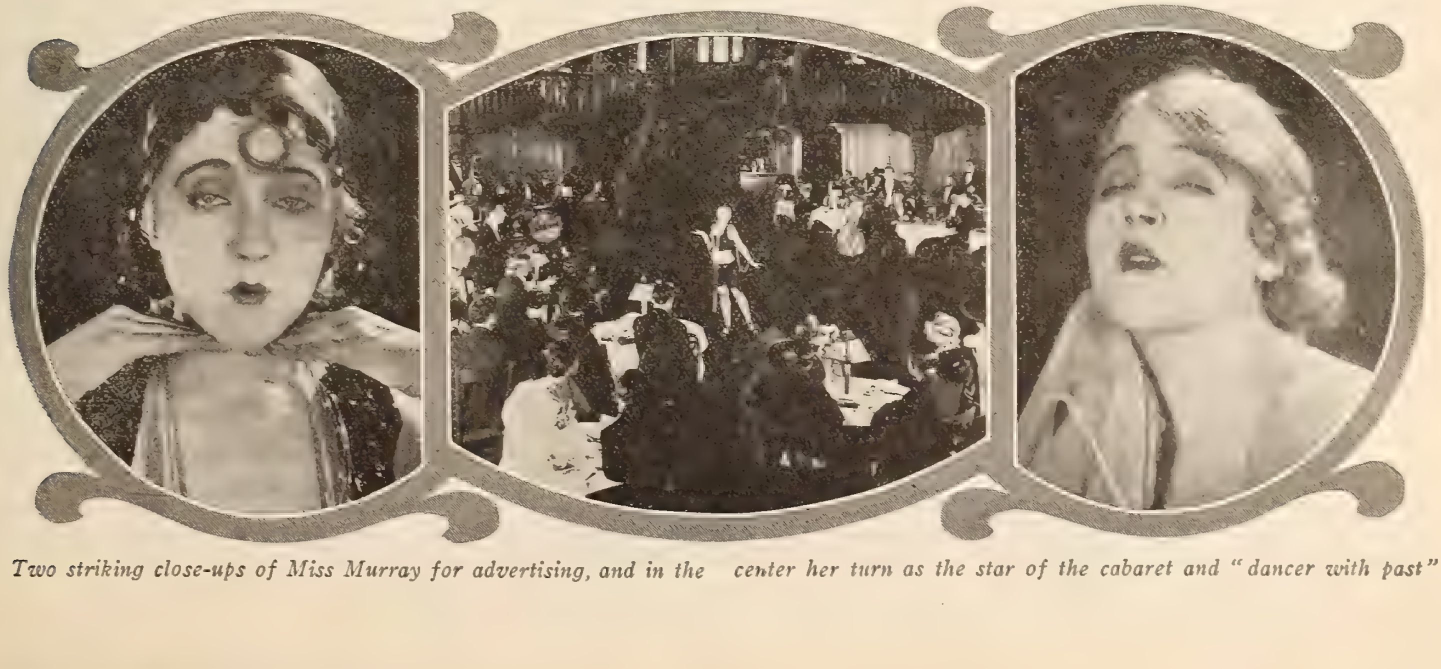
WITH the newspaper as her credentials, her charm and her dancing ability she is quickly accepted by Larry McLean who, for advertising purposes, carries out the possibilities by supplying her with daring costumes and a Roman bath with a "genuine" ex-Nubian slave—formerly Dinah of the kitchen. "You're wonderful—a perfect September morn," is Larry's verdict and the public accepts it with the result that Peach Tree Inn becomes the gathering place for those who love the rapider life.

Then there comes back into her life Percy, the fat butcher boy who gets employment as the "bouncer" and a new one enters the lists with Jimmie Calhoun, the wild young son of a millionaire contractor. But instead of finding her the ordinary girl of the dance hall he sees something in her eyes that calls forth his love. And she is equally smitten and romance gallops on.

But Michael Calhoun, the father, has a different idea. He thinks he knows all of these girls and so he arranges a party at the roadhouse with the girl as the guest of honor and his son "among those present." He intends showing his son just what sort of a girl she is, but though Mary dances in costume that shows her physical appeal, she refuses the wine and repulses the too friendly turns.

HERE the Duke de Sauterne is introduced. Larry McLean sees a fine chance of landing a big story in the newspapers and so he whispers to the Duke that he has a surprise in store and then presents him to the girl with whom he is supposed to have had an affair. Mary is Irish and she carries the role off, while the Duke pretends to recognize her and seeks to start upon familiarities, which don't get very far. We have the scenes of Mary going through the night, the other members of the party except the senior Calhoun, finally yielding to the effects of drink.

With the morning the Duke again at-



Two striking close-ups of Miss Murray for advertising, and in the center her turn as the star of the cabaret and "dancer with past"

At the left the count before whom she is posing as having a past, is turning his real attentions to her, and her wink is trying to reassure her sweetheart. At the right, the youth's father finds that Mary can not be tempted with wine. In the center, they have all failed against her—all but the youth that she loves, and she is supremely happy that she's only a little Irish girl and not a "woman with a past" tempts to start things and Mary flees to her dressing room where the Duke follows. She decided on flight with the entire group following her in different automobiles. She reaches her home, but there the Duke follows and he is seeking to take her in his arms when Jimmie arrives. Then there is a fight with Percy, the butcher boy, and the elder Calhoun arriving on the scene in time for the finish—and in time to learn that the Duke is a fraud.

There the father denounces the girl only to have her father and her uncle awakened by the noise to appear. They are all old friends—and Calhoun, senior, finds that he is mighty glad his son has picked out a good little Irish girl whose only sin has been to invent a scarlet past that she might earn an honest livelihood.

FOR those who make their own cuts there are some striking stills. One of these shows Miss Murray as a dancer in rather scant garb, another with her in the "Roman pool" and a third reclining in something of a Cleopatra pose. Any of these will get attention to your display. Of course you will use the name of the star and the exceedingly striking title close to the illustration.

There can be an excellent advance advertisement prepared with the use of the picture of Miss Murray in her dancing garb at the right and then setting in "want ad." style in double rule border so as to stand out at the upper left the advertisement that Larry McKean used:

> WANTED: For the snappiest road house this side of Monte Carlo: A girl for hostess and solo dancer. Must be two jumps ahead of the latest and as wise as a bartender. Must be personally acquainted with all the best wine buyers. A good future for a girl with a past. PEACH TREE INN. LARRY M'LEAN, MANAGER.

Then under this we will go ahead with her selling argument:

"Mary McGuire could qualify as a dancer, but she didn't have a past. So what was easier than to invent one, especially when a Sunday paper came along with the story of a dancer who has won a duke and then fled from him. She needed the job and so she took along the newspaper, said she was the woman in the case and got the job.

"The clothes she wore and those she didn't wear made her the sensation of the city. Then there came a youth who fell in love with her and whom she loved. But just at the wrong moment the duke turned up and tried to start things.

"Did he—with this delicious little Irish girl? He did not and more things were started for him than he ever thought about before. And things started for her sweetheart's father, too, until the millionaire found out that she was just the girl that he wanted his son to marry."

THEN here are some others, remembering to keep the lighter side up in your selling arguments while you are using the illustrations that show Miss Murray as a dancer:

"Ever since she heard her first hurdy-gurdy in the street little Mary McGuire had danced. She danced herself out of a perfectly good job, and then she saw an opportunity to dance herself into a better one.

"But this job required a very purple past. She didn't have one, but a flaming newspaper story supplied one for her. She couldn't see any harm in claiming to be the girl who had fascinated a duke and then had run away from him.

"Everything went along smoothly and she danced herself into the limelight and into the life of the youth she came to love—but then the duke happened to show up at the wrong moment. What was the poor girl to do?

"But you know Irish humor and Irish pluck and of course that got Mary out of her trouble and right into the middle of happiness—how is the best part of the deliciously daring story."

Then this one:

"She was the sensation of the big city—and a dancer at a fashionble road house. All the town knew about her beauty and also about 'purple past.'

"They wondered at her beauty and marvelled at her daring grace—and the stories about her added the zest to her career. But who was she, they wondered.

"Her beauty belonged to her and the grace that she had acquired—and so did her past—

"For she had invented it for herself.

"And she was Irish—and a delicious little devil."

THEN here are some of the shorter ones:

"She was a fascinating little devil as the foreign dancer, but when trouble came she had to be her delicious self to get out of trouble and win happiness for herself and the man she loved."

"How that girl could dance! She danced herself out of one job and then right into another. She became the sensation of the city—this foreign artist with the lurid past—hiding from the duke who sought her. Then the duke appeared on the scenes again and she had to flee from him—this time in reality and to confess that after all she wasn't the delicious little devil from Paris, but the fascinating little Irish girl from New York."

"If dancing hadn't gotten her fired from her job as a cloak room attendant she'd probably have married the fat butcher boy. But she had to work and she saw an ad that required a girl with a past. So she adopted one that she read about in the newspaper, astounded a whole city with her charm, won the love of a millionaire's son and then found herself in the grasp of a duke whose charmer she had pretended to be. But she was really Irish—and of course she got out of it—and you'll have lots of laughs and thrills with her."

For those who prefer to use line cuts instead of halftones the advertising pages of last week's issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS are worth going through. These illustrations can be reproduced at very small cost and they will attract the greatest amount of attention.

At left, the life she had at home, the love problem at the right, and the big finish scene in the center

Irish Setting and the Comedy Should Be Accentuated

GET out of the rut with this picture and put over a program at your theatre that will have every person who visits your house on Monday sending a half dozen more there on Tuesday. It's a good time of the year for an all-comedy bill and this picture just fits in with such an arrangement while the possibilities that it offers for musical arrangements are almost limitless and possible on a scale compatible with the possibilities of any theatre.

You can go still further than this and give a most enjoyable Irish flavor to the entire bill. The music will do it. For the overture use either Victor Herbert's "Irish Rhapsody" or his "Hearts of Erin." The former contains outright some of the best known of the Irish airs and the spirit of them runs all through the latter. Either selection, and we prefer the first named, will get the audience into a mighty good humor right at the start.

If you use scenics and can conveniently dig up one showing views in Ireland it will go well to follow the overture, but any sort of scenic is most acceptable as practically all of the feature is indoor stuff. News weeklies fit in well with the spice of the picture.

YOU can put on a special prologue to the feature by using "My Irish Rose" with a special setting. This should be a huge rose occupying practically all of the stage, but placed well back so as to get the lighting effects best. Have a male singer rendering the song, with the stage in a deep blue light at the start and the singer standing at the extreme right of the stage with a spot on him so arranged that it will not show the setting. Then toward the end of the song have the lights gradually come up, not too strong to show the artificiality of the setting and then let a girl's head appear in the center of the rose and the girl join in the singing as the spot is transferred to her.

Another arrangement for the same song would be a rose garden with the male singer and then the girl strolling into the scene toward the end and then off the stage, his arm about her, at the end. Screening should start at the last notes.

Attractive cut-out for lobby display made from three-sheet

Music of the lighter sort should be used through the picture. There are a number of dance scenes that call for jazz music and there are a number of cases where laughs can be accentuated by the accompaniment. For instance near the start of the picture where the restaurant manager catches Mary dancing "Funeral March" should be burlesqued, and a little later with the title "Michael Calhoun" you can use "On the Level, You're a little Devil." Then with the flash of McKean's add "How You Gonna Keep 'Em Down on the Farm."

At the point where McKean tells the girl how wonderful she is "Beautiful Doll" is appropriate and then with the title that tells us that the butcher boy is now the bouncer and that he takes the job seriously "He's a Devil in His Own Home Town." One more laugh may be brought in when the butcher boy sighs: "Gawd, how I loved that girl" when you can play "I'm Wearing My Heart Away for You." Still further along where the father orders the dinner "Hot Time," and then with the title "The cold gray dawn" use "I'm on the Water Wagon Now."

It may seem daring to some musicians but we would suggest using the old time "Bedelia" as the theme. It certainly gets the audience and holds up the light end of the picture. It should be introduced with the second title starting "Jimmie Calhoun" and then repeated with the youth telling the father he loves Mary and then at the end with the title "Gloria."

FOR the second musical selection, either orchestral or vocal we would use one of the old time love songs and then follow this with a comedy.

Your lobby display should be built largely around pictures of Miss Murray, especially those showing her in the role of the dancer. We are reproducing here a cut out that has been made from one of the three-sheets. It will attract attention anywhere. There is another showing her in a still more daring costume while one of the one-sheets supplies a splendid head effect. We would use the title in connection with each of these.

There are a number of scene pictures showing her in costume and these should be used liberally. Mount each one of them separately if you have the room and have your artists put in some designs around them with the name of the star and the title attractively used.

If your lobby has sufficient height you can get a good effect that was tried by M. Kashin at the Broadway Theatre with another picture by building a balcony to represent one in a restaurant and with three or four tables, each with a shaded red light. There should be no figures used, leaving the lack of people itself to arouse the curiosity.

Newspapers Praise Open Booking

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation Announcement of a Wide Open Booking Policy Gets Favorable Press Comment

OFFICIALS of the Hodkinson Corporation declare that those who constantly berate the lack of interest shown by the powerful daily newspapers of America in motion pictures and in motion picture evolution would change their opinions materially if they could see the attention being focussed by newspapers in the larger cities upon the revolutionary W. W. Hodkinson decision to shift completely away from program and star series methods of selling in favor of selling each and every picture released by it on its individual merit and value.

The Philadelphia North American says:

"At last things are happening in the movie world that are going to revolutionize a good many more things before they are thru, and incidentally put out better and better pictures. Up to the present time most people producing pictures sold them on a program basis. The man who showed the pictures to the public was forced to take the films as they came along, good ones occasionally, the bad ones sandwiched in, and most just average movie. He seldom saw a picture before he bought it, and he had to take them all if there were any at all he wanted.

"But times are changing. The last year has seen more and more pictures being offered on their own merits, without being tied up to any others. And last week W. W. Hodkinson, who controls the output of many new features, announced that henceforth all of his pictures will be sold singly. Metro Pictures have made a similar assertion; Vitagraph is following suit. And the trend of the times will inevitably draw all the rest of the producers and distributors along in the movement.

"This means that bad pictures, weak pictures, pictures made merely to exploit a star and without any story power at all, will fail. It means that pictures will all have to be good enough to stand on their own legs, and that the day of the good story, plus a well-balanced cast and careful production, has dawned at last. Democracy will reign in the movies as well as the rest of the world."

Bureau Chooses Films with Economic Theme

CONSIDERED by them as one of the most important activities of the Bureau of Commercial Economics, of Washington, D. C., is the presentation of motion picture films which will tend to stifle untoward labor and sectional unrests throughout the country, according to its sponsors.

Recent disturbances throughout the country, notably those occurring in middle west cities on May Day, is declared to have given rise to a serious question, and the government is seeking through the Bureau of Commercial Economics, to answer it.

Dr. Holley, director of this bureau, has been the guest of Harry Levey, general manager of the Universal Industrial Department for several days, and while in New York, has chosen several of that company's industrial and educational features to present under the auspices of his bureau.

"We intend to show welfare films," he said. "Pictures which visualize the favorable working conditions in the average American factory, and which will contrast them with conditions in plants under the dominion of those sects which encourage unrest in labor communities. It is a big task and a delicate one, but it is one for which motion pictures may be favorably adopted."

At Cleveland on May 15, under the direction of Dr. Holley, and with the co-operation of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, a free exhibition of motion pictures was given in the Public Square. It is said to be in Cleveland that the most intense feeling broke out on May 1, and it was in that city that federal soldiers were in readiness with machine guns to quell the riot which seemed impending.

Dr. Holley had the following to say about the influence of motion pictures in campaigns of national importance:

"Never in history has so remarkable a medium for the instruction of the masses existed. Motion Pictures, based upon a theme which is a great public issue, but which is little understood by the working classes, have provided the simplest and at the same time, the most effective means of exploitation available."

Johnny Dooley Completes Two New Comedies

DETAILS concerning the launching of the popular comedian Johnny Dooley, in comedy films have just been made public by Clarence L. Bach, president of the Johnny Dooley Film Comedies, Inc., with offices in the Longacre Bldg. Ever since it became known a month ago that Johnny Dooley was to be starred in films, it has been the consensus of opinion that he was one of the best available in the comedy line. Mr. Bach, who is interested in "Listen Lester" the Cort success at the Knickerbocker Theatre, in which Johnny Dooley was the principal comedian, realized this fact and is said to have put Johnny under a long-term contract for motion pictures.

The company will make two-reelers, two comedies having already been completed at the Biograph studio. The third is now being cast and Director John D. Schulze is expected to begin work on it.

That Johnny Dooley is all that was expected of him as a film comedian is said to be demonstrated by his first picture. His personality, his unique methods of putting over his fun, his unusual acrobatic ability and his long experience as a pantomimist combine to make him an ideal film comedian.

In the supporting cast are Tom Blake, Lillian Walker, Dora Mills Adams, Alice Mann and Walter Lewis.

Professional dignity bids fair to be temporarily shattered in this situation pictured in "As a Man Thinks," the Augustus Thomas-Harry Raver-Four Star production released by Hodkinson through Pathe.

Elvidge Starts Another for World Film

Activity at the World studio at Fort Lee is at high tide these days. June Elvidge having finished "The Social Pirate" has commenced work on a new five reel picture which Tefft Johnson will direct. It bears the working title of "Love And The Woman."

The cast engaged to support Miss Elvidge is headed by George Macquarrie, who having finished a spring theatrical engagement with Grace George has come back to the picture game. Others in the cast are Rod LaRocque, Laura Burt, who it will be remembered was the original Madge in "Old Kentucky," Marion Barney, Donald Hall, Lillian Lawrence and Edward Roseman.

The story was written by Phil Lonergan and was put in scenario form by Giles R. Warren under the direction of Charles Sarver, scenario editor of World pictures.

Will Soon Sell Films Around the World

Another link has been forged in the chain which Robertson-Cole is drawing around the world with its high class motion pictures.

They have just closed a deal with the Oriental Trading Company of Soerabaya, Java, whereby a number of their productions will be distributed in the territory of the Dutch East Indies, Strait Settlements, and the Federated Malay States.

Karel Hymans, head of the Oriental Trading Company, who was in New York, consummated the deal, which is considered one of the most important made in recent weeks by Robertson-Cole.

Houdini Arrives at Lasky Studio

Harry Houdini, monarch of mystery, has arrived at Hollywood, Cal., where he started work immediately at the Lasky studio under the direction of Irvin Willat on the big six-reel mystery picture written specially for him by Arthur B. Reeve, author of the "Craig Kennedy" stories, and John Gray.

Houdini was met at the Santa Fe station in Los Angeles by Studio Manager Fred Kley and others, including a number of newspaper and publicity men who had been lying in wait for him with a number of stunts of extrication which they figured he would be unable to perform. They wasted no time in setting the famous escape artist to work and in a few minutes they had chained and roped him to one of the big wheels of a locomotive. When they believed he was secure they told him he might release himself if he could. He did so in less than a minute.

Announces New Attraction Has All-Star Cast

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., announces the selection of Joseph Medill Patterson's well-known novel, "A Little Brother of the Rich," for a forthcoming Universal Special Attraction. Lynn Reynolds is now selecting the all-star cast. Frank Mayo will have the leading juvenile role and J. Barney Sherry will star in the older masculine role. Kathryn Adams and Lillian Leslie will share equal honors in the picture.

Frank Mayo was recently seen with Mary MacLaren in "The Amazing Wife" and J. Barney Sherry has been starred with Gloria Swanson in Triangle productions. Miss Adams has been supporting Earle Williams with the Vitagraph Company and Miss Leslie was a star with Lubin.

Curator Praises Dawley's Latest Feature

Further evidence of the amazing amount of interest aroused by the exhibitions of "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain," the startling super-special produced by Herbert M. Dawley and distributed by World Pictures, comes to hand every day. One of the latest evidences of this interest is contained in a letter received by Major Dawley from G. Clyde Fisher, Ph. D., associate curator, department of public education, of the American Museum of Natural History, congratulating Mr. Dawley not only upon the realistic restorations, but also upon the attractive introduction and setting.

"A Night in June," Next Post Release

"A Night in June" will be the next release in the Post Scenic Series. It is another photographic achievement by W. A. Van Scoy, and is redolent of the delightful pleasures of early summer and the moonlit joys of youth. It will have an early showing at the Rivoli theatre, it is said.

Goldwyn Praises Latest Frederick

Goldwyn Officials Said to be Delighted with "The Fear Woman," Which They Think Will Further Star's Reputation

Louis Bennison, Betzwood-Goldwyn star

GOLDWYN studio executives are said to be delighted with the latest Pauline Frederick picture, "The Fear Woman," which has been completed at the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, Cal. They are sanguine that this latest feature will further enhance her reputation as one of the screen's incomparable emotional artistes. Never before in her career has Miss Frederick been called upon to portray such a cariety of emotions, it is said, as are demanded by the exacting role of Helen Winthrop.

"The Fear Woman," by Izola Forrester, author of Geraldine Farrar's latest Goldwyn release, "The Stronger Vow," is Miss Frederick's third Goldwyn picture. Following her previous successes, "The Woman on the Index," and "One Week of Life," Miss Frederick's new vehicle presents a modern psychological study, replete with a dramatic situations which increase in intensity up to a final smashing climax, according to the description by these who are close followers of the productions.

In "The Fear Woman," Miss Frederick plays the difficult role of a young woman who has grown, flower-like, to maturity, only to discover that a horrible weakness has afflictted every member of her family for generations past. How the unsuspecting girl meets this disclosuhe; how she is overcome by the sudden fear that she may become the victim of the curse; her fight against this possibility, and the more subtle terror lest she may never rise above its shadow are portrayed by Miss Frederick with characteristic forcefulness.

The play discloses the beginning of the degeneration of a beautiful character. The girl realizes that she must deny the call of love; when suddenly, from without, the love of the man she has resolved to renounce, lifts her from the throes of despair, and permits her, tremblingly and haltingly, once more to face the realities of the objective world about her.

Supporting Miss Frederick, is that consummate actor, Milton Sills, and several other well-known players, including Harry Northrup, Walter Hiers and Beverly Travers.

William Duncan Completes "Man of Might"

AFTER long and tedious weeks of hard work and accepting many risks, William Duncan and his co-players have finished the great Vitagraph serial, "The Man of Might."

The conclusion of work on Vitagraph's successful serial comes at an opportune time for the Los Angeles Victory Loan committee. Mr. Duncan's co-operation was asked immediately this committee had been organized, and as the two heaviest weeks of the campaign still loom ahead, the committee is especially delighted to be able to avail itself of his services.

Mr. Duncan tells of an interesting experience which befell him in returning to Los Angeles after many weeks to attend a meeting at the Hotel Alexandria to arrange for the participation of the motion picture industry in the fifth and final drive. The bellboy directed him to one of the parlors in the mezzanine floor. Gathered there he found women in decollete gowns and men in evening dress, while on a flower-bowered platform stood a distinguished-looking speaker passionately appealing to some invisible entity or influence for divine guidance.

Duncan stood stock still in the doorway, abashed and perplexed. And even as he stood there an organ broke forth and the distinguished man on the platform led the audience in the singing of "Rock of Ages." Mr. Duncan accosted a waiter who was passing.

"Say, I want to know," he said to him, "if I am a second Rip Van Winkle. I have been away on the highlands and in the backwoods for several months, and if these folks in here are film folks, I want to ask you if I can find a hardware men's convention in session around here anywhere."

The waiter laughed heartily.

"Why, that's the Society for Sending Bread and Bibles to Bessarabia meeting in there," he chortled. "Come along and I will show you where you belong. I know you; you're Bill Duncan."

W. H. Productions Sell Re-Issues

W. H. Productions Company are rapidly closing out the territories in the United States on their latest re-issues, "Custer's Last Fight," the two-reel Wm. S. Hart re-issues, viz., "Jim Cameron's Wife" and "His Hour of Manhood," and the series of twelve Arbuckle re-issues.

There is being prepared it is said on "Custer's Last Fight" a remarkable line of advertising matter considering that this feature is in three reels.

The advertising on the two Wm. S. Hart re-issues will consist of one, three and six sheet posters and a lobby display.

"Scientific Exploitation" Is Next

Lewis J. Selznick, President of Select, States that His Organization will Aid Exhibitors Along Advanced Lines

"SCIENTIFIC exploitation is to be the next important development of the moving picture industry."

This statement is made by Lewis J. Selznick, president of the Select Pictures Corporation. Exploitation was the principal theme of the convention of the Select Branch managers in New York two weeks ago, and since then the organization has been busy developing plans for co-operation with exhibitors along new and advanced lines.

"Pictures are costing more money than ever before," says Mr. Selznick. "The public is educated and will not stand for anything but the best. The best is expensive. The exhibitor, to be successful, must meet this demand, and the producer cannot keep going ahead unless the improvements can be made profitable. Popular stars, great stories, and high class directors all cost more than ever before.

"Consequently it is necessary that the exhibitor, from whom must come the money to pay for these big productions, shall increase his receipts. The aim of the Select Pictures Corporation always has been to co-operate with the exhibitor and guarantee that he shall make a profit on every production. Now we are going to go even farther than that.

"We now propose to help exhibitors become better showmen. We are organizing an exploitation department along lines that are far ahead of anything previously devised. We do not propose to sit in our New York offices and send out a lot of suggestions. We will have a staff of exploitation experts in every branch office, who will go direct to the theatre, study the local conditions, and show the exhibitor how he can boom his business.

Elaine Hammerstein, Who Has Been Engaged for Selznick Pictures

"The exhibitor has so many problems on his hands, that in many instances he has overlooked one of the most important phases of his business. Staging his shows, making his theatre attractive, exercising care in booking only the biggest attraction, and handling all the machinery of his house, he has no time left to devote to scientific exploitation. And it makes no difference what he has in his theatre, if he does not get the news to the public, he is not going to get the results at the box office that he deserves.

"Quality in itself is not sufficient—publicity in itself it not sufficient. To get big business it is necessary to have quality and publicity go hand in hand. That is what Select stands for, and we expert to open the eyes of exhibitors to possibilities of profits of which they have not even dreamed heretofore.

"I have made it my business to keep in touch with the public, and feel the pulse of millions daily, and my experience is that the public is generous and quick to respond as soon as you let it know you have something it wants."

"Woman Under Oath" Florence Reed's Next

IS a woman temperamentally fitted for service on a jury in a criminal case? Does femine intuition make females better arbiters than men? Will that intuition which women are conceded to possess in high degree prove a surer and safer guide than mere masculine logic? What would happen were a lone woman juror, holding out against the opinion of eleven mail co-jurors, to find herself bullied, brow-beaten, harrangued and almost third-degreed?

These and similar questions naturally arise from the announcement now made that Florence Reed's next United screen vehicle has to do with what is described as the remarkable case of the first women juryman appointed in a certain State. With this subject of timely, public, and particularly of feminine interest as its theme, the shortly forthcoming release will bear the title: "A Woman Under Oath," President Berst announces.

The scenes of the forthcoming six reel United feature are laid in and around New York City with a well known court of justice as the central setting. In contrasting relief are scenes of gaiety, cabarets, masked ball, and lively settings of city night life which furnish the lighter touches to the story.

Prominent in Miss Reed's supporting cast are Hugh Thompson, Gareth Hughes, David Powell, Harold Entwhistle, Thomas McGuire, Walter McEwan, Edward Elkus, Edward Brennan, Frank DeCampe, May McAvoy, Mildred Cheshire, Florida Kingsley, and Mrs. Jennings.

Frank Finnegan Joins Famous Players

Frank X. Finnegan, noted short story writer, has been placed under a year's contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to work in the scenario department at the West Coast studio, which is under the supervision of Frank Woods.

Mr. Finnegan has gained considerable reputation as a magazine writer, his stories having appeared in Collier's, Smith's, Munsey's and many other popular magazines.

Introduces New Ideas in Picture Titles

George Middleton, who produced and directed the series of three features starring Beatriz Michelena, which Robertson-Cole will release through Exhibitors' Mutual, has always been regarded as one of the most original men in his line. His previous efforts with Miss Michelena's offerings were always marked by some departure from the beaten track of motion picture direction.

With "Just Squaw," Middleton has introduced several new and artistic features. The most noteworthy of these is a new make-up of quotation title, wherein the picture of the character speaking is embodied into the art work that co-operates with the hand-printed verbage.

"Just Squaw" will be released by Robertson-Cole this month.

Sullivan General Manager of Kinograms

Denis J. Sullivan, former general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation and for the last year manager of distribution for the Government's Division of Films, has been named general manager of Kinograms.

He will give special attention to sales and distribution work in connection with Kinograms and its allied interests.

Mr. Sullivan came to the film industry at the instance of John R. Freuler as the chief of sales and distribution for the Freuler film enterprises, which included a number of successful serials, the Charles Chaplin "Lone Star" comedies and later the whole of the distribution affairs of the Mutual.

Buys Southern Rights to "Unpardonable Sin"

One of the biggest motion picture deals ever closed for this part of the country it is said was consummated in Chicago when Col. Levy for the Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, Kentucky bought the Kentucky and Tennessee Rights to "The Unpardonable Sin." Herbert Sonborn acted for Harry Garson in the transaction.

The Big Feature Rights Corporation will put out "The Unpardonable Sin" as a road show at prices ranging from 25 cents to $1 percentage bookings only. Arrangements have been made already for two weeks in Louisville.

Minnesota Boosts Chester

Minnesota's Ten Thousand Lakes Association is arousing intense interest throughout the Northwest, it is claimed, in "Itasca Makes Her Bow," Outing-Chester release No. 11, which pictures the source and early life of the Mississippi River. Through the efforts of J. F. Cubberley, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of the Northwest, the Association has learned of the subject, and many of the officials have viewed it at a private showing. As a result it is said the big travel-promoting organization is backing it and interesting every citizen and society it can reach.

Newman Display Cabinets Equip Theatres

The Newman Manufacturing Company, 719-721 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, with branch located at 68 West Washington St., Chicago, manufacturers of brass and wood poster and photo frames, easels, railings and ticket choppers, have just equipped the four theatres, of which A. F. Brentlinger is director general, with the very latest corrugated brass poster and photo display cabinets, with hinged doors and glass, made to fit around the theatre front. The four theatres referred to are the Liberty, Terre Haute, Orpheum, Fort Wayne, Murray and Murret of Richmond, Indiana.

Mr. Brentlinger decided on the Newman's Brass Display Cabinets because of their neatness and beauty, and the convenience for the insertion of new posters and photographs by means of the hinged glass doors.

William V. Hart Now with Dooley Films

William V. Hart, one of the oldest men in the history of the game, is now associated with the Johnny Dooley Film Comedies, in the Longacre Building, as business manager.

Mr. Hart was one of the first exchange managers of the General Film Company. At the inception of the Mutual Film Company he became associated with them also in a managerial capacity.

For a number of years it is said Mr. Hart looked after the booking interests of several Broadway houses, including the U. B. O.

Mary Miles Minter Back in New York City

After three years' absence from New York City, Mary Miles Minter, the little motion picture star, has returned to the east.

While it is declared that several of the largest producing companies and various individuals are besieging Miss Minter and her mother with offers, she is revelling in the delights of merely being back in New York again, and is having her first vacation in 12 years, ever since she started on the stage, at the age of five, with William Farnum, in "The Littlest Rebel."

Jack Pickford Makes Statement

Denies Emphatically He Was Dishonorably Discharged from Service. Kept Silent Because Ordered To Do So

JACK PICKFORD has broken his long silence relative to the recent charges that he was discharged from the navy "because he was unfit to be in the service of the United States."

In a statement issued by him this week he denies emphatically that he was dishonorably discharged from service, and added that he had not talked on the subject previous to this, because he had been ordered by the president of the court martial to maintain silence relative to the matters regarding which he testified in a recent naval investigation.

His discharge from the navy, he claimed, came four months after the court martial of officers in the east, and was granted so that he could engage in a propaganda picture for the army. His several assertions are made to dispel rumors.

Pickford's complete statement is as follows:

"I was granted an honorable discharge which shows that my standing was of the very highest, and which recommends me for further enrollment.

'Needless to say the government is not in the habit of recommending men for further enlistment who are not fit for service, and the rating shown in my discharge indicates that I am eligible for further enlistment at the present time.

"The reason I have not denied recent newspaper reports which declared I was dropped from the service, was that I had been ordered by the president of the court martial not to discuss the naval case in which I testified, and I felt I owed it to the government to abide by this order.

"However, these reports have grown to such proportion, I have been forced to make a statement in my own behalf."

It was declared at the Pickford studio that the testimony of the motion picture actor at the court martial of the eastern officers was of minor importance.

Pickford said supplementary to his statement that he has been accepted as a member of the Allied World War Veterans of Los Angeles, an organization composed of veterans who were honorably discharged from service. He said the organization had made a complete investigation of his case, and that he would not have been accepted by it if it had found that he was dishonorably discharged from the United States navy.

"The Man Who Turned White" Is Arab Story

"THE MAN WHO TURNED WHITE," starring H. B. Warner, which will inaugurate the Superior Picture series released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors' Mutual, is undoubtedly the most pretentious production made by Jesse D. Hampton since he began his career as a motion picture magnate more than a year ago.

In this story of the Bedouins, laid in the atmosphere of mysticism, romance and treachery, it became necessary to use not only a big cast of carefully selected players, but hundreds of extra people for the street and desert scenes.

Each one had to be selected with the greatest care, as film audiences these days are critical and demand absolute realism in every detail of a story. A number of real Arabs were found, and, after much parleying, camels were secured from a circus which happened to be wintering in Southern California.

One of the greatest difficulties encountered by Mr. Hampton was his inability to obtain real types for the Arabian characters. His assistants scoured all of Southern California for real desert characters. Plenty of Hindus were to be found, and there were scores of Mexicans who had doubled many times for Arabs, but no real natives of the Soudan were to be found.

Finally a number of them were discovered, however, and the gold of the producer induced them to become screen actors, at least for the time being.

Biggest Novels of Great Authors for Screen

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON announces that the recently organized Great Authors Pictures, Inc., will produce photoplays from nothing but the biggest novels of great authors.

President Hampton declares that his first connection with an attempt to put into practice the theory of a balanced picturization of a great novel was with "The Barrier" made by Edgar Lewis from Rex Beach's book.

The success of "The Barrier" caused Mr. Beach and Mr. Hampton to form the Rex Beach Pictures Co., which they owned and operated personally until they sold an interest in the company to another producer.

Eltinge F. Warner and Zane Grey formed an alliance with Mr. Hampton by which Zane Grey's own pictures company was organized with Mr. Hampton as president and Mr. Warner as vice president.

So many other famous authors are said to have approached Mr. Hampton with the request that he put their novels into pictures, that he organized "Great Authors Pictures, Inc.", in order to handle a few carefully produced pictures a year in accordance with his own ideas.

Mr. Hampton has been in Los Angeles several months, building a producing organization to handle the Zane Grey and Great Authors pictures. The first author selected by Mr. Hampton for Great Authors series is Stewart Edward White.

New Story for Russell

William Russell's new feature, "Six Feet Four," now being filmed at the American Studios, is from a novel by Jackson Gregory. It is being directed by Henry King. Stephen Fox made the adaptation from the book.

"Virtuous Men" is Selling Fast

Ohio and New Jersey are Latest Territories Sold on Sawyer and Lubin State Rights Special

ARTHUR H. SAWYER and Herbert Lubin announced this week more sales in connection with their production, "Virtuous Men." The First National Exhibitors Exchange of Paterson, N. J., has acquired the rights to the E. K. Lincoln starring vehicle for the state of New Jersey.

The deal was consummated this week between Herbert Lubin and Jacob Fabian, president of the First National Exhibitors' Exchange.

Mr. Fabian is the holder of the First National franchise for New Jersey, and feels that his purchase of "Virtuous Men" will be an important addition to such features as "Whom the Gods Would Destroy," "Auction of Souls," and other big pictures which he is at present distributing.

A. M. Fabian, general manager of the First National Exhibitors' Exchange of New Jersey has arranged to present "Virtuous Men" for its initial run at the Garden Theatre in Paterson beginning Monday, May 12. Following this presentation, the picture will be placed in one of Mr. Fabian's houses in Newark for an extended run.

Arrangements have been made to publicize "Virtuous Men" through the medium of newspapers and billboards, together with several other "stunts" which he has in mind. Sawyer and Lubin will provide all of the original sketches done by Clarence F. Underwood and other famous artists of E. K. Lincoln for display in the lobby of the Garden Theatre.

S-L Pictures' executives also report the sale of the entire Canadian territory for "Virtuous Men" to The Big Four Limited, of Winnipeg, Canada. The Canadian purchasers of the S-L Picture will distribute this production through their offices in Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver, and already report many bookings in many of the larger theatres of the Dominion for the picture.

In addition to the territories mentioned above, "Virtuous Men" has also been sold for Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio. Up to date this production has broken all records for quick disposition of state rights.

New Interest Is Shown in Rapf Production

FRANK G. HALL, president of Independent Sales Corporation, announces the bookings on Harry Rapf's special production, "Wanted for Murder," starring Elaine Hammerstein, have increased more than fifty per cent. over the normal bookings recorded prior to the decision reached by the Peace Conference to the effect that the former Kaiser would be tried by five of the nations represented at the Conference.

The result of the action taken at the Conference may or may not have incited this increase of bookings on "Wanted for Murder," said Mr. Hall, "but the fact remains that since the announcement was made our branch managers have been kept busy filling orders for bookings on this feature. In some instances the exhibitors have referred to the incident in asking for bookings and, without an exception, they have reported that the picture did capacity business." "Additional prints were shipped to some of the branch managers following the increased demand, and our exchanges are doing a bigger business with the Rapf production than was done for any time during the preceding three months."

In some instances, exhibitors have asked for return bookings on this feature, and in their letters to Independent Sales and Films Clearing House exchanges, explain that in view of the fact that the newspapers are giving so much space to publishing the decision to try the Kaiser as reached by the Peace Conference, they consider the picture a big attraction.

Says Anita Stewart Scores in Louisville

ONCE more Anita Stewart is said to have scored the triumph of a week's engagement at the Strand Theatre, Louisville, Ky., to crowded houses. Repeating the success of "Virtuous Wives," she made history for the Strand box office it is declared in "A Midnight Romance."

The engagement of "A Midnight Romance" demonstrated some facts that are significant for exhibitors generally. "Virtuous Wives" had the advantage of the popularity and the wide advertising of a best seller. This combined with Anita Stewart afforded an invincible attraction. With "A Midnight Romance" the star would have to get the crowds. It was the true test for Anita Stewart.

Joseph Goldberg, the advertising manager of the Strand, directed his newspaper campaign principally to the women, reckoning "Virtuous Wives" a woman's picture, in that it is a delightful love story on the order of "Graustark," with the full appeal of that favorite form of romance.

One of the original advertisements prepared by Mr. Goldberg was a note addressed to the girls of the Louisville High School. It appeared Thursday afternoon. It was to the effect that the Strand had learned the plan of many girls to attend the final matinee shows on Saturday. The management called attention to the fact that while the capacity of the Strand is the largest in Louisville, the Saturday matinee crowds threatened to overtax it and the suggestion was made that as many as could attend the Friday matinee. The attendance Friday proved the "pull" of this advertisement while the Saturday business was capacity throughout it is said.

Miller Production Nears Completion

Charles Miller, Charles Miller Productions, Inc., is completing the first of a series of special productions for release by Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, through the Film Clearing House, at the Bacon-Backer studio, and announces that the production work will be finished within the next week. Herbert Rawlinson, Stuart Holmes and Florence Billings have the principal supporting roles. Charles Stevenson, Maud Hill, Regina Quinn, Herbert Webster, Vinden Friedly and Basil Webb are seen in supporting roles.

The first Miller production will be shown in six reels. Four of the reels are now completed. The title has not been announced.

Joe Brandt Goes to West Coast Again

Joe Brandt, manager of Universal's serial department, left last week on one of his quarterly visits to Universal City, Cal., where he expects to supervise the start of two new serials within the near future. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, is convinced of the value of serial pictures and is planning, it is said, on the production of serials that will outrank any productions of this sort that have been made in the past. Mr. Laemmle has supervised the building up of the Universal serial department which is said to be the largest in the motion picture industry. This department of which Mr. Brandt has charge has a separate scenario department, a separate publicity department and separate still department.

Books "Eternal Magdalene" for Ascher Houses

"The Eternal Magdalene," the striking Goldwyn extra, is gathering momentum in an amazing fashion it is said. Following its booking for a four-week run at the Bandbox Theatre in Chicago, it has now been booked solid by Nathan Ascher for all of the 20 Ascher houses in Chicago.

In a message to Samuel Goldwyn, Mr. Ascher says:

"Just contracted for 'The Eternal Magdalene' to play our entire circuit, twenty houses. When more producers awaken to the fact that it is better to have forty-five hundred feet of drama with speedy action than six or more reels that drag and are unconvincing, everybody concerned will be better off."

O'Brien's First Selznick

"The Perfect Lover" is the strikingly appropriate title of the first production in which Eugene O'Brien will make his bow as a Selznick star. The story of "The Perfect Lover" which was adapted from "The Naked Truth," by Lelia Burton Wells, which appeared in Harper's Mazagine, was selected from out of a mass of submitted manuscripts as the one best fitted to Mr. O'Brien.

"This lad is in a class by himself," says Ben Morris of the Olympia Theatre, Bellaire, O.

Harold Lloyd

"They do not make better comedies; we need more!"

Every exhibitor who shows these side-splitters says the same thing—pretty good proof that they belong in your house.

Selznick Company Takes Biograph Studio

Selznick Pictures Corp. announces that it has taken over the Biograph Studio, in the Bronx, which is generally considered the finest and most completely equipped studio in the East, and ranking among the very foremost in the country.

Production Manager Myron Selznick and Harry Rapf, general manager of the studio for Selznick are working full speed so that all will be in readiness by May 15, by which time things are expected to get fully under way at the studio.

Selznick Pictures Corp. has already arranged to have three of its companies work at the new studio. Olive Thomas, Elaine Hammerstein and Eugene O'Brien are all in readiness to start work on new productions at the earliest possible moment.

Miller Joins Juvenile Photoplays

Bernard L. Miller has resigned as assistant to the president of the Anita Stewart Productions to accept the presidency of the Juvenile Photoplay Distributors, Inc., with offices in the Godfrey Building.

Mr. Miller was formerly secretary to Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, and is a thorough believer in the future of the juvenile photoplay.

"Eighty per cent of the average motion picture attendance is made up of children and their parents," says Mr. Miller. "The value of the youngster is conclusively proven in the popularity of the serial as there is no question but the children make their success."

Capital Film to Produce Two Reelers

The new arrangements that have been practically completed by the Capital Film Company will introduce them to the exhibitors of the country as a producing as well as a distributing organization.

The new plans which are being crystallized by C. Eddy Eckels, co-operating with S. L. Barnhard will mean the producing by the Capital Film Company, it is said, of many new two-reel pictures of character made from the best stories by well-known authors, with the punch in them that will insure box office drawing strength, and enable the managers of theatres throughout the country to furnish their clientele with a clean, snappy, up-to-the-minute program which entertains.

Loew Praises Kenyon

Doris Kenyon's latest feature, "Twilight," produced by her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., drew from Marcus Loew a letter of congratulation to Miss Kenyon. Mr. Loew said:

"This is to let you know how pleased our patrons were with your picture, 'Twilight,' which was shown at our New York theatre recently. Many of our people stopped to tell the manager how much they had enjoyed the picture, saying it was the best of yours they had ever seen."

Both Star and Author Join Pathe

Alma Rubens and Dainel Goodman to Produce Eight Pictures for Pathe During Coming Year

PATHE Exchange announces that a contract has been made with Alma Rubens, former Triangle star, and Daniel Carson Goodman, the distinguished American novelist, for the production of eight pictures during the coming year. The productions will be made in the East, and most of the stories, it is at present planned, will be from the pen of Dr. Goodman, who is fully equipped for the work by his experience in literature and his intimate knowledge of screen craft.

Miss Rubens' likeness and similarity of method to the great Italian actress earned her the encomium of Rose Lee Marshall, playwright, who, in reviewing her principal successes, said: "Here we have in a mere girl the capacity for easily expressing a profound depth of feeling and the variant succession of emotions, with naturalness and a complete absence of 'acting.' She reminds me more of the great Duse than any other actress on the screen today."

Miss Rubens made her first appearance three years ago with the Triangle-Fine Arts, and among her most notable achievements was her work playing opposite to Douglas Fairbanks in "The Half Breed" and with William S. Hart in "Truthful Tolliver."

She was featured in about twenty Triangle pictures, including "The Ghost Flower," "I Love You," Cosmo Hamilton's "Restless Souls," "The Sphinx Woman," "The Firefly of Tough Luck" and "The Gown of Destiny." Recently she interpreted "Diane of the Green Van" and "Destiny."

Dr. Goodman gained fame as the author of "Unscathed" and "Hagar Revelly," an adaptation of which is being contemplated as the first offering in which Miss Rubens will appear on the Pathe program, although a definite announcement will be made later.

The doctor's entrance into the motion picture field came when he accepted the offer of the Lubin Company to prepare a series of dramas keyed to the same note of "Hagar Revelly." "Souls of Bondage" was the first of these. He wrote "The Battle of the Sexes" for David W. Griffith and collaborated with the eminent producer on "The Escape."

As literary director of the Triangle, Dr. Goodman wrote all of the Taylor Holmes stories, including "A Regular Fellow."

Victory Pictures Approach First Anniversary

NAMED in the darkest days of the war, when the Germans were hammering at the gates of Paris, William Fox Victory Pictures not only have lived up to their name, in that America conquered Germany, but they also have achieved complete victory in their own field as box office attractions, according to the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation. Decision to inaugurate a series of Victory Pictures was made last June at the annual meeting of the branch managers and home office staff of the Fox organization, each release in this group has been attended with success. In fact, it is stated by Fox officials, the Fox Victory Pictures have proved to be the most consistent money-makers of any programs offered to the trade this season.

When William Fox decided that three stars would make Victory Pictures, he selected Gladys Brockwell, Tom Mix and George Walsh and made the prophecy that these stars would show a development this season that would place them in the front rank of the screen's stellar players. That this prophecy has been fulfilled is seen in the tremendous popularity of Victory Pictures.

Of the releases made so far, five are Gladys Brockwell pictures, five Tom Mix and five George Walsh. The Brockwell pictures are "Kultur," "The Strange Woman," "The Call of the Soul," "The Forbidden Room" and "Pitfalls of a Big City." Mix has appeared in "Mr. Logan, U S. A.," "Fame and Fortune," "Treat 'Em Rough," "Hell Roarin' Reform" and "Fighting For Gold." The Walsh subjects are "On The Jump," "I'll Say So," "Luck and Pluck," "Never Say Quit" and "Help! Help! Police!"

Exhibitor's Mutual Announces Executive Staff

William J. Clark, president of Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, announced this week the reorganization of the executive office staff. It was effected without a single change in the personnel of the organization and in line with the policy Mr. Clark announced upon his election to the presidency of the company in filling vacancies from the ranks.

The office of assistant general manager, which was created some years ago, was abolished and the position of director of sales and exchanges created. Mr. Clark appointed S. J. Rollo, sales manager, to the newly created position and announced that henceforth he would, as president, be in active, general charge of the company's affairs.

Mr. Clark announced the following organization of the executive staff:

H. C. Cornelius, vice-president and secretary of the corporation, will take an active part in the management of its affairs.

G. Munro Hubbard, treasurer of the corporation, who has been a member of the executive office force since January 1, will be in complete charge of the company's finances, with S. F. Juergens as auditor.

S. J. Rollo is promoted from the position of sales manager to the newly created post of director of sales and exchanges, with the management of the field force and branch offices.

Colvin W. Brown director of publicity, will have charge of publicity, advertising, exploitation and special sales promotion.

Hayakawa's Next Picture His Best

Robertson-Cole Extremely Confident That "His Debt" Will Prove Biggest Box-Office Attraction

THE Robertson-Cole Company is making no elaborate predictions about the success of Sessue Hayakawa's next Haworth production, "His Debt," which will be released through Exhibitors' Mutual, but is extremely confident that it will prove the biggest box-office attraction of any Hayakawa offering, and they comment on scarcity of suitable subjects.

Probably the greatest difficulty which confronts Haworth in the production of the Hayakawa features, is the scarcity of suitable material for the popular Japanese star. Hayakawa has such a wide range of talent that he can appear to advantage in any type of character, yet screen writers are constantly trying to sell him material, they think an ordinary Japanese actor should desire and which no longer holds any appeal to the public.

Hayakawa has made a remarkable record since affiliating himself with Robertson-Cole, largely through his careful choice of screening material. "His Birth Right," "Bonds of Honor," "Temple of Dusk," "A Heart in Pawn," and "The Courageous Coward," have proved wonderful successes, all because they have been so unlike each other.

Now comes announcement that "His Debt" is different from anything else he has ever attempted. It was written by L. V. Jefferson, and prepared for the screen by Frances Guihan. William Worthington, who has directed all the big Hayakawa successes, also supervised "His Debt."

There is a decidedly human appeal to "His Debt" which smacks entirely of the Western World. Hayakawa is seen as the proprietor of a handsome gambling establishment which has a reputation of always playing "on the square."

In order to pay "his debt" to the girl he loved—the girl who devotedly cared for him and kept him alive after he had been severely wounded by the man she loved, Hayakawa sacrificed himself. No one can resist the forcefulness or the naturalness of Hayakawa's acting in the climax when Moriyama, with the life of his assailant in his hands, graciously saves him from prison in order that he might live and make happy Gloria Manning, to whom Moriyama owed a "debt he never could repay."

Famous Players to Film Peg o' My Heart

"PEG O' MY HEART," by J. Hartley Manners, one of the greatest successes in the history of the stage, is to be filmed in California by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as a big special production.

As produced on the stage by Oliver Morosco, "Peg O' My Heart" enjoyed tremendous popularity for years, and the title role, in the hands of Laurette Taylor, Peggy O'Neill, Elsa Ryan and others, became the best-known girl characterization in a generation. The play was recently released for motion picture presentation by decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, and the final arrangements for the production were immediately consummated between the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and Oliver Morosco for immediate activity.

In making the above announcement, Jesse L. Lasky stated that he considered it the biggest piece of production news of the year. "After long negotiation, co-incident with the insistent demand of exhibitors throughout the country that 'Peg O' My Heart' be produced for the screen," said Mr. Lasky, "to announce that we are actually ready to start the production and that the work will proceed without further delay, is a matter of the utmost satisfaction to us.

"The play will be reproduced with exactness of detail. William C. De Mille will direct and he has been placed in exclusive charge of the casting and all details of production. The selecting of those to interpret the various roles is now well under way, and Mr. De Mille has already chosen Wanda Hawley to play the part of 'Peg,' with Thomas Meighan in the leading male role."

Olga Printzlau, one of the most capable and successful of screen writers, has written the scenario.

That Wanda Hawley is ideal for the role is a fact which all those familiar with her recent work in Paramount and Artcraft pictures, notably in Cecil B. De Mille productions and as leading woman with William S. Hart and Charles Ray, will instantly recognize.

Whitcomb Returns to American Film

Daniel F. Whitcomb, classed among the veteran photoplaywrights, has returned to the scenario department of the American Film Company, Inc. Whitcomb served a long term under the "Flying A' banner, during which time he created a number of Gail Kane's best stories when that star was at Santa Barbara. Last year he severed his connection with the company to enter upon a free lance career, but has decided to abandon it in favor of his first love.

His first contribution to the "Flying A" literary bureau is to be a story for Margarita Fisher. Whitcomb characterizes it as a "highly dramatic modern story, that will exact more of Miss Fisher than any previous role she has undertaken to interpret."

Helene Chadwick Appears for Pathe

Helene Chadwick, the young ingenue who has recently been playing opposite Douglas Fairbanks, interprets the title-role of "Caleb Piper's Girl," a five-act comedy-drama produced by Astra, which is released by Pathe on May 18.

Miss Chadwick's portrayal of the absent-minded old bookworm's daughter is said to be quite the best thing she has done.

"Caleb Piper's Girl" is described as a vivacious comedy-drama of the lighter type.

Hickman to Capellani

Alfred Hickman, who is playing an important role in support of the co-stars Creighton Hale and June Caprice in "The Unknown Dancer," which is now in the course of production at the Capellani studio under the direction of George Archainbaud, claims that strange are the paths of the versatile artist. Mr. Hickman should know whereof he speaks, for during the past ten years his stage and screen appearances have embraced about fifty-seven varieties of characters, ranging from the Little Billy of "Trilby" fame to the Czar which he played in "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

Reports Good Business

Vitagraph reports unabated business on the Charles Klein picturization, "The Lion and the Mouse," which was first shown to the public at the Rialto Theater in New York. The extraordinarily extensive billboard and publicity campaign waged in the interests of this Alice Joyce offering has had the effect it is said of extending its popularity even beyond the lengths usually approximated through sheer merit inherent in a production.

More New Promotions for Select Officials

FURTHER developments in keeping with the announced policy of Lewis J. Selznick, president of Select Pictures Corporation, to fill important vacancies in that organization by promotion from the ranks, were reported this week. H. E. Lotz, who has been branch manager at Select's Denver Exchange, has been appointed Pacific representative; Oren F. Woody, a salesman at the Denver Exchange, has been appointed Denver branch manager, and Archie W. Moses, salesman at Select's Buffalo Exchange, has been elevated to the post of Buffalo branch manager.

H. E. Lotz, who has been appointed Pacific representative, will have his headquarters at San Francisco, and his territory will embrace Select's San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver and Seattle exchanges. He is said to be known personally to almost every exhibitor in that territory.

Mr. Lotz's successor at the Denver Exchange will be Oren F. Woody. Mr. Woody has been in the motion picture business for more than fourteen years. He is well known on the Pacific Coast, having been associated with the General Film Company and later with the Mutual.

Archie W. Moses, who succeeds S. S. Webster as branch manager of Select's Buffalo Exchange, first became associated with Select when Charles R. Rogers was manager of the Buffalo Exchange. Before his association with Select, Mr. Moses was a salesman for the Fox Film Company in Buffalo.

Special Service Section on

Beatriz Michelena in "Just Squaw"

HERE is a story chuck full of action, a melodrama with something doing all the time and exhibitors who are going to show "Just Squaw" should not hesitate to bring that out strongly. There is the same demand for melodrama there ever was when the interest in the story is sustained, and especially where there is a noted star with real beauty. The main thing is to make the character of the picture clear and arouse the curiosity of your patrons in it.

Beatriz Michelena has been away from the screen for more than a year, but she appeared in a number of published stories that scored big hits and before that her brilliant career in comic opera, especially as the star of "The Girl from Dixie," made her well known all over the country. Her screen successes included "Salomy Jane," "Mignon," "The Unwritten Law," "The Woman Who Dared," and "Salvation Nell." Certainly you should call attention to them through all your exploitation.

Her name should be played as strong as that of any star who has been on the screen without a vacation. There should be striking pictures of her, preferably in character, used. Your selling arguments should tell enough about the character of the picture to indicate the action and the tenseness of it and at the same time to leave the public curious as to the

There are unusual chances for lobby displays and mystical settings which we discuss elsewhere.

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture of any others?

STORY: We meet the Fawn, as a little girl, at her supposed mother's deathbed where the old Indian woman makes her halfbreed son swear that he will never tell that the girl is all white, the daughter of Jimmy Dorr who had deserted the old Indian woman to marry a white woman after the halfbreed had been born. At her behest Snake LeGal, leader of a band of outlaws had kidnapped the child from her mother and brought her to the Indian woman.

Shortly after his mother's death the Breed, gambling with some of the LeGal gang finds them cheating and kills one of them. He escapes and after leaving the girl in the care of the old minister and his wife goes into hiding. Ten years pass and the Fawn is now a beautiful girl, the Breed still a fugitive, but as a matter of fact hiding in the mountains near the Fawn's home, where the girl takes him food regularly.

His fleeting form had often been seen and he had been named the Phantom and numerous mysterious robberies attributed to him. The Fawn's other associate is Romney, who is madly in love with her, but whom the girl continues to tease.

To Rogue's Roost comes the Stranger, whom the preacher recognizes as the son of Abe Hollister who had been killed years before by LeGal, but he does not reveal the secret and the Stranger himself is using the name of Watkins. It is a case of love at first sight between him and the girl.

WATCHING his chance to "get" LeGal the stranger settles down at the wayside hotel. The Breed quickly scents the romance and warns the girl against accepting the Stranger's attention, telling her that he will desert her just as "their" father deserted her "mother." He has the girl convinced that there is the eternal barrier of race between her and the man she loved.

Romney, one of LeGal's gang, had determined to reform so as to win the girl, but when she refuses him he allows himself to be persuaded by LeGal to join in another robbery, promising him money enough to win the girl. But LeGal himself has his covetous eyes on the girl whom he wants for his "woman." He comes on her in the woods reading the warning from the Breed and in the struggle she drops the warning, but LeGal flees when he sees Hollister approaching. There Hollister finds the note.

Then the stage is held up and the messenger killed by Romney's shot. They get the loot, but a little later, with Romney alone in the cabin, the Breed comes on him and in turn steals the treasure chest and takes it away to his hiding place. But in the meantime Hollister has not abandoned his love for the Fawn and has presented her with a gift which she drops

At left, scene where she teases the young bandit, who seeks to marry her; and at the right, scene with the stranger whom she loves. In the center is the big climax, where the dying bandit leader tells her she is all white in the Breed's retreat on one of her visits.

THIS latest hold-up is too much for the law-abiding citizens and they organize a vigilance committee with Hollister at its head when the preacher, revealing the young man's identity, makes the suggestion. This is joined by Jimmy Dorr who has been riding in the hills for years determined to kill LeGal, but always without the courage to fire the shot when the opportunity presents.

Hollister, believing the Breed the real criminal, finds his hiding place and there discovers the loot and the present that he has given the Fawn. To him before there have been whispered strange stories of the friendship between the Breed and Fawn and he is now convinced. After visiting her home and denouncing the girl he goes in search of the Breed and finally finds him. Hollister offers the Indian a chance to fight, but he refuses because Fawn loves Hollister, though the Breed himself has resisted the temptation to break the oath to his mother and tell her that she is all white. Then Hollister binds the Indian and goes to turn him over to the posse that he may pay the penalty to Judge Lynch.

It is just at that moment that Romney learns the truth of LeGal's desire for the girl and there is a terrific fight in their cabin, with the result that Romney is stabbed and his body dragged to the woods while a third member of the gang is sent to tell Fawn that Romney is ill and wants to see her.

There LeGal attacks the girl and they fight. Romney, from the place where he has been thrown sees the posse about to lynch the Breed and dragging himself to the spot arrives just in time to save the Indian and tell them of the Fawn's plight. The posse starts, but the Breed who is the only one who knows the exact location of the cabin takes a short cut and comes on LeGal just in time. Then a third fight ensues with the Indian finally getting the best of it as the posse arrive.

LeGal is trussed up against the open window and just then a shot is fired. Dorr has won his revenge at last.

With his dying breath LeGal does the one white act of his life by confessing that the girl is the daughter of Dorr. "She is all white," he says. Then of course comes the happy ending.

NOW after we had used a striking picture of Miss Michelena—as large a one as the space will permit prominently at the top of the display we would follow this with the name of the star in large lower case type. Then underneath this should be the line in, say 18 pt Caps, and certainly large enough to attract attention:

"Beatriz the Beautiful."

That should be followed in small type with ample space left at either side saying:

"She could not resist the call of the screen and now the star of 'Salomy Jane,' 'The Unwritten Law,' 'Salvation Nell' and other noted pictures has come back in a vivid drama of the old West."

Then follow that with the title of the picture in type slightly smaller than that used for the star and let the selling argument on the picture come last. Here is one that leaves the climax strong:

"They called her 'Just Squaw.' There were only two people that knew she was All White. One of these was Breed, whom she believed her brother and who was under oath to his dead mother to keep the secret. The other was the head of the robber band who yearned to possess her.

"To her western home there came the Stranger. They loved, but she dared not marry him. She felt the eternal barrier of race between them. Then came a series of events that led the Stranger, now the head of the Vigilantes, to believe the Breed the stage robber and the girl his mistress.

"An hour later the Breed stood with the noose about his neck and the girl was in the arms of the robber chief, being choked into unconsciousness. Yet the truth was revealed —not a moment too soon—and the guilt avenged. How?—That makes it the tensest drama you've seen in months."

USE of all those suggestions makes the advertisement a little long, but we would strongly advise such handling of the picture, at least in the main announcement. Here is a couple of others:

"In her heart of hearts the Fawn loved the Stranger, but she had heard from her supposed half brother that a white man had abandoned her mother and the two little ones. The Stranger was persistent, but the Fawn knew that it could not be.

"Other men longed for her—one for his wife—the other that he might possess her—and around this girl there centered the most amazing series of events that you have ever witnessed. They robbed and stole and killed for her, and just as she was freed from the arms of the brute she loathed she heard from his lips the words:

"'She is all white'—and she was happy, as you will be after you have fought the grim battles of the old West with her."

"Two men could speak the words that would make her happy. One, the Breed, was bound by his oath to his dead mother. The other wanted this beautiful girl for his own. And a third man loved her, but she refused him because she believed the barrier of race between them.

"The Breed was about to hang for a robbery he did not commit. The girl was in the power of the real criminal. They came a shot from the stillness of the woods—and one of them spoke—the words that took her to the arms of the man she loved.

"It's a story of the primeval passions of the great West—where men fought and loved with all their power."

Then a quartette of short ones.

"Love fights oaths and crime and finds eternal happiness in the days of the old West.

"Everything she loved was about to be swept away from her—even honor—but then Justice spoke with a rifle bullet and she heard the words that gave her to the man of her dreams."

"Oaths bound one, desire another's lips, and how the Fawn yearned for the man she loved! When all seemed lost and death and dishonor near there came the words that brought utter happiness—'She is ALL WHITE.'"

"He was the worst scoundrel in the West, but his words gave her the thing that she wanted—to know that she was white and that she could marry the man that she loved."

Pictures of Miss Michelena in the garb of a Western girl should be played up strong in all of the advertising, especially because she makes such an attractive picture. At the right, a love scene with the stranger; in the center, with the Breed, whom she believes to be her brother, and at the left, a typical scene, where she is leaving a note of warning for the Indian

Music and Stage Settings Will Bring Real Results

INDIAN flavor to "Just Squaw" affords the exhibitor an opportunity to put on a musical program and stage settings that will cause the house to be talked about for a long time. Showmen who have never done anything of this sort will find the arrangements suggested here fairly simple and inexpensive, though the more lavish they are made the greater will be the word of mouth advertising. It is a Rialto-Rivoli-Strand arrangement worked out for you.

We suggest that you use Victor Herbert's "Natoma" as the overture, played with the lights in a subdued red, and then carry the music into an Indian scenic. There is one released by Education, "The Eagle and the Fawn," that is particularly appropriate because of the title and because it shows the wooing customs among the redskins. An Indian war dance should follow the few bars of the overture that go into the scenic, and then with the title, "After every hunt," use an Indian agitato, then with "the tent of visions" play, "Indian Invocation," and with the title, "He followed the Fawn," use "Love Song" to the end. This was largely the musical arrangement when this picture was shown at the Rialto.

There is another appropriate one in a prizma subject, "The Land of the Great Spirit," and when this was used at the Rivoli there were a few bars of "Natoma" played, and then the screening of the picture following. There are other fitting scenics in Educational's "An Indian Love Story" and "Indian Life."

NOW keeping up the Indian theme here is a place for the special song and stage setting. We would suggest using a girl in Indian costume. As the curtain goes up let her be seated by a little fire with a kettle boiling on the tripod. The lights should be dim in blue, with the effect of mountains in the foreground and a river in the background. The effects of moving water can be obtained with an electric fan and the lights. The selection here should be, "From the Land of Sky Blue Water," and greater effect can be obtained by having a moon slowly rising in the background as the fire gradually dies down. Let the screen curtain come down without the girl arising, and immediately start the screening. This is suggested by a recent setting at the Strand.

The special score that has been prepared for this picture presents a great deal of Indian music, but here we believe is a case where a theme should be used, and we would suggest "The Girl of the Golden West," as particularly fitting for the girl theme. It should be introduced with her first appearance on the screen with the title, "Eleven years have elapsed," and then brought back again when the girl sees Hollister for the first time. Other occasions when it should be employed are when Hollister and the girl are together, except in the single case where he denounces her, and at the point where the girl shows Hollister's gift to the Breed, and then when Hollister finds it. Then it is to be brought in at the very end.

Now we have suggested grouping this Indian matter together, and there should not be the comedy relief. If you use a second musical number, let it be of the light and happy type, and let the comedy and news weekly follow.

LOBBY effects are obvious, but they should be done in good taste. Indian rugs will make splendid hangings for the walls, and if you have enough space there might be a small tepee erected in one corner of the lobby. As to the decorations use large hearts bearing the picture of Miss Michelena. Keep pistols, skins, trappings and all of that sort of stuff out of the display. The Indian tone should be of the dignified and more artistic sort to suggest romance rather than violence.

If you ever costume your ushers, especially if you employ girls, here is an excellent opportunity. Ticket seller and doorman should also be costumed.

Likewise, if you find that street stunts help your theatre, the use of a girl in costume with the word, "Just Squaw," on her breast and back will be sufficient.

Similarly, if you are making an especial appeal to the children you might offer a prize for the boy and the girl wearing the best Indian costumes, but the time for their appearance should be limited to an early matinee, so that they will not be likely to disturb the more serious patrons with the noise that they are apt to make.

YOU will find that all of your phonograph stores have a large number of Indian selections, and we would suggest inviting their co-operation in a window display. All that you need to furnish will be striking pictures of the star for their window and scenes from the production. These should be artistically mounted on cardboard suitably lettered.

You can do your part of the co-operation by announcing in your lobby or in your program that special displays are being given at the stores listed. If there are any stores that make a specialty of Indian blankets and wares and of children's costumes of that sort they will be perfectly willing to help you. The department stores are the ones most likely to be interested.

All of these displays should be made several days in advance of the first showing and continued through the run.

If you have never tried getting a hundred per cent out of a picture, here is an opportunity to make the experiment. It is not alone the receipts that you will get but the advertising that you give the theatre itself that counts.

Select Promotes Some Officials

S. S. Webster and D. J. Selznick Appointed to Take Charge of Cleveland and Boston Branches

FOLLOWING the appointment of Sam E. Morris as general manager and Charles R. Rogers as director of sales of Select Pictures Corporation, announcement is now made of the men who have been chosen to succeed these two former branch executives in charge of Select's posts in the field.

The Cleveland branch, which was the headquarters of Mr. Morris, who also had jurisdiction over Select's Detroit Exchange, has been placed in the hands of Sherman S. Webster, who was formerly Select's branch manager at Buffalo. The transfer of Mr. Webster from Buffalo to be branch manager at Cleveland is a very considerable promotion, as the Cleveland territory is much larger and more important field than that in which Buffalo was the center.

Before joining the Select organization, S. S. Webster was a salesman in Cleveland attached to the Universal Exchange in that city. His success attracted the attention of Lewis J. Selznick and he was offered a position as salesman for Select's Buffalo Exchange. About a year later Mr. Webster was advanced to the position of Buffalo manager. It is expected that he will accomplish big things in his old territory in Cleveland.

David J. Selznick has been given the position of New England manager, with headquarters at Boston, which has been made vacant by the promotion of Charles R. Rogers. Mr. Selznick's appointment is also a promotion within the Select organization, as he has served in the Boston branch, first as salesman, and then as assistant branch manager, and has earned an enviable reputation for his efficient and business-like administration of that portion of the work in handling the Boston territory which was his share.

In announcing the appointment of Mr. Selznick to be New England manager, Lewis J. Selznick, president of the Select Corporation, said humorously that David had won this post despite the fact that he was handicapped by being his brother. Mr. Selznick reiterated what he has often said, that his relatives stood less chance in business with him than anyone else, and that they would get just a little bit less and fight harder for what they did get than an outsider.

David J. Selznick first joined the Select organization about two years ago as a salesman attached to the Boston Exchange.

Emerson and Loos Return After Wide Tour

JOHN EMERSON and Anita Loos, the well known writers and producers for Paramount, have returned to New York after a trans-continental tour, undertaken for the purpose of investigating conditions in the industry, getting closer to the audiences and theatre managers, and, thus with their fingers on the film public's pulse, determining what is required for their future productions.

When Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos were interviewed upon their return, they concluded their interesting discussion of the whole situation throughout the country by saying, "They don't need more stars or new ones, they don't need more directors or better ones, they don't ask for more artistry or more elaborate settings, the public is not looking for new tricks of the camera or in lightings, but they certainly do want more good stories."

Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos visited over twenty of the larger cities and no less than thirty smaller communities, where they tested out their plan precisely as they did in Chicago, Denver, Kansas City, San Francisco and the other large cities. Mr. Emerson appeared before a number of men's clubs, while Miss Loos spoke to more than forty women's organizations. Their purpose in doing this was to get in touch with the better class of motion picture patrons. After every address they invited open discussion by their hearers and in this way gained a very accurate notion of what the better class of public wants. They also interviewed theatre managers, managers of exchanges, and people in all walks of life."

"Motion picture fans are becoming highly discriminating," said Mr. Emerson during the interview. "They won't accept bunk any longer. They know what they want and they're going to get it or leave the pictures flat. It's up to the producers to hold them and increase their numbers. And there is just one way to do it. More good stories.

Exhibitors Eulogize "Her Code of Honor"

ENTHUSIASM that is country-wide is being evidenced in the reception of "Her Code of Honor," according to numerous reports received at the home office, United announces. The opinion of the public as gathered by exhibitors amply bears out Miss Reed's statement made on the completion of the picture that "Her Code of Honor" is the best picture she has ever made.

Telegraphing from San Francisco after the opening at the Tivoli theatre of Miss Reed's first United offering recently, Turner and Dahnken, the Pacific Coast exhibitors, have this to say:

"Florence Reed in 'Her Code of Honor' far beyond our expectations. Picture opened at our Tivoli theatre April 27. Receipts 25 per cent over normal. Miss Reed without doubt has proved herself one of filmland's biggest stars."

From Dallas, Texas, W. D. Nevills, of the Washington theatre, that city, writes as follows:

"We screened 'Her Code of Honor' today at the Washington and the picture proved to be a good one. The climax is clever and strong, and when we show it we expect to have some of the handles of the seats squeezed off, for the suspense makes you grip your seat. It is a first-class production."

Fan Magazine comment of the month, too, is outspoken in praise of the latest Florence Reed offering.

Samuel Goldwyn Returns from West Coast

Samuel Goldwyn, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, returned to New York Saturday after an extended stay at the Western studios of Goldwyn at Culver City, California.

Mr. Goldwyn made this statement on his arrival:

"I can only say now, that my trip through the West convinces me that exhibitors everywhere are aware that they face a time of greater prosperity and finer quality in motion picture presentation than at any period in screen history. Everywhere I saw evidences of confidence and faith in the great future of the picture play.

"New theatres are going up everywhere and a good deal of money is being put into them to give the public greater comfort and greater artistic satisfaction."

Hammons Sells Foreign Rights to Cartoons

Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of Ameriac, completed a sale of foreign rights for the International cartoons just before he sailed for London recently.

Ben P. Schulberg, acting for John D. Tippett, of Trans-Atlantic Films, Universal House, London, was the buyer, purchasing twenty-two cartoons which have been released in this country, and contracting for the new series of fifty-two which are now being released.

The original group of twenty-two half-reels represents a cash purchase of considerable size, which will be delivered immediately for release to European exhibitors. The new series will follow at the rate of one per week as they are produced.

Pearson Photoplays Rent Triangle Studios

The Clara Morris estate, covering an area of several acres, has been rented by the Virginia Pearson Photoplays, Inc., from the Triangle Corporation. The private residence is being used as an office building, where the business of the organization is transacted in the ten offices, equipped with every convenience for the employes.

The spacious sun-parlor has been reserved for the exclusive use of Miss Pearson.

Publicity Representative

Beulah Livingston announced this week that she has secured the position as publicity representative for Constance Talmadge. Miss Livingston is now looking after the publicity interests of both the Talmadge girls, as she was already doing work for Norma.

Approves Picturization of His Novel

A few nights ago Francis Sullivan, author of "Children of Banishment" attended a New York theatre where his picture was shown, and the next day he wrote Select Pictures the following note:

"I had a great deal of pleasure last night in viewing the recent Mitchell Lewis picture entitled 'Children of Banishment' released through your organization. As it was my novel from which the picture was made, you may be sure I viewed it with a great deal of curiosity. I have no hesitation in saying that I think the work has been excellently done, and the spirit of the original story retained."

Mr. Lewis is now finishing work on his forthcoming attraction, "Jacques of the Silver North."

Loew Theatres Have Select Pictures Week

Sixteen Marcus Loew theatres in New York have completed the celebration of a 100 per cent Select week. The attractions shown were Constance Talmadge's Select Picture, "Romance and Arabella," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, and Select's big special production, "Bolshevism on Trial." The two Select attractions divided seven days at each of the sixteen Loew houses.

The theatres with the 100 per cent Select showing were Hoboken, New Rochelle, Lincoln Square, Greeley Square, Boulevard, National, Victoria, American, Delancey, Avenue B, Metropolitan, DeKalb, Fulton, Palace, Warwick and Orpheum.

"Educational" Films the Coney Amusements

All the famous amusement devices will be seen in the new "Educational" single-reel, "A Day and Night at Coney Island," which was shipped from the laboratory May 5. A statement from Vice-President E. W. Hammons of the Educational Films Corporation of America, outlines the contents of the new release.

The Steeplechase, the Chutes, the Ocean Wave, the Whip, the Human Pool Table, and a dozen other peculiar amusement "machines" are shown—most of them the sort where it is more fun to be "outside lookin' in" than one of the performers.

Government Officials See Select Special

Whatever misunderstanding the Government authorities may have in regard to "Bolshevism on Trial," which is being distributed through Select, it was entirely cleared away it is said when several Government officials saw a special showing of the film recently in Washington and announced that they had no objection to the release of the picture.

This removes once and for all any question it is said as to whether the Government will take any action to prevent exhibition of the film.

Unique Selling Campaign for "Virtuous Men"

A NEW sales method will be placed in effect by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin in connection with the distribution of "Virtuous Men" on a territorial basis. This picture, produced by S-L Pictures and starring E. K. Lincoln, is now ready for the state rights market. It marks the debut in the production field of Sawyer and Lubin, carried out in connection with "The Warrior" and other big special productions. A complete survey of the entire state rights field will be made for the purpose of investigating the possibilities in each territory as regards exploitation, presentation and "direct to the public" advertising. Each buyer who purchases "Virtuous Men" for his particular territory will have placed at his disposal the services of S-L Pictures Advertising Department, together with unlimited co-operation in the matter of suitable press matter, cuts, mats, photographs and novelties. Investigation will be made to ascertain the methods best suited to exploit "Virtuous Men" in each territory as regards the first-run theatre, together with publicity possibilities of the local newspapers. The distributor, state rights buyer, exhibitor and newspapers will be closely co-related in the campaign jointly put forth by the first three named factors. S-L Pictures will render first-hand assistance to buyers in presenting "Virtuous Men" in their territory by working directly with the exhibitor and the newspapers. Special representatives will be sent to each territory for the purpose of assisting the exhibitor in his initial presentation of the film. Sawyer and Lubin will endeavor to capitalize for the benefit of the state rights buyer and the exhibitor the local situation as applied to "Virtuous Men" instead of the general method of offering a campaign intended for the country as a whole.

Says Omaha Endorses "Bolshevism on Trial"

REPORTS come from Select that Omaha exhibitors, business men and professional men enthusiastically endorsed "Bolshevism on Trial" after a private showing at the Strand Theatre, Omaha, given by C. W. Taylor, Omaha branch manager for Select Pictures Corporation which is distributing this special attraction.

Mr. Taylor reports that not only did those present promise their whole-hearted support to the picture, but they were unusually lavish in their praise. A few of Omaha's prominent men are quoted below:

Charles Black, president of the Omaha Retailers' Association: "I am really sincere when I say that 'Bolshevism on Trial' is the strongest picture I have ever seen, and no one should miss seeing this wonderful production. It teaches a great lesson and shows that theory does not always work out in practice."

Mr. McGlynn, of the Omaha Trade Review: "'Bolshevism on Trial' is a magnificent picture, one that should be put in the highest place, for it enunciates perfect truths."

Harry Watts, manager of the Strand Theatre, Omaha: "'Bolshevism on Trial' is a true expose of Bolshevism as it exists in our country today. A great picture, intensely interesting and with an excellent cast."

"H. M. Thomas, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Omaha: "'Bolshevism on Trial' is entirely different from any picture heretofore produced. It is a play with exceptional advertising possibilities which means satisfactory box office returns."

Other prominent men are just as enthusiastic in their praise of this feature.

Puts Mystery Punch in "Crimson Gardenia"

ACCUSTOMED to depict the conflict of primitive passions, Rex Beach is too skilled a novelist to overlook the appealing element in the human beings he characterizes. Indeed, much of his prestige and popularity have been derived from that very gift. He paints his canvas with big, sweeping strokes, yet the figures in his dramas are essentially human and appealing. "The Brand" demonstrated that and it is confirmed in "The Crimson Gardenia," newest of his photodramas, set for release May 18.

Produced at the Goldwyn Studios under the personal supervision of Rex Beach, the drama reveals the noted author in a new light even while demonstrating afresh his virility and tremendous "punch." He has written what is described as "a romance of the Mardi Gras," but it is much more.

"The Crimson Gardenia" is a melodramatic mystery with New Orleans as a colorful, ever-changing background . A band of expert counterfeiters furnishes the sinister element, sharply contrasted with the piquant simplicity of a girl, who has just arrived from Paris and the romantic masculinity of a young New Yorker eager for a carnival adventure. Into this network of conflicting desires Rex Beach infuses power and reality and pathos. The latter comes from a little, old blind Frenchwoman, Mere Felice (Gertrude Claire). She sits patiently in a small black room waiting for her son whom she has not seen in years. By all odds Mere Felice is the most appealing character in the play.

Completing Empey Feature

Work is progressing rapidly on "Hell on Earth," a forthcoming Select Pictures Special Attraction, in which Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey will be starred, and according to latest reports the production is nearly completed.

Contrary to what its name implies, "Hell on Earth" is not a war picture. The story does, however, concern situations and problems which have arisen in America since the signing of the armistice.

Says Tom Mix Feature Drew Big House

THE drawing power of Tom Mix has been growing with each new Mix picture, according to reports from exhibitors which are being received by the Fox Film Corporation. Each new Tom Mix release, it is stated, results in an increase in the number of houses booking Mix and also in a flood of telegrams and letters from exhibitors praising Tom Mix as a box office attraction.

One of the most remarkable examples of Mix's hold on the public was given recently in the little town of Prairie du Rocher, Ill. In this town one of Tom Mix's pictures played a one-night engagement, and out of the 500 inhabitants of the village 350 saw the picture at one sitting. Thus Mix drew 70 per cent. of the town's total population in one day.

The incident is related in a letter written by W. F. De Frenne, manager of the Strand theatre, Prairie du Rocher, to the St. Louis office of the Fox Film Corporation. The latter says:

"We started on our Victory Pictures contract last night with Tom Mix in 'Fame and Fortune,' and showed to the biggest business ever done in Prairie du Rocher, regardless of the class of entertainment. You will more fully realize the extent of our business when I tell you that our population is less than 500 and we showed to over 350 people at one performance."

The adventures that befall Mix in the role of Keat Hollis, the fearless young publisher of the militant young "Kicker," make "The Coming of the Law," it is said, one of the fastest thrilling pictures in which Mix has appeared.

In the cast supporting Mix are Brownie Vernon, George Nicholis, Jack Curtis, Sid Jordan, B. M. Turner, Charles LeMoyne, Pat Chrisman, Lewis Sargent and Harry Dunkinson.

"In Search of Arcady" Features Miss Rhodes

WITH the success of her four most recent feature productions as a criterion, much is expected of the forthcoming Billie Rhodes comedy-drama, "In Search of Arcady," soon to be distributed through Exhibitors' Mutual by Robertson-Cole Company.

"In Search of Arcady" will top off a list of successes stretching backward for several months, among which may be mentioned: "The Love Call," "The Lamb and the Lion," "Hoop-La" and "Girl of My Dreams." Dainty Billie Rhodes was featured in all of these productions. Now comes "In Search of Arcady" to cap the climax.

Miss Rhodes is seen in the leading role; that of Barbara Chichester, a winningly wilful miss, who breaks through the circle of admirers with which her title-hunting mother and aunt have surrounded her and goes forth as a gypsy in search of Arcady. The story itself is taken from the popular novel of the same name by the noted fiction writer, Nina Wilcox Putnam. It is not only her most recent work, but is also regarded as her best. The book is said to have had a record-breaking sale all over the country, a fact which has given the picture considerable advance word-of-mouth advertising and publicity. The comedy possibilities as well as the dramatic situations of the original story have been well utilized in the film version by John B. Clymer, who adapted it for the screen, and which is said to fit the star perfectly.

Semon's Co-Workers Win Promised Vacation

With the third comedy of the Larry Semon series just received by the eastern offices of Vitagraph, Mr. Semon has already completed the fourth super-comedy. This information has just been conveyed to the Vitagraph home offices in a telegram from the director-star.

After the completion of the third comedy, the company having made a record in production, was given a promised vacation, and for several days the glare of the studio lights was forgotten.

As for Larry, he sacrificed several days of fishing which he had promised himself to continue work on his fourth script.

Mutt and Jeff at Peace Conference

The list of May releases of Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons contains "Sir Sidney," which shows Bud Fisher's famous comic characters at the Peace Conference in Paris. This cartoon is declared to be the funniest of all the Mutt and Jeff series, besides having a timeliness which makes it an unusually good attraction.

There is a wide variety of subjects offered in the May list of releases, the Exhibitors Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation announces. Besides "Sir Sidney," in which Mutt and Jeff get into difficulties with the peace delegates through the trickery of Jeff, there are "The Cave Man's Bride," "Left at the Post," and "The Shell Game."

Scattered throughout the fairly wild and somewhat woolly West are ranches which are frankly termed "dude ranches"—because they make a specialty of entertaining eastern tourists. And they do entertain them, in the way the easterner has pictured. They stage hold-ups, brawls, real rough-riding sprees, shooting scrapes, and all. It's a rare evening when a couple of cowboys don't shoot out the lights. Which pleases the tourists immensely, and they pay the high price and go away thrilled and satisfied.

C. L. Chester has gone after one of these histrionic ranches, and in "Wrangling Dudes," which will be one of the regular Outing-Chester releases, he will show how they wrangle 'em.

Stage Veterans Support Allison in Next

As a supporting cast for May Allison in "Almost Married," Metro has succeeded in engaging the services of an aggregation of players who have in the past graced many memorable productions of the operatic stage, the legitimate drama and vaudeville and musical comedy.

The legitimate players are Walter I. Percival, who was leading man to Miss Allison in "Castles in the Air," and Frank Currier, Metro's "grand old man." Opera is represented by Henry L. Rattenbury, who has sung many leading parts with some of the best companies, and vaudeville by Hugh Fay who is well known in that line. James Watson James will also play a prominent part.

Charles Pathe Arrives in New York

Charles Pathe, head of the motion picture organizations bearing his name, arrived in New York on the 29th of April for a stay in this country of several months' duration. He was met at the dock by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc. This is Mr. Pathe's first visit to this country in several years, his last being before the United States entered the war.

It is said at the Pathe offices that Mr. Pathe has expressed much satisfaction with business conditions as he finds them reflected in the Pathe Exchange.

Praises Sherrill Features in New England

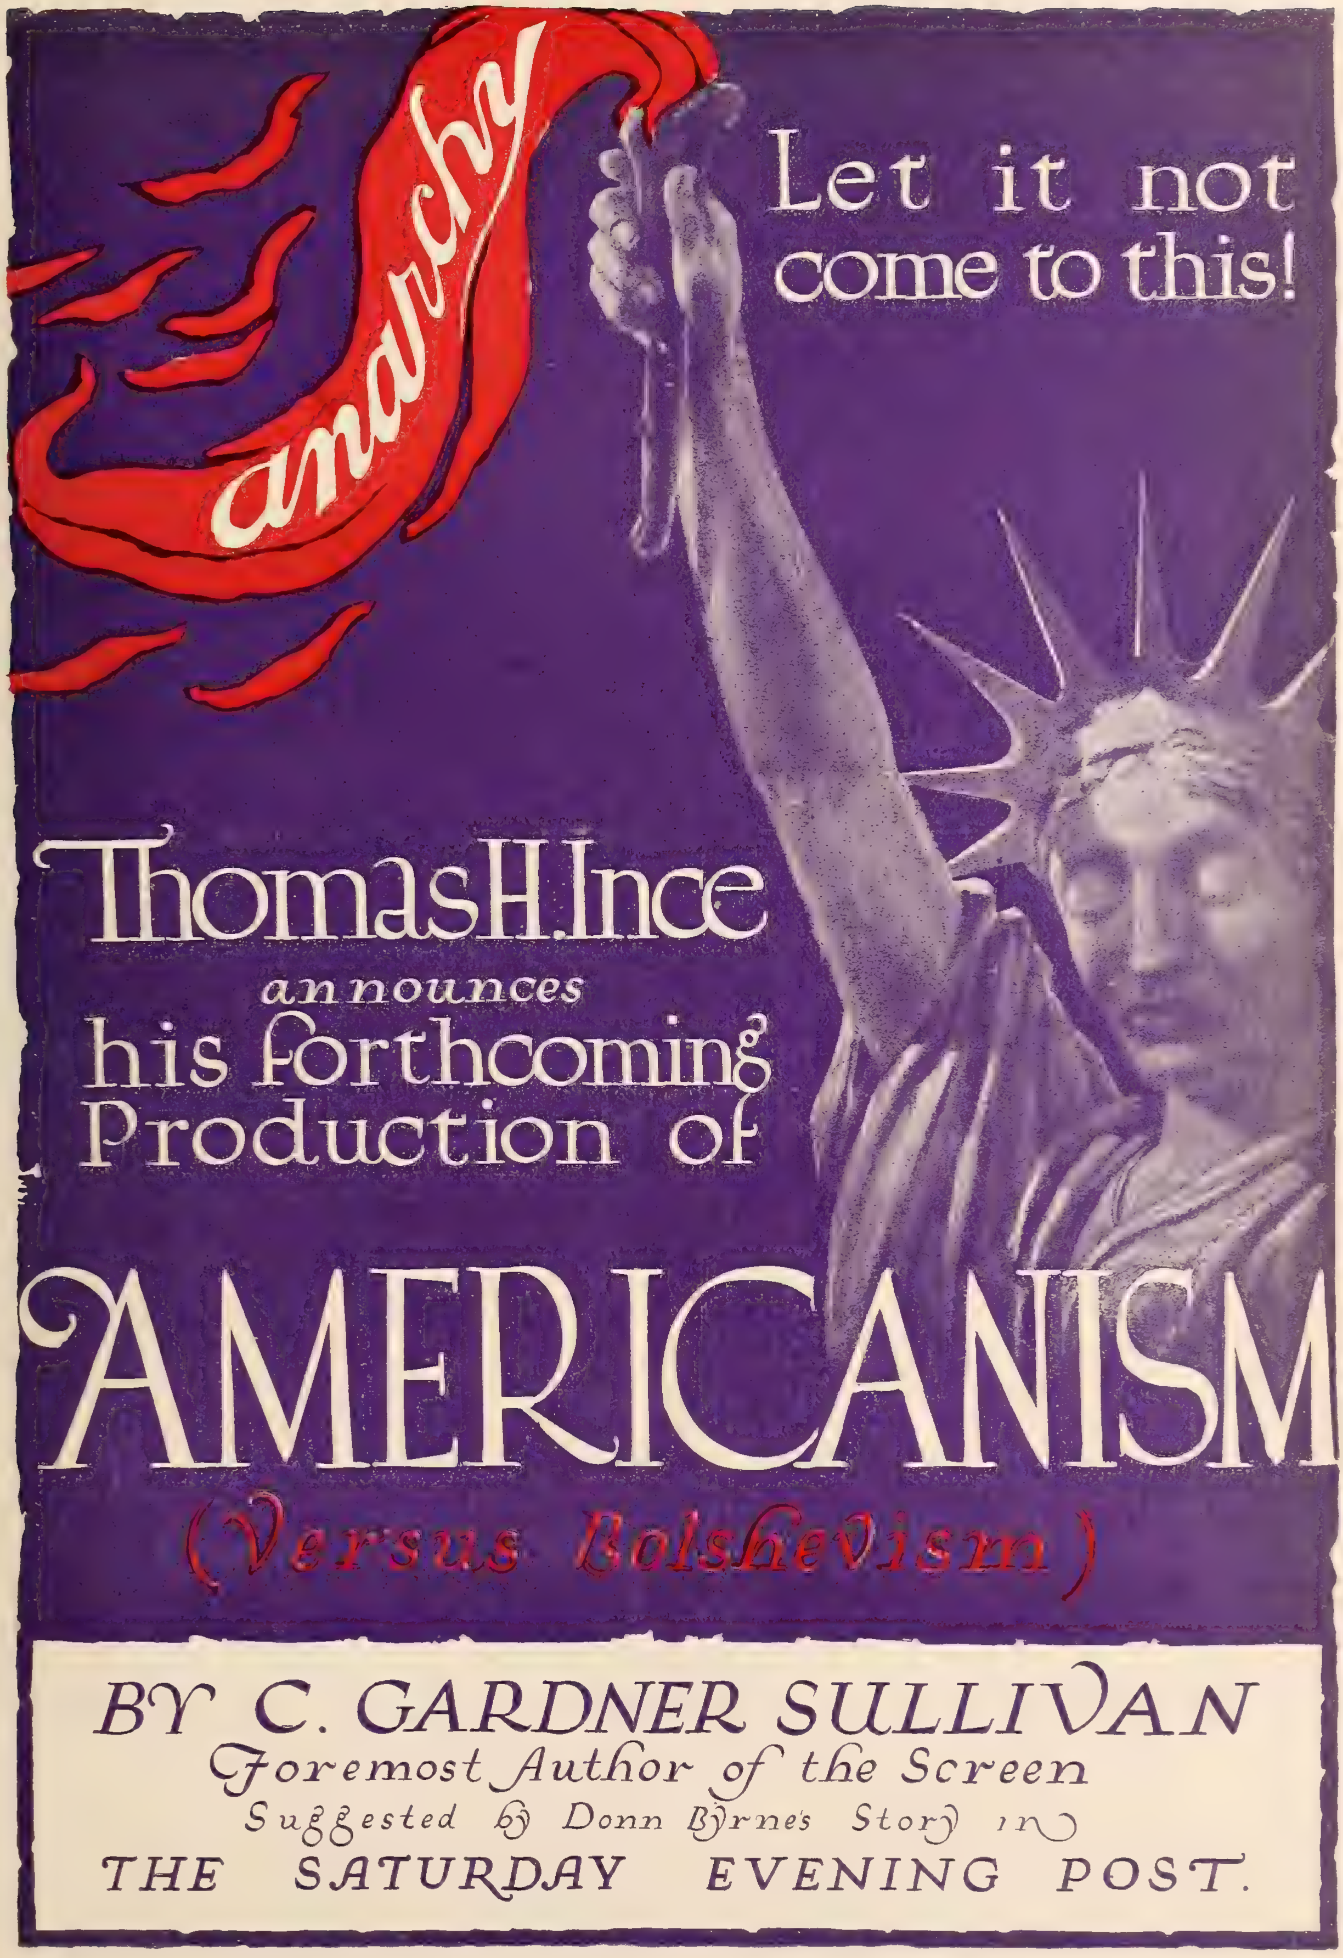
The Frohman Amusement Corporation is daily in receipt of communications from state right buyers who have already secured that company's latest special feature release "Once to Every Man" commenting, it is declared, on the tremendous vogue this picture is having in their territories.

One of the most interesting communications was received from the Major Film, Inc., operating in the New England states, saying:

"We take this opportunity to congratulate you upon your production, 'Once to Every Man' featuring Jack Sherrill and Mabel Withee and we trust that in the future we shall be considered for any and all of the Frohman productions featuring Jack Sherrill.

Farrar to West Coast

Geraldine Farrar, following her opera season in New York, is scheduled to leave May 10 for the Goldwyn studios at Culver City. Preparations that have been made for Miss Farrar's new work on the screen indicates that as a picture player the Goldwyn star is entering on the most important and significant part of her career. From every standpoint, play material, scenic elaboration, photography and picture direction, the new Farrar pictures will aim it is said to set a new standard not only in Goldwyn production but in pictures everywhere.



Let it not come to this!

his forthcoming
Production of

AMERICANISM

(Versus Bolshevism)

BY C. GARDNER SULLIVAN
Foremost Author of the Screen
Suggested by Donn Byrne's Story in THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

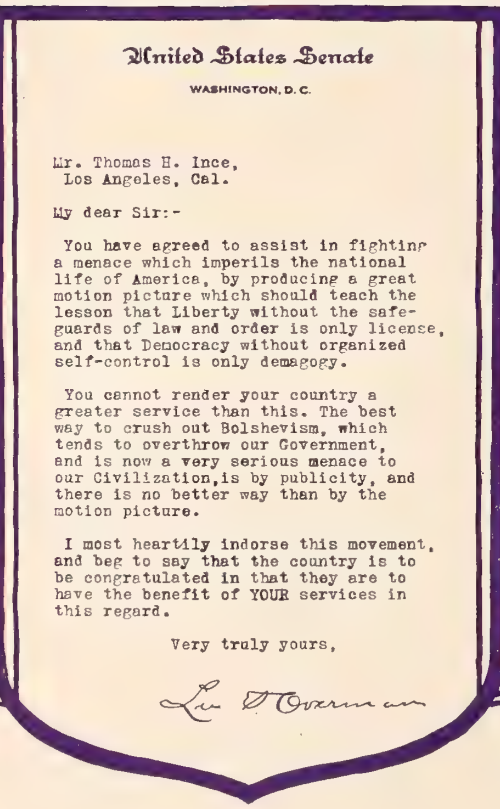
GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS INDORSE
Thomas H. Ince's
AMERICANISM
(VERSUS BOLSHEVISM)

For the first time in film history, America's leading citizens, keenly interested in the theme of a photodrama, and in tribute to a great producer, write or wire their encouragement and approval before a scene of the drama has been photographed.

Says Lee S. Overman, Chairman of the Overman Committee of the United States Government, which investigated Bolshevism in America:



United States Senate
WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. Thomas H. Ince,
Los Angeles, Cal.

My dear Sir:-

You have agreed to assist in fighting a menace which imperils the national life of America, by producing a great motion picture which should teach the lesson that Liberty without the safeguards of law and order is only license, and that Democracy without organized self-control is only demagogy.

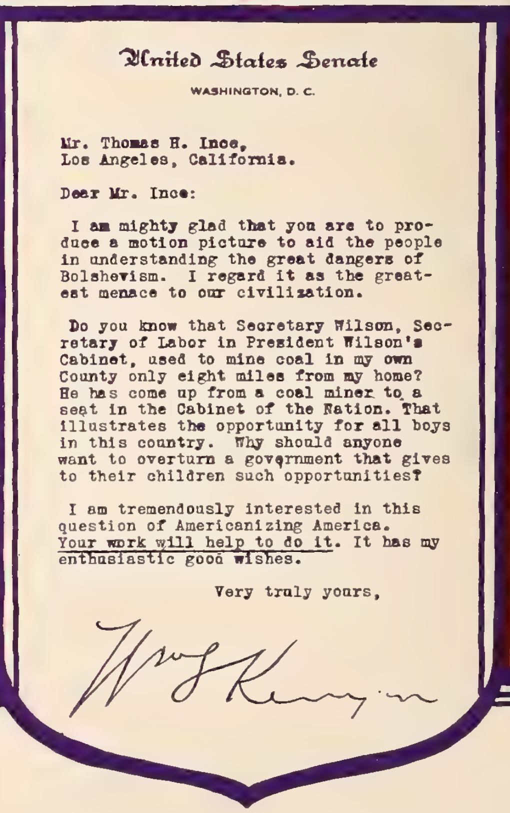
You cannot render your country a greater service than this. The best way to crush out Bolshevism, which tends to overthrow our Government, and is now a very serious menace to our Civilization, is by publicity, and there is no better way than by the motion picture.

I most heartily indorse this movement, and beg to say that the country is to be congratulated in that they are to have the benefit of YOUR services in this regard.

Very truly yours,

Lee S Overman

Says William S. Kenyon, United States Senator from Iowa, who is a great leader in the movement to "Americanize America":



United States Senate
WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. Thomas H. Ince,
Los Angeles, California.

Dear Mr. Ince:

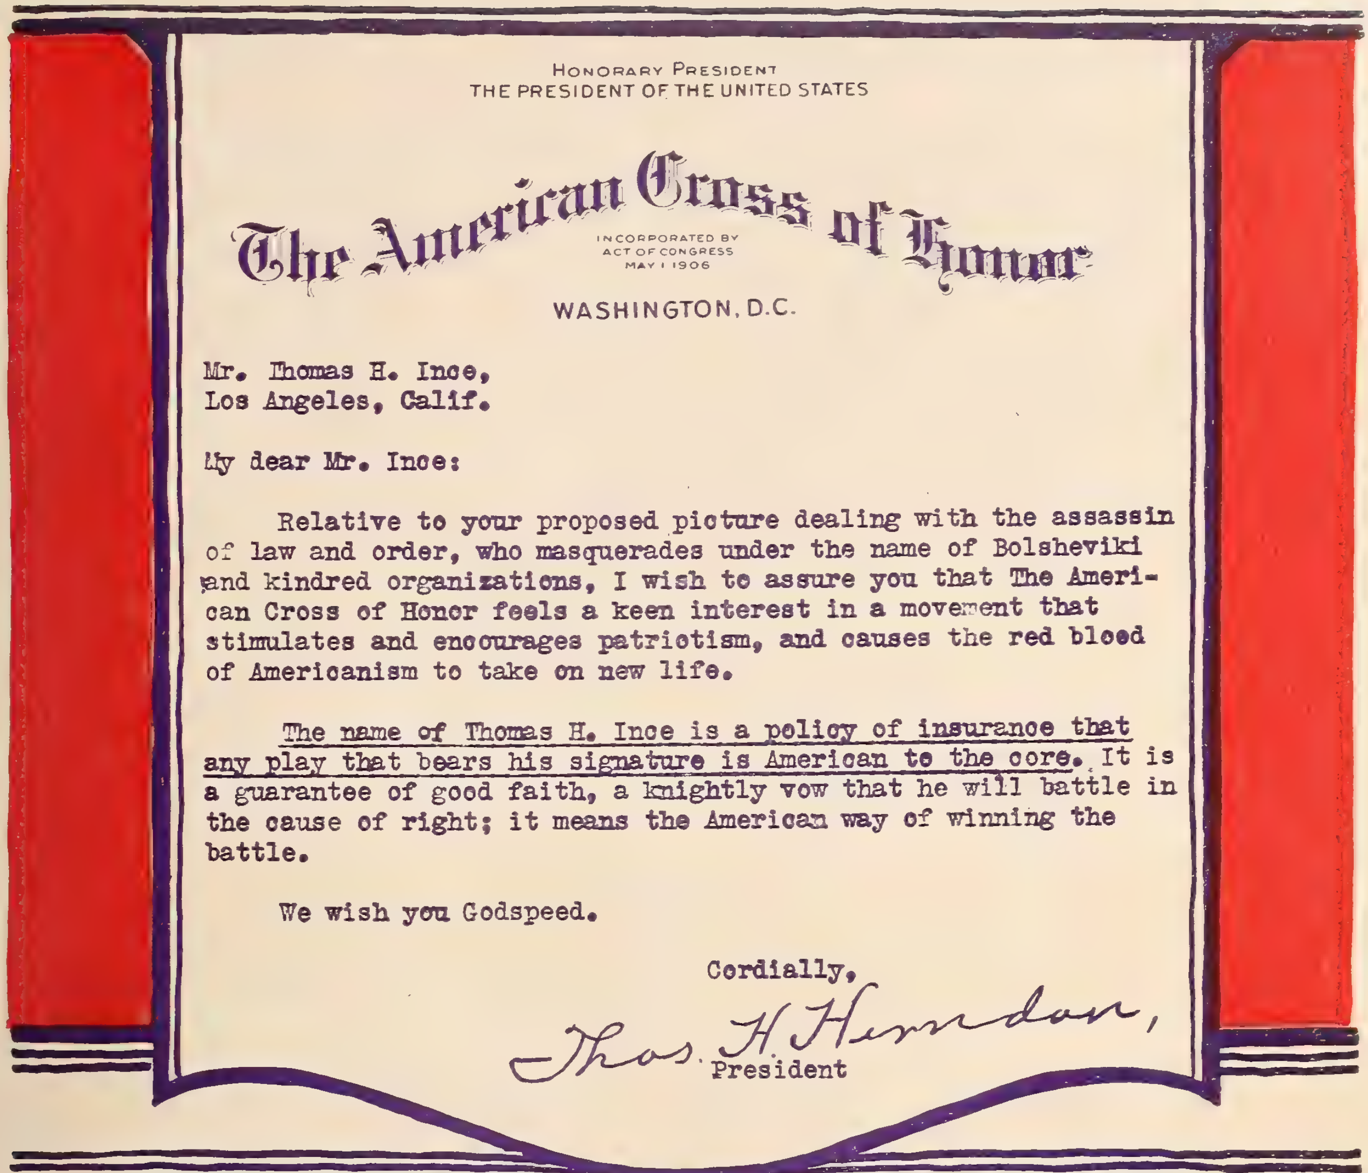
I am mighty glad that you are to produce a motion picture to aid the people in understanding the great dangers of Bolshevism. I regard it as the greatest menace to our civilization.

Do you know that Secretary Wilson, Secretary of Labor in President Wilson's Cabinet, used to mine coal in my own County only eight miles from my home? He has come up from a coal miner to a seat in the Cabinet of the Nation. That illustrates the opportunity for all boys in this country. Why should anyone want to overturn a government that gives to their children such opportunities?

I am tremendously interested in this question of Americanizing America. Your work will help to do it. It has my enthusiastic good wishes.

Very truly yours,

Wm S Kenyon



HONORARY PRESIDENT
THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The American Cross of Honor
INCORPORATED BY ACT OF CONGRESS
MAY 1 1906
WASHINGTON, D.C.

Mr. Thomas H. Ince,
Los Angeles, Calif.

My dear Mr. Ince:

Relative to your proposed picture dealing with the assassin of law and order, who masquerades under the name of Bolsheviki and kindred organizations, I wish to assure you that The American Cross of Honor feels a keen interest in a movement that stimulates and encourages patriotism, and causes the red blood of Americanism to take on new life.

The name of Thomas H. Ince is a policy of insurance that any play that bears his signature is American to the core. It is a guarantee of good faith, a knightly vow that he will battle in the cause of right; it means the American way of winning the battle.

We wish you Godspeed.

Cordially,

Thos. H. Herndon,
President

I desire to commend to the patriotic public of America your new picture entitled AMERICANISM. I can see in the development of this film a valuable aid to the government.

J.B.A. Robertson
GOVERNOR OF OKLAHOMA.

I am heartily in accord with your very excellent plan. AMERICANISM is a theme, the teaching of which, I fear, has been neglected. Much success to you in the very commendable work you are inaugurating.

GOVERNOR OF ARIZONA.

I am deeply interested in your proposal to produce the film play, AMERICANISM. I think in so doing you will be rendering this country an inestimable service. May the Lord be with you.

T. W. Bickett
GOVERNOR OF NORTH CAROLINA.

I heartily indorse and recommend your proposed picture portraying the agitator.

GOVERNOR OF WEST VIRGINIA.

I have no doubt, knowing as I do the extremely high position you occupy in the moving picture world, that the story, AMERICANISM, is all that it purports to be.

Carl E. Milliken
GOVERNOR OF MAINE.

The fact that the name of the producer of AMERICANISM is Ince, is ample to warrant me in lending my hearty indorsement.

Simon Bamberger
GOVERNOR OF UTAH

With a producer of your abilities in charge, I know the film will not only be a work of art, but of the kind that is very much needed in America at this time.

Louis F. Hart
ACTING GOVERNOR OF WASHINGTON.

I am glad to hear that you are lending your great talent to the patriotic effort against treason and disorder in this country. I shall await with much interest the appearance of AMERICANISM, for I know it will be a great influence for good.

Wm. C. Sproul
GOVERNOR OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Your moving picture in reference to Anti-Bolshevism has my personal indorsement.

Emerson C. Harrington
GOVERNOR OF MARYLAND.

If I thought that Bolshevism was the right road to go, that it meant freedom, justice and the principles of humane society and living conditions, I would join the Bolsheviki. It is because I know that the whole scheme leads to nowhere, that it is destructive in its efforts and in its every activity, that it compels reaction and brings about a situation worse than the one it has undertaken to displace, that I oppose and fight it.

"Rogue's Romance" to Be June Release

Vitagraph announces as its Earle Williams release for June "A Rogue's Romance," a drama of a society thief's experiences in Paris by H. H. Van Loan. This is the second photoplay especially constructed for Mr. Williams by this well-known script builder, Mr. Williams having been seen early in the year in "The Highest Trump," which was Mr. Van Loan's previous contribution to the Williams' library.

"A Rogue's Romance" has already been viewed in the private projection room of Vitagraph's New York office and has achieved that requisite effect, a thrill. It is a crook drama full of suspense and surprises with an unusual finish. Throughout interest is not only maintained but worked to an increasingly high pitch, according to reports made by those who viewed the advance showing.

Prominent in the cast are Brinsley Shaw, Harry Van Meter, Herbert Standing, Karl Fromes and Katherine Adams, who is Williams' leading woman. James Young directed.

Says Normand's Latest Has Many Laughs

At the Strand Theatre in Pasadena, Mabel Normand's latest Goldwyn photoplay, "When Doctors Disagree" was given an advance showing. The event was not heralded nor were there any invitations, only a regular audience of about 1,800 persons seeing it. The performance was given at the request of Samuel Goldwyn, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, for the purpose of seeing its effect upon an average gathering.

The picture went over splendidly. By actual count more than 100 laughs punctuated its action, it is said, and Mr. Goldwyn comes to New York with the firm belief that "When Doctors Disagree" will be one of the important sales successes of the year.

Says Overflowing Houses Greet "The Usurper"

On April 28 the new Earle Williams production, "The Usurper," was released to first-run houses by Vitagraph. Telegraphic information it is said indicates that the premier of the new picture was rewarded with overflowing audiences everywhere.

"The Usurper" was directed by James Young. Louise Lovely appears in the production as Mr. Williams' leading woman. Others in the cast include Bob Russell, Frank Leigh, Jay Morley, Billie Elmer, Audrey Chapman, Helen Carlisle, Bessie Eyton and Lillian Langdon.

Dalton's New One

In her forthcoming Paramount picture, "The Lady of Red Butte," which is scheduled for May 11, Dorothy Dalton, the Thomas H. Ince star, returns to the type of character in which she excelled early in her career as a Paramount star.

Releases Round Dozen in May

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Announces Schedule for Month, Which Includes One Paramount-Artcraft Special

Wanda Hawley, who will play the part of "Peg" in "Peg of My Heart," the Famous Players-Lasky production

WALTER E. GREENE, vice-president and managing director Department of Distribution for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announces that the May schedule of releases includes the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," as well as a number of other features.

In the list are two Artcraft productions and nine Paramount, besides the Special.

The releases announced for May 4 are the John Emerson-Anita Loos Paramount production, "Oh, You Women!" Ethel Clayton in the Paramount picture, "Vicky Van," and William S. Hart's latest Artcraft production, "The Money Corral."

Marguerite Clark's newest Paramount picture, "Come Out of the Kitchen," adapted by Clara Beranger from the story by Alice Duer Miller, and its dramatization by A. E. Thomas, is scheduled for May 11. Then comes Vivian Martin in the Paramount picture, "The Home Town Girl." Also released on the 11th is Dorothy Dalton's latest Paramount production from the studio of Thomas H. Ince, "The Lady of Red Butte."

May 18 marks the release of "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo," a big Artcraft picture of seven reels starring Douglas Fairbanks. It is declared that this picture was produced by Mr. Fairbanks as a Special, at an actual cost of $264,000, and is pronounced the most elaborate in which the Artcraft star has ever appeared. Shirley Mason in "The Final Close-Up," a Paramount picture, is also released the 18th. On this date also Charles Ray appears in "The Busher," an Ince-supervised Paramount picture.

The Paramount-Artcraft Special, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," which was directted by Hugh Ford, is scheduled for May 25. Another Thomas H. Ince-Paramount production, "The Haunted Bedroom," with Enid Bennett as star, is also released the 25th. On the same day is released "I'll Get Him Yet." Dorothy Gish's latest Paramount picture.

"Playthings of Passion" Is Ready for Release

CONSPICUOUS among the May releases of United Picture Theatres will be the "Playthings of Passion," with Kitty Gordon as the star. The picture is completed and titled and prints are now being made for the exchanges. Those who have seen screenings of "Playthings of Passion" are said to prophesy a solid success for this United offering, which is reported to afford Miss Gordon unprecedented opportunity from the nature of its story, and, in addition, to furnish her with the occasion for the display of robes, gowns, hats and other millinery delights.

No pains or expense have been spared, it is reported, to ensure a perfect production. Two and a half months were devoted at the Brunton Studios, it is said, to the making of this picture, which enjoyed the personal supervision of Mr. Brunton himself during the entire process.

William Anthony McGuire's story, scenarioized by Jack Cunningham and directed by Wallace Worsley, has to do with the love adventures of a young society wife whose life is made up of things frivolous and the pursuit of fleeting pleasures. Levity changes to more earnest purpose when she meets a handsome young clergyman whose mission is the uplift of the poor. Earnestness, in turn, soon develops into a fascination for the cleric. A crisis arises for these two playthings of passion; the clergyman is thrown face to face with a critical situation, the only solution for which lies in a tremendous sacrifice, which forms what is described as a strikingly startling climax to the play.

"Rowdy Ann"

"Rowdy Ann" is the title for the second of the Christie Special releases in two reels, featuring May Tincher with a special cast.

The title of the feature aptly describes the leading character in the story, a girl who was so "rough and western" on a Wyoming ranch, that her father had to pack her off to boarding school to be polished.

What happened on the way and at the fashionable girls' seminary may be imagined from the first episode in the picture, in which Ann personally licks the toughest cowboy on the place.

"New Moon" Plays Rivoli

Norma Talmadge's forthcoming Select Picture, "The New Moon," which is one of the three attractions that will be released by Select during May, was booked May 11 at the Rivoli theatre in New York, while other advance Metropolitan bookings include the entire Loew circuit beginning with May 19, the Goodwin theatre in Newark for the week of May 18, and Proctor's Troy theatre on June 1, 2, 3 and 4.

This early demand for play dates on Miss Talmadge's latest Select production greatly surpasses the number of advance bookings on any of her recent pictures.

Louisville Exchange Moves to New Quarters

The Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, Ky., has finished moving into its new home in the National Theatre Building, Walnut between Fifth and Center. This building occupies an entire block and the Big Features has the entire second and third floors. It shares the building with B. F. Keith's National Theatre. The house is new, built a few years ago at a cost of $300,000. The Big Feature Rights has quarters that could not be surpassed, with ample room and every convenience. The offices will be handsomely decorated and equipped. As the Big Feature Rights holds the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Kentucky and Tennessee, this is also the First National's "Old Kentucky Home" and "Down in Sunny Tennessee" address.

"The Lady of the Dugout" Going Big

The Al Jennings film, which is titled "The Lady of the Dugout," is receiving a very warm reception in many parts of the country, and reports received at the Los Angeles office from Manager Hoffman of the Pioneer Film Company of New York, indicate the picture will become one of the six best sellers of the year in this eastern territory. "The Lady of the Dugout" has been booked to all the houses of the Marcus Loew circuits.

A portion of the country has already been sold, Mr. Jennings reports, New England having been bought by Louis B. Mayer, Oklahoma by First National, California, Arizona and Nevada by M. & R. of San Francisco and Los Angeles, and western Pennsylvania and Virginia to a Pittsburgh firm.

The sales department of the Al Jennings Film Company has been placed in charge of Harry Owens, formerly manager of the Paramount-Artcraft exchanges in Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas.

Has New Idea to Exploit Feature

A departure from the usual methods of announcing forthcoming attractions has been made by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, of S-L Pictures, in connection with their first production "Virtuous Men." The usual slides announcing the coming of new attractions will be replaced by film trailers. These trailers will carry the entire main title of the production, which introduces E. K. Lincoln and Ralph Ince, together with flashes of a few of the biggest scenes in the production. An announcement, stating "Virtuous Men" is coming to this theatre next week," will close the trailer.

James Burke Returns After Two Weeks' Tour

James L. Burke, special representative for Frank G. Hall's picture interests, returned to the New York offices of Independent Sales Corporation this week after a two weeks' tour of the Film Clearing House exchanges covering the territory east of Denver. On this trip, Mr. Burke made special inquiries from representative exhibitors in this territory concerning the prospective and actual bookings on the Rothapfel Unit Programme.. He reports that all are awaiting the Programme with keen expectation. Mr. Burke reports, also, that special features are in big demand and that open booking is gradually forging ahead of the program.

Minter Picture Being Cut

"Yvonne from Paris," a comedy-drama in which Mary Miles Minter soon will be presented by the American, is in the cutting-room, and reports from the "Flying A" studios indicate that it bears all the earmarks of a record-breaker. It was written by Joseph Franklin Poland, prepared for the screen by Frank Howard Clark, and directed by Emmett J. Flynn.

"White Heather" Opens at the Rialto

Maurice Tourneur's latest production, "The White Heather," had its premiere at the Rialto Theatre the week of May 4. This is another distinct honor for Mr. Tourneur as one of the foremost independent producers since each of his productions has had its premiere at either the Rialto or Rivoli theatres. "Sporting Life" and "Women" both had their premiere at the Rivoli.

Unusual interest is attached to the production for a number of reasons: First, because it is the first production coming from Mr. Tourneur in months; second, it is the first picture made by the director in California; and is described as the best melodrama of the creator of "The Whip," "Sporting Life," "Alias Jimmy Valentine" and other screen thrillers.

Says Johnson's Feature Gets the Money

Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas," released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors' Mutual, has been drawing such exceptional audiences everywhere it is declared that the home office of Exhibitors' Mutual was shocked last week upon receipt of a letter from George Bearse, of the Superba theatre, Toledo, Ohio, in which he registered a complaint.

This is what Mr. Bearse had to say:

"I have a kick to make to you. Why didn't Martin Johnson start after more South sea pictures sooner than he did? I have run nearly all the big pictures to date, but at advance admission prices I got more money out of "Cannibals of the South Sea' than any other three pictures I ever played."

Morris Rose Back from Middle West Trip

Morris Rose, president of the Pioneer Film Corporation is back in New York after several weeks' absence in the Middle West.

The chief object of Mr. Rose's trip was accomplished when he concluded negotiations by which the Pioneer acquires the rights to a production which it is stated will equal if not surpass the record of some of the largest features as a box office attraction.

Mr. Rose said that at present he was not prepared to make the details of the deal public.

Normand Cast Cited

A cast of exceptional merit has been assembled it is said for Mabel Normand's newest Goldwyn picture, "When Doctors Disagree," which is scheduled for release May 25.

The production was directed by Victor L. Schertzinger.

In the cast are Walter Heirs, Fritzie Ridgway, Alec B. Frances, George Nichols and James Gordon.

Special Service Section on

Dorothy Dalton in "Lady of Red Butte"

EXHIBITORS who are going to show Dorothy Dalton in "The Lady of Red Butte" will do well to bear in mind that here she appears in one of the sort of productions in which she won her first real fame—pictures of the western type and of a generation past. It was largely in this sort of pictures that she appeared for Triangle and which formed the basis of her popularity. Therefore the character of the production ought to be made clear in all of your advertising.

You have here a title that in itself is suggestive of the sort of picture, and your advertising should be largely built around pictures of Miss Dalton in western garb. One of the principal characters is a young theological student whose mind has given away until he has become a fanatic and we would largely keep pictures of him out of the advertising, because their use may lead to the wrong impression that this is a religious or allegorical production. Tell enough story to show its happy ending.

There is a cast of well known players here, and if you have already shown "For Better, For Worse" you know what a hit little May Garcia made as the crippled girl in that picture. She again has a prominent part in this one and the children appeal should be made particularly strong as it affords a contrasting picture of the sort of woman Miss Dalton interprets.

THIS is the plot: First we are shown the scenes where Webster Smith while working on a thesis on religious tolerance loses his mind under the strain and becomes a religious fanatic and starts out to reform the world. Then we are shown Red Butte where Faro conducts the saloon and dance hall and at the same time is a good woman and the mother of the homeless children of the settlement, one of whom, Sugar Plum, is crippled.

To this settlement comes the evangelist, weak from his travels and suffering from thirst and it is Faro who ministers to him and gives him water. Partially recovered, physically, he cries out to the crowd, "All ye who are sick in mind and body, come and be healed." Faro Fan, her heart centered in the little crippled girl, takes him literally and goes for the child, but by the time she has returned the fanatic has learned that she runs the saloon and curses her, refusing to touch the child.

Later, after the fanatic has built his church, Spanish Ed, a renegade, comes stumbling into the town, with a contagious fever. But Faro Fan, with her big heart, takes care of him, and her own kind deed helps to spread the infection, her little wards being among the sufferers.

It is then that the evangelist becomes more violent and standing before the church declares that God is going to purge the town with fire and that only the church will be saved. But it is not his prayers that bring the flames, but Delicate Hanson, who in his wild fear of the fever tries to disinfect his saloon by burning alcohol and sets the building afire.

FAN rushes out at that moment to denounce the fanatic who is praying death for her sick children, and then her prayers are answered for the wind is turned across the street and wipes out the church while her own place is saved. But her peace is short-lived, the night of brooding over the loss of the church determining Smith that "the wicked shall not survive" and he rushes to Fan's home where a fight follows. She strikes him over the head and the blow returns sanity.

Then he joins Fan in nursing the sick children and when the food is exhausted he starts on the trip across the desert for a new supply. While he is away, Spanish Ed, crazed by the fever and the liquor that he has found in the ruins, breaks into the woman's quarters and starts to consume her water supply. With a clever trick she gets his gun and drives him away, though he threatens "Sometime you have to sleep, then I get you."

She keeps the vigil, though half crazed for sleep and at the same moment Spanish Ed is trying to climb in at the back door falls to his death while Smith hammers against the front door. Thinking the latter the Spaniard she fired, inflicting only a flesh wound and herself collapses. With him Smith had brought a doctor who assures Fan that the little ones are out of danger and with that hope there is fully born a love that replaces the fanaticism that had ruled Smith's heart.

INCLUDED among the scene pictures and available in advertising form there is a striking picture of Miss Dalton in semi-western garb that will get attention to your advertising. There is another of her wearing the sombrero and a smile on her face that is equally fetching. Miss Dalton's personality should be made the eye-catcher of your displays and the larger cut that you use the better it will be. Here is a case where you can use a stock cut of the star, provided it is large and striking.

We would advise devoting one of the

At right and left two pictures that show the true character of Faro Fan, and center panel is a close-up of two of the kiddies, including "Sugar Plum"

At left, scene in Faro Fan's gambling hall; at right, the fanatic calls down the wrath of heaven; but in the center, Fan's prayers prevail displays in advance on the opening to telling the people that Miss Dalton is going to come back in a western picture, the sort in which she made her first great hit:

"It's been some time since you've seen Dorothy Dalton in a western picture. You remember her in 'The Flame of the Yukon' and 'Flare Up Sal.' You know the fire that she puts into her creations. You know that there's going to be some action when you see her in a picture of the old West.

"Here she is seen as Faro Fan. She runs the gambling joint in a western settlement, yet the woman is strong in her. She cares for the orphan children, she takes in the fever stricken renegade, and she saves from his own ruin the fanatic who cursed her—to win his love in the end.

"It's a western picture with thrills, with the emotions tugging all the time at the heart—and a smile playing in your eyes at the end."

THEN here are a couple that get into the more intimate sort of stuff about her character and the production:

"She was only Faro Fan, and she ran a gambling house. But she was on the level and so was everything about the place. 'My father was proud of the place and I promised him I'd hold on to it,' and she did. There wasn't anything crooked about the joint and there wasn't anything crooked about the girl.

"Everybody knew it except the evangelist whom she aided in his distress. Then as she trusted him and brought to him a crippled orphan to be cured, as he had promised, he turned on her and cursed her. He called on heaven to wipe out the town with fire, but the flames turned from her gambling hall and destroyed his church.

"He was a crazed fanatic and she saved him, just as she saved everyone else. You'll wonder why she did after she had to club him over the head—but love was a wonderful thing in those frontier days of the West—and it is a wonderful thing now as your heart will tell you when you witness the climax of this picture."

And this:

"She was 'Mother Goose' to her four little orphan wards. Out in the world she was Faro Fan. When the kiddies 'played church' they wanted her to be their Angel—and she was an angel to them and all the afflicted. She was an angel to the fanatic, too, until he learned that she ran the gambling hall.

"Then he called down the fires of heaven that her place might be wiped out, but instead the flames swept the winds from her and destroyed his church. HER'S were the prayers that prevailed, and when sanity came to this evangelist he knew how wrong he had been—how wonderful she—but the greatest of happiness was not denied him—for Faro Fan left nothing but sunshine and smiles in her path."

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture of any others?

"This is a western picture in which a single shot is fired—that one by Faro Fan at the man she had come to love—fired when she thought that she was saving her little wards from an insane Mexican.

"Dorothy Dalton has the role of a girl who ran the gambling hall because it has been her father's pride. Every cent that was lost there was lost 'on the square.' She's on the job to see that everything is on the level.

"In her home she is a real angel to four orphan kiddies and when she hears the evangelist cry 'Come and be healed' she takes the crippled little child to him only to have a curse visited on her head. She takes in a fever-crazed renegade only to have him seek her life.

"She hears the fires of heaven called down upon her—and she prays—and hers are prayers that were answered. She wins over everything—she, just Faro Fan—and you'll agree that the Fates were just right.

"And thrills—lots of them. Action—all the time. Then little catches in the throat and a big broad smile of happiness at the end.

"Different sort of a western picture? You said it. And Dorothy Dalton makes it all the more charming."

THEN some short ones, though we would much rather take sufficient space, even if the matter is used in small type to get the broader selling argument over:

"Queen of a gambling hall—Queen of children's hearts—Queen of the man who once cursed her—when the cloud of fanaticism lifted and the sunshine of love stole through."

"Owner of a gambling hell, and protector of orphans. Cursed by an evangelist and his redeemer. Prayed against as something evil and saved by Heaven itself. It's hard to understand such a character from mere words, but that's the sort of a girl Dorothy Dalton is in 'The Lady of Red Butte.'"

"The Sabbath was 'just another day' in Red Butte until the fanatic came along. He visited his curse on Faro Fan who ran the gambling hall—but the curse was of no avail for every day was the Sabbath in her heart of hearts. It's Dorothy Dalton in the strangest western picture that you ever saw, one filled with thrills that leaves you brimming over with pure delight."

"The story of a fanatic who went out to redeem the world and who himself was redeemed by the wonderful faith and love for the world of a woman whom he knew only as the keeper of a gambling hall—the Lady of Red Butte."

If you use the circular letter plans to your patrons, we would mould this along the selling lines that we gave you on another page for the "different" sort of a picture and then add:

"You've seen Dorothy Dalton in a lot of different kinds of pictures. Although this is a western it is still 'different.' We are anxious to find out which ones you like the best, so come and see this one—and then tell us your choice. You are sure to enjoy 'The Lady of Red Butte' while you are making up your mind."

Dignity in Display and Good Music Should Be Used

PERSONALITY of the star should dominate all of your newspaper advertising and your lobby as well. The inclination may be strong on the part of some exhibitors to build the front of a gambling hall into the lobby, but unless your house makes the most sensational sort of an appeal we wouldn't do it. That will certainly leave the impression that Dorothy Dalton has the role of a bad woman in this producion, when the opposite is true.

We would rather carry out the idea of the title by getting a large number of circular cardboards and affixing to each of these a picture of Miss Dalton. You will find a most attractive one of her as she appears in real life on one of the one sheets and from the three sheet you will be able to take another head of her with the expression of sorrow on her face. A large number of these suspended from the ceiling of the lobby just above the heads of the patrons will get lots of attention.

Lighting for the lobby at night should be in red to carry out the idea, and if you have a changeable sign we would use the red globes for the name of the star and the title of the picture.

Pictures of Miss Dalton should be plentifully displayed in the lobby, especially some of the scenes showing her with the little children. Here is a star that has been before you long enough for you to have been making a collection of pictures of her in her various roles, and if you have done this there is nothing that will attract more attention.

IN the advertising, especially the larger displays, we would take occasion to mention the supporting players, because this comes mighty near being a real "all star" cast. Elsewhere we have mentioned the emphasis to be placed on little May Garcia.

Thomas Holding, who has the role of the fanatic, is one of the best known of leading men, and is probably a favoritte in your section. He has appeared with Pauline Frederick, Clara Kimball Young, Mme. Petrova, and in several of the all-star offerings.

KID APPEAL

You Have a New Child Star in This Picture

THERE is nothing that is likely to bring more people to your theatre than to tell them that there is a human child appeal in the picture. In this case you have a chance to go further because this is a little player of whom no one has ever seen unless you have played "For Better, For Worse" and then although she must have attracted attention her name was not listed in the cast.

If you use the letter form tell them there about little May Garcia who has the role of "Sugar Plum." If you don't use that form, prepare an entertaining story for the new columns. It will be read and it will bring business. You can use a line like this:

"Every one who loves children will feel well compensated after they have seen the smile of little May Garcia—it is the most appealing little bit that the screen has seen. Come and see her and make up your own mind whether she's going to be one of the screen's great stars some day."

If you did play "For Better, For Worse" call attention to the fact that she played the little girl who was crippled by an automobile in that picture. Everyone will remember her.

Tully Marshall is easily in the front rank of character actors. He attracted his first great attention on pictures with Triangle-Fine Arts, where he had big roles with all the stars in those pictures. Since then he has been appearing in most of the Famous Players-Lasky all-star casts. William Courtright and Joseph Swickard are almost equally well known for their character work.

THIS picture should be given a setting of comedy in the remainder of the bill. For the overture there should be used one of the brighter selections—if you play grand opera music for that number. Otherwise a medley of some of the old time songs will go mighty well here.

Drop in your news weekly or educaional and introduce a song as the prologue for the feature. "Mighty Lak a Rose," "Ave Maria" or "The Magic of Your Eyes" are three selections that are available for a female voice, and for a male we would suggest "Little Mother of Mine." In case the latter is used, carry it into the picture as the secondary theme where the children are shown.

A considerable part of this feature has to be played to action, especially for the most of those where the fanatic is shown in action. "Crafty Spy" can well be used for the scenes of the Mexican. The theme should be introduced first when the girl takes the water to the fainting preacher, and then should not be introduced again until the point after he has been struck over the head and love comes to be evidenced. For this theme use a high class melody, such as Grunfeld's "Romance," "Love's Melody," Fiblich's "Poem," "Even Song" or "I Love You Truly."

By the way, there can be a striking effect secured during the scenes of the burning town by having flashes of red on the sides of the screen and the footlights up in red.

If you have not used "Little Mother of Mine" as the song before the feature, then try Nevin's "Lullaby." There is another scene where the girl is keeping the vigil where "In the Twilight" will be most acceptable. While we are not undertaking to select the music for you here, we are making these suggestions so that you will get a high class score for this offering. It is a case where music can add much to the picture.

Theatres using a second orchestral number should then employ selections from one of the lighter comic operas, and close the bill with a comedy, preferably one full of action.

The Independent Field

Jess Willard Stars For Pictures

Big Special Seven Reel Production Nearly Ready in Which Heavyweight Champion Has Active Star Role

THE Continental Corporation announces that Jess Willard, heavyweight champion of the world, has finally succumbed to the screen and in a few weeks will be seen in a big, seven-reel production, the title of which is to be announced shortly.

Arrangements are now being made for the distribution of the feature and for a national advertising and publicity campaign. Several independent distributing organizations are said to be bidding for the privilege of handling this picture, which is being made by the Continental Pictures Corporation of Chicago.

This latter organization is said to be made up of a number of big steel and banking interests of the Middle West, who it is understood have placed unlimited funds back of the project to insure a production of exceptionally high order. Fred L. Wilks, a successful business man of Chicago, is president of the company. The Chicago offices of the new organization are in the Continental & Commercial Bank Building and the New York offices in the Fitzgerald Building.

Arline Pretty, who is well remembered for her work in Vitagraph productions and also as leading woman for Douglas Fairbanks, is playing opposite the champion in the principal feminine role. The production is being made under the direction of Harry Revier, formerly with Jesse L. Lasky and the director of numerous big, special pictures, among a number of Petrova productions.

Work on the production was started several weeks ago in Chicago and Willard, with his entire supporting company, is now in Los Angeles completing it. Interiors are being made at the Brunton studio, but as the picture is almost entirely an out-of-doors product, the greater part of Willard's work is being done in the open.

The story of the play is being kept a secret, but the statement is made that it is a big subject with some of the most massive scenes ever shown in a picture, three thousand people being employed throughout the production.

McClure to Produce Series of Two-Reelers

OFFICIAL announcement comes from A. Blaikie Dick, treasurer of McClure Productions, Inc., of a new series of two-reel pictures to be produced under the name of the Silver Chevron Series, telling the thrilling story in fiction form of the drama, romance and gigantic achievement behind the development of America's fighting machine to its present-day efficiency. The pictures are being made under the official sanction and with the co-operation of the War Department. For the first time in pictorial form they will show what the silver chevron and the mighty army of American workers did to win the war. They will reveal America's most closely guarded war secrets.

The heroine in each one of the pictures will be Alice Mann, who has appeared in several Vitagraph and Paramount releases, notably in support of Taylor Holmes. Miss Mann has also scored successes in comedies, in which she appeared with Larry Semon and Roscoe Arbuckle.

The first picture in the series, which is now in process of production, is called "The Yellow Eel" and introduces the mysterious character by that name who figures in the whole series.

While the background of the Silver Chevron Series will be one of the facts, each picture will be a full fledged movie tale in fiction form, involving the elements of mystery, romance, and dramatic situations. McClure scenario writers have been working on the series for weeks and have completed the bulk of the stories. The assistance which the War Department is rendering in the production of the series has enabled McClure Productions to give the stories the most unique and unexampled settings. Scenes are laid in places where no civilian has ever before been allowed to set his foot, it is said. Properties are used which the Kaiser's spies spent thousands of dollars and risked their lives to get a glimpse of and fathom their secrets. Stories of bomb plots and other desperate efforts of Germany's agents to prevent America from being a factor in the war—facts heretofore forbidden to be published—are said to have been provided from official records for use in this series.

While each picture in the Silver Chevron Series will be a complete drama in itself, there will be a well defined connecting link between all the pictures.

Announces Features Are Doing Big Business

With George Beban in "Hearts of Men" and "The Lady of the Dugout" signed for the entire Marcus Loew Circuit of theatres, the New York Exchange of the Pioneer Film Corporation entered upon the biggest week of it's history recently.

These two pictures in addition to the new Pioneer release "Virtuous Sinners" and the Craig Kennedy serial "The Carter Case," are cleaning up in the New York territory it is said in such a manner as to show conclusively what can be done with pictures that are actually first class in every respect.

Places Burlingham's in Foreign Countries

President Paul Cromelin of the Inter-Ocean announces the conclusion of contracts in behalf of the Frederick Burlingham Travel Series in many parts of the world.

The most important sale was for Great Britain, through Managing Director Taylor of the London Inter-Ocean office. The Paris branch has placed this series for France and Belgium.

Louis Brock of the home office has sold the series in Japan and Cuba and their closure for a number of South American countries is expected shortly by this member of the Inter-Ocean staff.

The New York Sunday World gave a full page in its Sunday magazine to the Burlingham pictures under the heading, "How to Get Killed On the Alpine Peaks." The "touching the high spots" still used in a recent issue of this trade paper was the feature of the newspaper's illustrative layout.

"What Inter-Ocean has done with the Burlingham films gives the lie to the contention that the foreign market will only accept drama and comedy," said President Cromelin, in announcing the deals mentioned above.

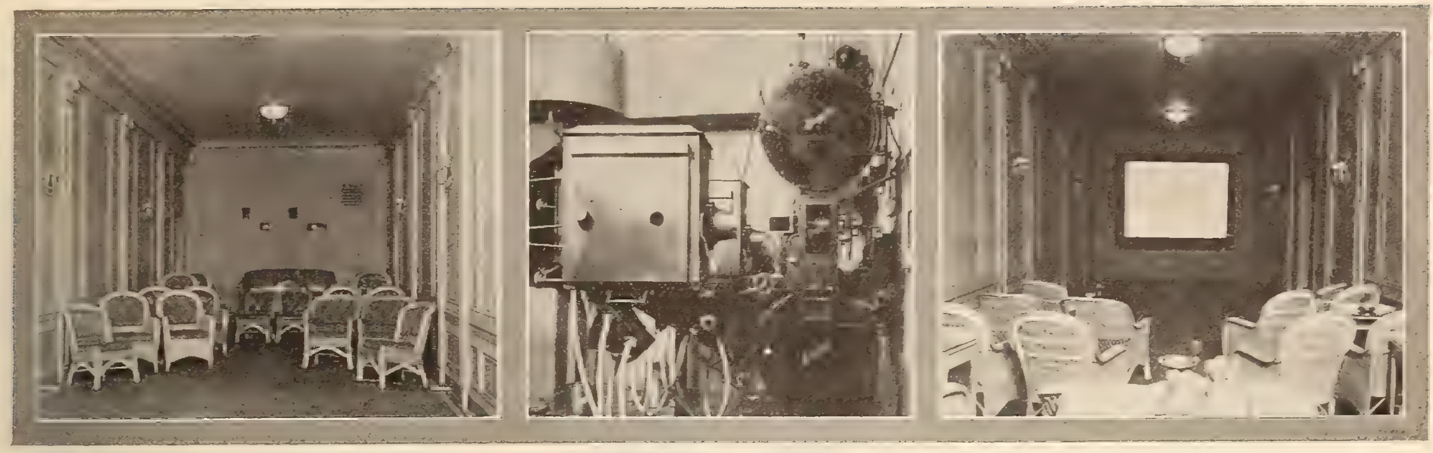
Harry R. Guest Joins Nelson Productions

Harry R. Guest, for the past three years publicity representative for the John H. Kunsky Corporation, controlling ten of Detroit's photoplay theatres, has resigned to connect himself with H. N. Nelson, of Nelson Productions, Inc., in the capacity of scenario writer and assistant to Mr. Nelson. Mr. Guest won considerable prominence in film and amusement circles of Michigan through his editorial work on John H. Kunsky's Weekly Film News. Nelson Productions, Inc., are entering upon a new field of advertising film with which they plan to cover the United States. The films are called "Posed from Life Photoplaylets," and Mr. Guest will supply the endless quantity of original stories that will be required for this enterprise.

Stewart's Mother Sees "Mary Regan"

Mrs. Martha Stewart, mother of Anita Stewart, the movie star, journeyed all the way across the continent to witness the first public presentation of her daughter's latest production, "Mary Regan," at the Strand Theatre, New York. She made the trip despite the protests of Anita and was one of the first in line at the Strand Theatre entrance yesterday afternoon.

Until a year ago Mrs. Stewart never missed a first performance of any of her daughter's pictures, but she missed the only two thus far produced by Miss Stewart's own company. When the first of these, "Virtuous Wives," was given its premiere in New York, Mrs. Stewart was in Los Angeles, having gone there for her health. She was still at the coast when the second production, "A Midnight Romance," was shown here.



Interocean Film Corporation can well take pride in its new projection room. The view on the left shows that it is very spacious and the extreme right portrays the screen and a few of the comfortable chairs. The center panel pictures the perfect projection booth and equipment

Reports Solid Bookings on Frohman Feature

W. E. Aechtler and Edward F. Farrell of the Major Film Corporation of Boston called at the office of the Frohman Amusement Corporation and reported that the production, "Once to Every Man," is booked solid to the middle of July in the states of Massachusetts and Connecticut, and that they have not as yet even attempted to accept bookings in the remainder of the six New England states. Mr. Farrell stated that the women patrons of the theatres have taken to the attraction to the same extent as the men.

While at the office Farrell and Aechter closed for the entire series of Texas Guinan two-reel Westerns and the Mack Swain Comedies.

George Orth Organizes Mars Films

George Orth, who was recently honorably discharged from the photographic detachment of the army, has organized the Mars Film Corporation to produce one-reel comedies and five-reel features under his personal direction. One of the first to be produced will be "Fine Gold," written by Paul Price.

The supporting cast will include George Ross, Miss M. Block, Bert Baumell, Gladys Core and many others. Negotiations for release are being made with some of the large releasing companies.

Pioneer to Release Films This Summer

The Pioneer Film Corporation in spite of the fact that it is more or less general practice on the part of picture distributors to withhold their bigger pictures until autumn, intends to offer during the summer it is said a long list of special attractions.

It is expected that the exhibitor will welcome this step with gratification. With the latest Pioneer specials available it is said at his local exchange the theatre manager will find that his problem of securing big pictures during the summer season will be partly solved.

Inter-Ocean Projection Room Opened

This room was conceived for the purpose of entertaining visitors in refined surroundings, special attention having been devoted to the decoration, lighting, ventilation, furnishing, etc., in connection with perfect projection, that was in reality the main objective. The architects planned the room so that length, width, and height are all properly balanced, rendering a rather stately appearance. With this foundation, the problem of interior Decoration was taken up with one of the leading firms, who submitted studies for color schemes and furnishings. The walls are pannelled in the French Louis XVI style, between Pilasters, richly ornamented with caps and other delicate designs in plaster relief. The cornice has also several members of this same relief work, of a character to attract attention to its richness of design. The wall panels are decorated with a mauve color mottled in effect, with the surrounding stiles, mouldings, etc., in complimentary colors. All the caste relief ornamentation is decorated in soft pastel shades, while here and there a flat is striped in a soft old blue. The entire work is glazed rendering a very beautiful, quiet, rich effect, and restful surrounding. The flooring is a special cork production laid in diagonal squares, with parting strips in ivory, and toning beautifully as a part of the entire color scheme. Great care devoted to the lighting proposition and the result is all that could be desired. There are four concealed lights in the ceiling, these being covered by glass bowls with etched design, that was made to confirm with the period of the room. Rich caste old gold frames hold the bowls in position. On the walls there are many lighting brackets, of old gold delicate design, with small back panels of old blue and ivory Wedgewood. The miniature silk shades over the candles are made of orange color silk, lined with purple silk, offering a mellow exquisite effect. The ventilating system installed offers constant change of air and the visitor also finds that he is not disturbed by annoying reflections when viewing pictures.

The furnishings consist of a very luxurious divan at the rear of the room, raised on a platform. A special leather was dyed to harmonize with the walls and was utilized for this divan, and on many chairs; selected with great care so as to meet the comfort of the guests. While the chairs are of various sizes, they are all finished alike in enamel, some being covered in the leather, and others in an old blue and gray damask. There are also many small delicate memoranda tables, telephone equipment, etc. One of the most effective results is the manner in which the screen is set. A deep purple velvet was deemed most advisable as a draping for this purpose, and after position was determined, great care was taken to employ only a sufficient amount of velvet, so as not to overcome the "balance" of the color scheme of the Auditorium, and yet do justice to the screen as a setting.

"Reclaimed" Sells Rights

Alpha Pictures announces that it has sold the rights for "Reclaimed" in the tetrritory of New England, to the Major Film Corporation of Boston.

The Metropolis Comedies were sold to the same concern also for the New England territory.

Executives on Sales Trip for "Virtuous Men"

Arthur H. Sawyer of S-L Pictures left New York this week for a trip in the interests of "Virtuous Men," the special film production sponsored by Herbert Lubin and himself. Mr. Sawyer will carry with him two prints of "Virtuous Men," and has arranged for special screenings in Boston, his first stop. After exhibiting the production starring E. K. Lincoln to New England state right buyers, Mr. Sawyer will arrange for an extended run of the picture at one of the leading theatres in that city. After covering New England, he will embrace in his itinerary practically all of the states west of Denver.

Bert Lubin of the S-L selling forces also left New York for a tour of the northwestern states in the interests of "Virtuous Men." He will make his first stop at Minneapolis, Minn.

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin report an unusual number of sales in connection with their picture, and it is believed that the entire country will be disposed of within the next three weeks.

"When My Ship Comes In" Reported Popular

Reports from the branch managers of Independent Sales Corporation and Film Clearing House, and the exhibitors throughout the country, to Frank G. Hall, president, indicate that Mr. Hall's late release on the 10-20-30 series, "When My Ship Comes In," a screen version of Gouverneur Morris' novel of the same name, starring Jane Grey, with Nigel Barrie and William J. Kelly in support, is one of the most popular of the series. Addition prints have been sent out by the Film Clearing House, New York, so great has been the demand for this picture, it is said. Mr. Hall announces that "When a Woman Strikes," a western melodrama with all-star cast including Ben Wilson, Rosemary Theby, Neva Gerber and Murdock MacQuarrie, the special to follow "When My Ship Comes In," on the 10-20-30 series, is a picture from which he expects good returns for the exhibitor, as it is action from introduction to the final fade-out.

Pronounce Hall Series Big Success

Exhibitors Throughout This Country and Abroad Enthusiastic Over Popular Features, It Is Claimed

FRANK G. HALL'S series of 10-20-30 releases, now numbering six, are meeting with big success throughout this country and abroad, according to reports received from representative exhibitors. Mr. Hall launched the 10-20-30 series with the idea of giving the exhibitor a good picture, with box-office attraction and a popular star, at a rental price within the reach of the smallest house.

The manner in which this series is going over in some of the largest cities is set forth in the letter received by Mr. Hall, published in the trade press, from Harry Crandall, the owner of seven of Washington, D. C., largest motion picture theatres. In this letter Mr. Crandall states that one of the 10-20-30 series, "Suspense," starring Molly King, was played first-run in his Knickerbocker theatre, because, as he expressed it, "the picture was too good to play his smaller houses."

Gerald F. Bacon will produce for Independent Sales Corp.

Before the year is up, Mr. Hall will have released twelve of these special attractions at the 10-20-30 rentals. Six have already been released and are now before the public of this country and abroad. The Independent Sales Corporation, of which Mr. Hall is president, is releasing this series and the physical distribution is being handled by the Film Clearing House, Inc., of which Mr. Hall is supervising director. These two companies are also handling the distribution of Mr. Hall's special releases, including "Wanted for Murder," starring Elaine Hammerstein and Lillian Hall; "A Romance of the Air," starring Lieut. Bert Hall, famous American Ace; "the Littlest Scout," a J. Stuart Blackton production; "The Other Man's Wife," starring Stuart Holmes and Ellen Cassidy, and "A House Divided," Mr. Hall's most recent release on the special program, produced under the personal supervision of Commodore Blackton and starring Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer. The screen version was made by Anthony Paul Kelly from the English novel by Ruth Holt Boucicault. It is shown in six reels.

Mack Swain Completes Two New Comedies

THE Frohman Amusement Corporation distributing the Mack Swain comedies on the state right basis announce that the first two productions have been completed, and that the release of these attractions commenced May 10.

There will be 26 productions, released one every other week, and the demand for these comedies justifies the officials of the Frohman Amusement Corporation in believing that the entire country will be disposed of within a maximum period of ten days.

The Mack Swain comedies are announced at an opportune time. There appears to be a dearth of single and double-reel comedies, which fact is brought home by the fact it is said that exhibitors throughout the country are compelled to book re-issue short reel productions.

The Swain Comedies will not be of the slapstick variety, that is nothing savoring of either the crude or the vulgar will be shown in any of the productions, and the stories screened are written largely to suit the unusual talents of Mr. Swain himself. The productions are being directed by Walter S. Frederick, who received his original training as an actor, stage director, manager and author of legitimate attractions. His screen career was established with Kalem, Biograph and Keystone.

Harry Leonhardt of the California Theatre, one of the largest and finest institutions on the West Coast, after seeing the first two productions contracted to play all.

Mr. William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, is now on his way East with the first two of these attractions.

Moss Books Educational

"Gypsies of the Arctic," a single-reel subject from the library de luxe of the Educational Films Corporation, has been booked by B. S. Moss for use with the showing of "The Unpardonable Sin" at the Broadway Theatre for the length of the run.

The subject is said to contain some very unique camera shots of a herd of five thousand reindeer swimming across the mouth of a river in Lapland. The strong current bends the solid formation of swimming animals into a great bow extending far out into the water.

Sam Behrendt Gets Publicity for Mix

Reports from Los Angeles indicate that they are giving a great deal of credit to Sam Behrendt for the immense amount of publicity he recently secured for Tom Mix.

In the Los Angeles Evening Herald of April 18, a four column lay-out with striking illustrations showed Tom Mix in various picturesque attitudes receiving accident insurance to the amount of $300,000.

The insurance for the Fox star covered head, torso and legs, and the Behrendt publicity stunt excited widespread comment it is said.

Brown Publicity Man for Pioneer

Following the policy of general expansion initiated by General Manager M. H. Hoffman since he assumed the direction of the Pioneer Film Corporation, far reaching changes are now being made in the publicity department of his concern.

To Southard Brown, a motion picture and theatrical press man of long experience has been given the task of carrying out these changes and when the work under way is completed he will take charge of the department, under the general direction of M. H. Hoffman.

Mr. Brown brings to his new post not only a first hand knowledge of publicity, and advertising but is also thoroughly acquainted with the manufacturing and exploitation of film product.

Western Manager Uses Educationals

Miller's New California Theatre, Los Angeles, is another theatre that is using more than one "Educational" release on their weekly program. Vice-President E. W. Hammons has received a copy of the attractive souvenir booklet for the week of April 28, which outlines their program.

Under the heading "World Visions" they have listed the new Robert C. Bruce scenic, "The Little High Horse," which they describe as "another beautiful study of the mountain fastnesses of our own Sierras, where few humans have ever penetrated." A new International cartoon, with the "Shenanigan Kids," supplies the comedy on the bill.

Sells "Stolen Orders" for Eastern Pennsylvania

William A. Brady announces the sale of his big picture, "Stolen Orders," for Eastern Pennsylvania and Delaware to the Metro Film Exchange of Philadelphia. Robert Lynch, manager of the Philadelphia Metro office, will shortly inaugurate an extensive campaign of exploitation on behalf of the Brady picture.

This important sale, following on the heels of that for Illinois to Jones, Linick and Schaefer, of Chicago, indicates keen interest and further substantiates the remarkable records, "Stolen Orders" is said to be rolling up at box-offices all over the country.

Townley Will See Picture

Louis Meyer, president of the Virginia Pearson Photoplays, Inc., decided, upon the completion of Miss Pearson's first feature, "The Bishop's Emeralds," that he would cable the author, Captain Houghton Townley, who has been serving in the British army, that his story had been turned into picture form.

The cable was as follows: "Bishop's Emeralds" finished successfully. Sorry you can't see it.

Three days later a cable was received at Mr. Meyer's office at the Theatre Magazine. There was only three words in it: "Will be there."

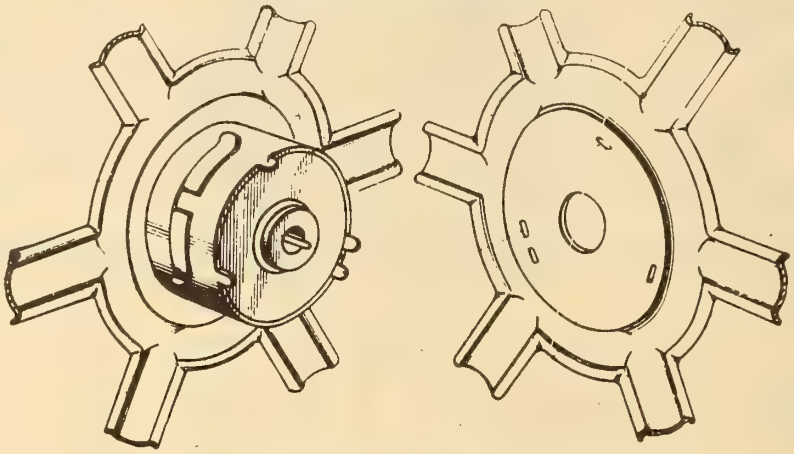
THE BOYLAN EVEN-TENSION REEL

Forever ends all tension take-up troubles
Increases the life of the lower sprocket over 400 per cent
Patented April 23, 1918



It's all in the "Hub." Otherwise it's a Standard Reel

Does away with the necessity for a take-up friction in the projector itself

The take-up friction of the projector is set tight so that it cannot slip at all and the tension on the film is entirely taken care of automatically by the reel.

It requires no attention whatever on the part of the projectionist.

The tension is ample yet at no time can there possibly be any excessive pull on the film.

It has no springs or weights or complicated mechanism and can be used on any machine using the standard reels, without making any change whatever.

It has been tested out under all kinds of conditions for more than eighteen months.

It will save the projectionist all his present worries from variation in take-up tension, losing the lower loop, etc., and will save the moving picture industry many thousands of dollars annually through the elimination of the various kinds of damage done to the films through excessive tension.

Film Stock for Theatre Use

UNDOUBTEDLY within the next year or two there will be a considerable campaign launched to force the universal use of non-inflammable motion picture films. This, we all agree, would be an ideal condition if it were possible and feasible.

In France a law was passed some years ago setting a certain date after which it was stated that it would be illegal to use inflammable film anywhere within the country. This date has come and gone and according to authorities well versed in the subject will undoubtedly never be enforced and will ultimately be repealed or become a dead letter. Before passing final judgment on this question as it applies to the United States it may be well to investigate it rather thoroughly. The question at the present time is: Do we need non-inflammable film and why?

As stated in an earlier article on this page, we have three important places where motion picture film is the cause of a greater or less risk to human life.

First—In motion picture theatres

Second—In the exchange

Third—In the hands of amateurs in homes, churches, etc.

THEATRE RISK—At the present time the motion picture theatre is the most important to the industry. It is through this entertainment end that the business has been enabled to attain its present size and enjoy its present prosperity. This prosperity has been built up through the use of inflammable film. Since the industry started nothing else has been used. Vast quantities of this film have been produced and used in making positive prints. On the basis of 15,000 theatres running 7,000 feet of film a show, we have over 105,000,000 feet inflammable film actually shown to the people of the country each day in motion picture theatres. In addition, there are many times this number of feet stored away in the vaults of the distributing companies waiting to be released or waiting for rentals to come in.

This film is handled in such a way that after it leaves the exchange there is practically no danger whatsoever to home life, though what small danger there is we will endeavor to emphasize. The statute books of every city and town in the country so thoroughly protect the motion picture patrons that a change-over from inflammable to non-inflammable film, though adding absolute guarantee of safety, is impracticable and unnecessary.

The city codes throughout the country call for fire-proof booths so built that a reel or so more of film can be burned inside them without doing the least damage. This is happening throughout the country far more often than we realize. Smoke is said to be the real danger and the cause of panic. This may be true, but if the projection room is properly ventilated and the port holes are properly constructed and the city or town requirements lived up to, this smoke will be carried away before the audience knows it. The projection machines offered for theatres, namely, the Motiograph, Powers and Simplex, are so constructed that in their use it would be almost impossible for a fire to start in them, unless the man in charge of the projection room is grossly careless and allows his projector to run down and lose that precision and accuracy which is necessary to perfect projection. In order to start a fire, the film must jam or stop in front of the aperture plate, and should it catch fire at this point but a foot or so would be destroyed and it is practically impossible for fire to spread into the film magazine.

The handling of the film during the time it is going to and from the theatre and the exchange and during the time it is being handled in the projection room before and after it has been used in the projector are the dangerous periods. It is gross carelessness which alone can cause trouble. A cigarette butt, a hot radiator, a rheostat or other unprotected source of heat alone can ignite the film.

These causes of fire should be absolutely eliminated and can be, but should they be allowed to exist, the individual who is at fault should be severely punished. These sources of trouble though altogether too numerous are in reality of small actual danger, as each projection room is a fireproof vault, from which smoke alone can escape.

Most houses have metal containers into which film is put when it arrives from the exchange and from which it is taken a reel at a time when it is actually being placed in the projection machine. Projection of this kind means almost absolute safety to the theatre.

The cases of theatre fires which become known to the audiences while they are still in the theatres are few and far between. In fact, they are so scarce that we do not think we will be contradicted when we say that in theatre use, inflammable film is so nearly absolutely safe that the danger from it is negligible.

For these reasons we are not in favor of seeing legislation start which will injure the theatre branch of the motion picture industry, as an agitation in favor of non-inflammable film would do. If carried through this would mean the destruction of an enormous amount of valuable property which today is bringing in its return without causing more than a casual risk. This risk is not, for example, any greater, if as great, than the use of gasoline and other things which we handle every day without the least thought.

THE EXCHANGE—The film in the exchange is still another hazard. This, however, is a matter of storage and added protection. In the past the exchange buildings have not been properly constructed or located. The handling of the inflammable film in them has been careless and the risks involved unwarranted.

Today this risk is being eliminated rapidly and within a short time we expect to see all exchanges throughout the country located in specially constructed buildings with sprinkler systems, film vaults and other protective devices which will make inflammable film handled or stored in them absolutely safe.

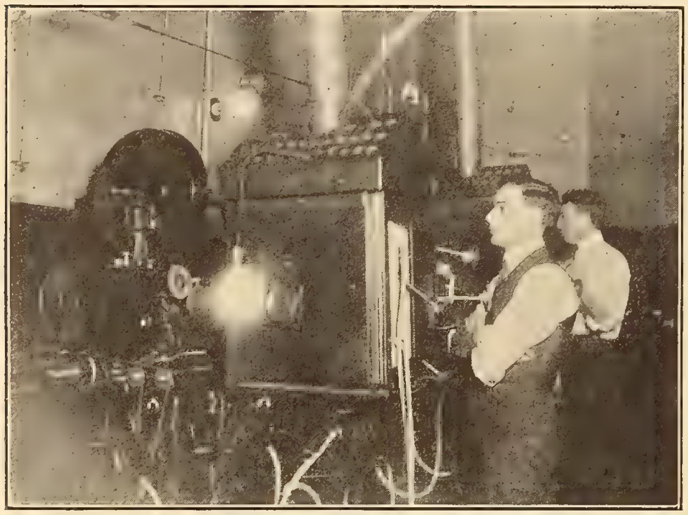
Equipment Operating Projection, Questions Answered

An Ideal Booth

THE projection booth of the Woodlawn theatre, Chicago, is said to be one of the ideal booths of the country. Mr. William A. Karzas, the chief projectionist at the Woodlawn, is a brother of Andrew Karzas, manager of the beautiful South Side theatre. The younger Mr. Karzas who is now an active member of Local 110, has been operating since he was old enough to become a member of the union.



Projection Room, Woodlawn Theatre

The greatest drawing cards at the Woodlawn are the special effects created by Mr. Karzas. Beautiful dissolves and color touches made possible through his ingenuity have placed the Woodlawn on a particularly high plane in the estimation of Chicago patrons.

Mr. Karzas, at the request of the Propection Department, has consented to furnish plans of several of the devices now in daily use in his booth. His magazine signal is shown in this issue of the News. In future issues will appear his newly developed "self-stopping rewind" and his method of "change-over."

What Do You Think?

MANY of the questions put forward by some examining boards when a projectionist applies for a license have been severely criticised. The objections in most cases have not been made by the projectionists themselves but by others who are interested in projecting the very best possible picture.

Those who object to the present precedure may be divided roughly into two classes first, those that believe in a severe exhaustive examination which, while not going directly into the various theories of projection, yet goes to the very limit; and second, those who believe in a general examination on operating subjects leaving most computations and intricate diagrams and connections to be solved by outside experts.

Somewhere between these two extremes there must be a middle course which should prove acceptable to examining boards everywhere. The Motion Picture News intends, if possible, to discover this middle course for the general benefit of projection and projectionists. We intend to commence our part, herewith, with an appeal to projectionists throughout the country.

We want you to write us a letter setting forth what you believe to be a satisfactory kind of examination for a projectionist's license. One way of doing this is to assume that you are to hire an assistant who must be capable of carrying on your work in case of sickness, absence from the city, etc. Now what would you want that man to know before you would trust your machines and projection room to his care? Should he be able to trace out and explain the entire optical system in all its detail? Or would you be satisfied if he could name and locate the various lenses used? Should he be able to point out the magnetic circuits at work within a compensarc or transformer? Or do you believe such matters to be beyond the requirements of a projectionist? These are only a few of the questions that will come to mind after thinking over the subject for a while.

Many of you projectionists have been before examining boards. There were probably some questions which were omitted in your own personal examination that you believe should be asked, as well as some asked that should not be asked because they are either too difficult or are not important enough.

Write down what you think on the matter and send it to the Projection Department. Letters will be printed as speedily as possible, and from the material, suggestions and criticisms received, the NEWS will formulate what seems to the projectionists themselves to be the necessary fundamental questions.

by

But keep this in mind. The idea is not to select specific questions to be asked, for that would be unwise. Any candidate could then post himself on the standard questions and pass the examination without trouble. What we are after is a list of the various subjects which should be covered, together with suggestions as to how thoroughly each subject should be gone into. No one has a better idea of such things than the projectionists who are now operating and who have seen the industry grow from an unimportant one to one of the largest in the country with corresponding severe demands on the knowledge of "the man in the projection room."

Don't wait until you can find a typewriter. Set your thoughts down on the first piece of paper that you find and mail them to us. We will do the rest.

Fireproof Booths

THE highly inflammable film generally used in motion picture machines is always a source of danger from fire. Fire insurance companies accordingly not only make high rates on buildings in which these machines are used, but in some sections actually prohibit their use except when enclosed in a fireproof booth.

In spite of all precautions and safety appliances, these inflammable films are in constant danger of becoming ignited by the intense hot rays of the light source, or by a hot rheostat carelessly located. And this risk is greatly increased by carelessness in the use of cigars, matches, etc., in the vicinity of exposed films.

A burning film is unquenchable by water. The fire is self-supporting and spreads with great rapidity, generating an intense heat and noxious, dense fumes and smoke.

Besides the risk to property and lives from film fires, there is great danger of a panic if the fire occurs in a crowded place of amusement. This danger of panic is exceptionally great in the case of a motion picture film fire as its progress is extremely rapid.

Laws have been enacted in many states compelling the use of a fireproof booth or enclosure. Such enclosures take two forms: those made of asbestos and those made of sheet metal. This article treats only of booths constructed of material made from asbestos. In gathering material for this article we enjoyed the assistance of the engineers of the Johns-Manville Company, a firm which has shown unusual progressiveness in furthering the application of asbestos and asbestos specialties.

The engineers of the Johns-Manville Company have given a great deal of thought to the use of asbestos in the theatre. The booths, therefore, which are described here are the result of experience and experiments.

Asbestos booths as made by the Johns-Manville Company conform to all the requirements of the insurance authorities and the inspection departments wherever ordinances have been passed compelling the use of a fireproof booth. A few of the states which have approved the use of these asbestos booths are

New York
Massachusetts
New Hampshire
Pennsylvania
New Jersey
Maine
Vermont
Michigan
Connecticut
Rhode Island
Ohio
California, etc.

also the National Board of Fire Insurance Underwriters and the New England Insurance Exchange.

Asbestos Wood Booths

These booths are built of Johns-Manville Transite Asbestos Wood ¾ inch thick on sides and top and ⅜ inch thick on floor. This wood is made of that fibrous mineral—asbestos. It possesses greater fire-resisting properties than any other material suitable for booth construction. Fire and heat have practically no effect on it. Water will not disintegrate it, even if turned on it while the wood is hot, and furthermore, it will not warp or shrink.

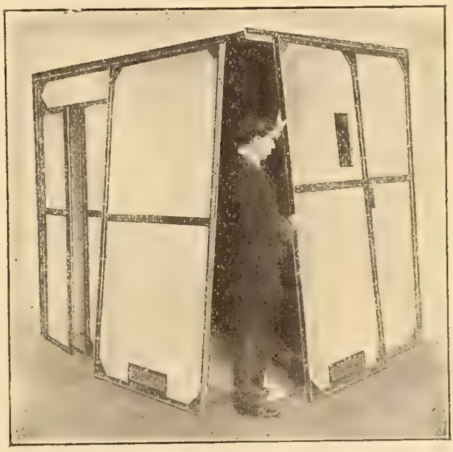
The framework on which the Transite Asbestos Wood sheets are mounted is made of heavy angle irons or tees.

The wise theatre manager will capitalize every possible part of his theatre equipment. A booth, then, which is so constructed that it has been passed as safe by the fire underwriters or the local inspection authorities is an item in which the theatre-going public should be interested. The need for a fireproof booth is not so vitally necessary as in years past, due to the advance in projection machine construction which includes many safeguards against fire at least while the film is passing through the machine. Probably today, a very large proportion of film fires start from causes outside the machine itself such as loose strips of film on the floor, setting film containers on rheostat, etc. But fireproof booths will always be advisable until that time in the quite far distant future when all film will be non-combustible.

Asbestos Portable Booth

A booth made of asbestos wood of the kind used by the Johns-Manville Company can be constructed to conform to the remainder of the theatre. The surface of the booth can be redecorated to harmonize completely with the architecture and fittings of the house. It need not be conspicuous by its ugly appearance when compared to its surroundings as is the case with so many booths in this country today. There is not one single reason why a booth should be so constructed and located that it gives the appearance of being stuck in at the last minute after all the rest of the house has been completed.

Johns-Manville Transite Asbestos Wood Booths have many advantages over sheet metal booths. Metal booths are liable to become charged from an electric circuit, or "grounded," while the asbestos used in the construction of these booths is a non-conductor of electricity and such "grounds" cannot occur. These asbestos booths are much more durable than booths made of sheet metal. They do not transmit to the auditorium noises incident to the operation of the picture machine.



Asbestos Semi-Portable Booth

A metal booth, on the other hand, acts as a sounding board, actually augmenting the noises within, thus detracting from the pleasure of the audience and cheapening the effect of a high-class show.

Asbestos "Portable" Booth

In addition to the Transite Asbestos Wood Booths, the Johns-Manville Company also makes a portable, or tent type of booth, which consists of an asbestos cloth covering over an iron pipe framework. This asbestos cloth is made by weaving a yarn, spun from the silky fibres of asbestos, into a heavy fabric which resembles heavy cotton duck. The asbestos cloth fabric is strong and light and is absolutely fireproof. It is therefore well adapted to the making of a fireproof booth or enclosure.

Universal Motion Picture Camera being taken up in Observation Balloon on French Front

(Photograph Copyrighted by Committee on Public Information)

THE UNIVERSAL WAS PUT TO EVERY TEST

By the photographers of the U. S. Signal Corps who recorded the American participation in the Great War and came through with flying colors every time. It was used in the mud and wet of the trenches on the firing line, in the observation balloons, in the military bases and camps, and everywhere the signal corps photographers went, because the Universal was the only motion picture camera found suitable for over-sea service by the United States government.

This was not only an honor, but an endorsement of the principles which enter into the construction of the Universal. The work which the Universal turned out for the government is the strongest testimonial to the value of the camera.

If considering the purchase of a motion picture camera, learn all about the Universal—the one-piece construction which assures permanent adjustment, perfect operation at all times and protection against displacement through rough handling and climatic changes. One large gear controls all moving parts, simplifying the machine, giving the most efficiency, and making every piece accessible.

There are many unique and valuable features on the Universal which are fully described in our booklet on the camera. Write for a copy of this.

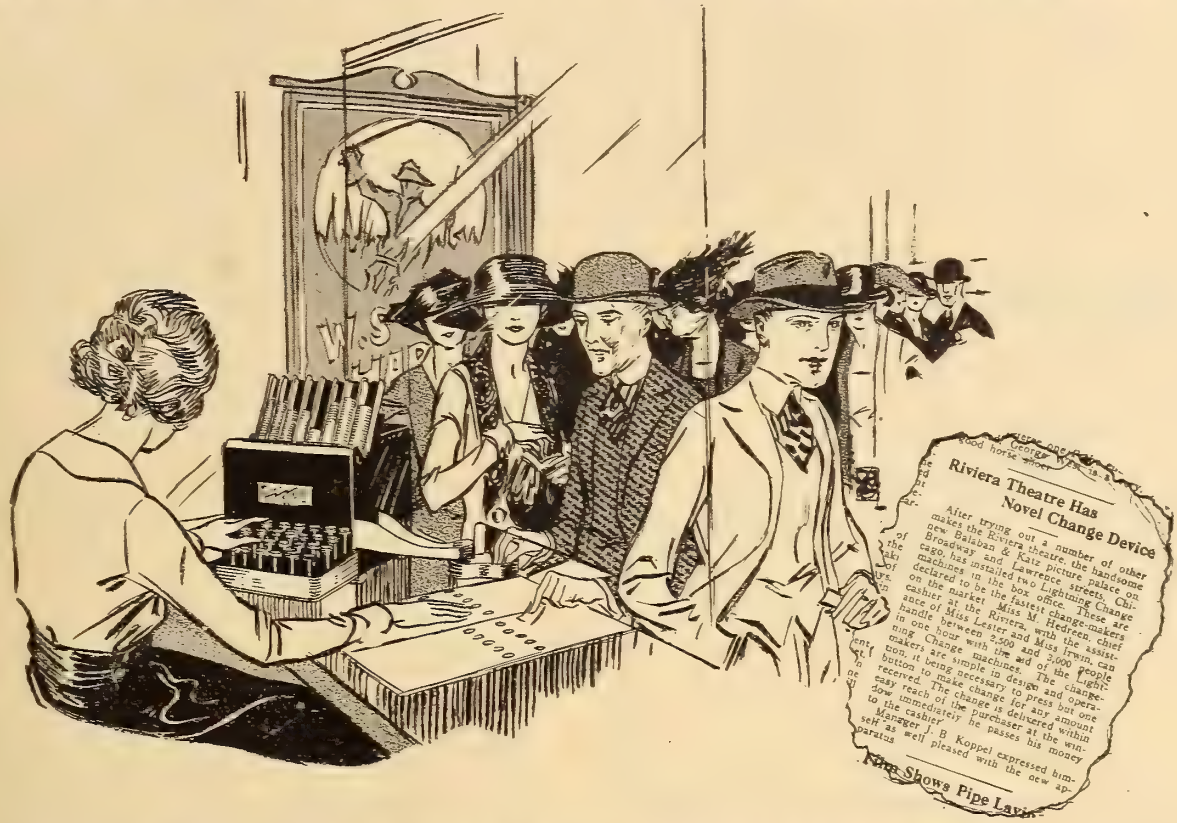
Speed in Money Changing



Riviera Theatre Has Novel Change Device

After trying out a number of other makes the Riviera theatre, the handsome new Balaban & Katz picture palace on Broadway and Lawrence streets, Chicago, has installed two Lightning Change machines in the box office. These are declared to be the fastest change-makers on the market. Miss M. Hedreen, chief cashier at the Riviera, with the assistance of Miss Lester and Miss Irwin, can handle between 2,500 and 3,000 people in one hour with the aid of the Lightning Change machines. The change-makers are simple in design and operation, it being necessary to press but one button to make change for any amount received. The change is delivered within easy reach of the purchaser at the window immediately he passes his money to the cashier.

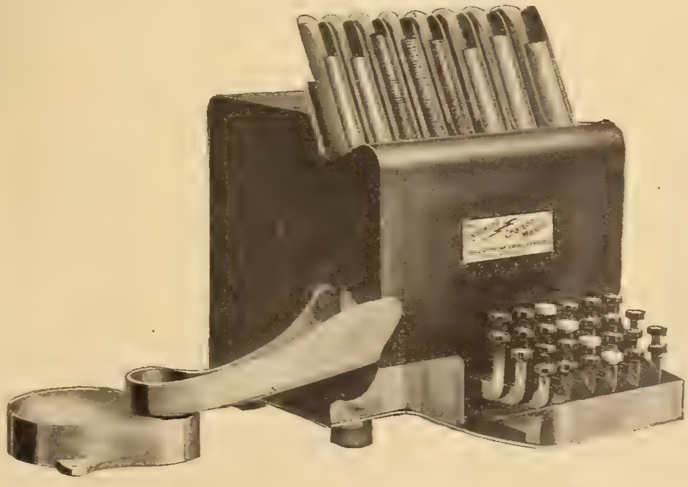
Manager J. B. Koppel expressed himself as well pleased with the new apparatus.

Read What the LIGHTNING CHANGER does

SIMPLY press a button and—Presto—the change comes jingling out into the metal cup, where it is easily scooped up by the patron.

Compare that with the old way—digging several coins out of a drawer—counting, handling them—pushing them across the counter to be scraped up by the purchaser with the risk of dropping them, keeping the line waiting—to say nothing of delays caused by mistakes which must happen when change is not counted mechanically.

The Lightning Changer counts and delivers change mechanically, at the touch of a button—saving brain work, mistakes from fatigue, arguments and delays.



It will make change for 1,500 patrons an hour, without error.

It takes no skill to operate; takes less experience than the old way. Takes little space—9½ x 12 x 13 inches—and weighs only 20 pounds—easily carried.

The magnificent new State-Lake Theatre, Chicago, recently opened to crowded houses, has installed two Lightning Changers after careful comparison with other machines.

A LABOR saving satisfactory film report is the one shown here submitted by Projectionist Chavey from Greenville, Texas. This form of blank reduces the labor of writing to a minimum yet it fulfills all the requirements. By merely checking off the various "discrepancies," a full report of the condition in which the film is received may be made a permanent record. As Mr. Chavey says, "This blank has saved me several times from being blamed by the exchange for damaged film."

Editor, Projection Department,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

I am enclosing a Film Report blank which I have been using for about two years and it has kept us from paying for films which from all appearance seemed to have been damaged at our theatre but which really was in that condition when we received them.

REMARKS:

Operator

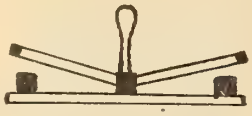
I have been a constant reader of the NEWS for several years and it certainly has been a great help to me.

I think the projectionists down in this country have buried their "Meal Ticket Punch" since I hardly ever get a film now with many punch holes in the end. But the trade marks of the film exchanges are as numerous as ever. If we could only get the exchanges to bury their punches just as we have, everything would be "peaches in Texas."

I am enclosing a few clippings from Elsie Ferguson's "The Marriage Price," which I am now running.

Yours very truly,
J. A. CHAVEY, Projectionist,
Crystal Theatre, I. A. Local 548.

New Leader for Ohio



THE illustration shows the new style Ohio Censorship leader. Because of having been the first to suggest the change from the old style to the one illustrated here the Photoplay Amusement Company of Columbus, Ohio, was awarded the first leader. Mr. Maurice Hague of the Ohio Censorship and Mr. Frank Meyer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation deserve much credit for working out this needed improvement.

Local 223 Holds First Grand Movie Ball

WHEN the leading evening newspaper gives two columns to the account of a ball it must have been considerable of an affair. And it was. Everybody fortunate enough to be there says it was.

Local 223 of Providence, R. I., was behind the event and that's saying enough. Whatever the Providence Local starts it finishes with gold plating.

This wonderful Movie Ball was held in the State Armory, Providence, on Thursday evening, Apirl 24. The proceeds were to be divided equally between the Fund for the Fatherless Children of France and the M. P. O. Sick Benefit Fund. While the notables of the city, state and motion picture world danced and otherwise amused themselves a band of 25 pieces furnished the finest kind of music

If you think it was just a local Local affair, listen! Through the efforts and magnetism of Picture Censor Police Sergeant Dick Gamble a host of M. P. stars were enticed to the Rhode Island city. Among those present were Olive Thomas, Eugene O'Brien, Montague Love, Madge Evans, Anita Loos and the Lee Twins. They proved such a drawing card that practically the whole city tried to force an entrance into the Armory.

The committee in charge of arrangements consisted of Samuel Taylor, chairman; William A. Sholes, James A. Foley, Edwin W. Anthony, Charles J. Duffy, Camille C. Turcotte, and the extraordinary success of the ball was due to the thoroughness with which they worked out the details.

Notes from Local 299

THROUGH the efforts of V. Armand, business agent of the Operators' Local No. 299, Winnipeg, Canada, and Perry Wishart, business agent of the Stage Employes' Local No. 63, Winnipeg, all theatrical people, including managers, treasurers, ushers, janitors, musicians, stage hands, and operators received compensation from the Provincial Government for the time that they lost owing to the ban being put on during the influenza epidemic.

Armand and Wishart, immediately got busy when the authorities contemplated putting the ban on and went to both the city and Provincial authorities and notified them that they would enter a claim for the amount of money lost by the theatrical people on account of the ban being put on. They also admitted to the authorities that they were aware that the theatrical people did not have a legal claim for compensation, but insisted that there was a moral claim against the authorities, and on their first visit did not request an answer, but left their claim pending until such time as they could learn the length of time the ban would be on and be able at its termination to present a complete claim for the full losses, which they did.

During the time that the ban was on, Armand and Wishart lost no time in marshalling all the forces that they could to help along the claim. They succeeded in getting the Winnipeg Trades and Labor Council to endorse the claim of the theatrical people, which helped considerable. They were instrumental in getting all managers of both legitimate and moving picture theatres, and exchange men, and representatives from the three theatrical unions to form a theatrical league for political purposes and the welfare of the whole theatrical business in this province. In the formation of this league it was proposed to protest against heavy taxations and also to have some of the present taxes removed, which was also accomplished. This league also endorsed the theatrical employes' claim and with their contra claims helped considerable. They were successful in having the Provincial seat tax removed which amounts to 20 cents per seat per year.

On the lifting of the ban, Armand and Wishart went to the government and presented their claim, taking with them representatives of the Trades and Labor Council of this city. They argued as well for unorganized employes, stating that if one were entitled to compensation that all were. The Government, after reviewing the whole case, decided to grant compensation to all employes, on the regular compensation basis as provided for by law, which is 55 per cent of the loss. This was accepted by the theatrical people, and at the present time all theatrical people in this province, who lost by the ban being put on have received some payment on their loss.

Palisade Film Laboratories Have Organization to Be Proud Of

THERE is something new under the sun of interest to the film trade, and that is the Palisade Film Laboratories, located at Palisade, N. J., just opposite the 129th street ferry, of which H. J. Streyckmans, the well-known technical expert, is the managing director.

To begin with, the laboratories occupy a three-story concrete and steel building on top of the Palisades, towering several hundred feet above New York and affording a view of the surrounding country for many miles. The air is clean and sweet, notwithstanding which fact it is run through filters as it enters the developing and drying rooms.

The workings of the laboratory move with the precision of clockwork, and the old bugaboo of darkness has been removed. In fact, there is no dark room in this laboratory, for, as explained by George C. Dobbs, who equipped the place, there is no necessity for darkness, as the lights used are of such a color that they do not affect the film.

The negative room and developing room—usually soggy and damp places—are well ventilated, and through the use of suction pumps the overflowing water is quickly carried away.

The perforating room has an expert in charge, who watches the costly machines as they noiselessly work away. Here again vacuum plays an important part, when a tube with strong suction draws every particle of perforation and minute dust away from the film.

In the printing room a special type of machine is used, having a curved aperture. The film is held against this aperture in a tight grip by wheels running on ball bearings, entirely eliminating a tension spring, which is apt to scratch the film.

The developing room consists of rows of tanks for developing the film, after which it is passed through a sort of revolving dumb waiter which transfers to the wash and tinting room. From thence it goes to the drying room, and is placed on huge drums. The temperature of this room is kept at an even temperature at all times, and the humidity is controlled by mechanical means.

In the assembling room stand a row of machines, which are manufactured by the Bell & Howell Co., on which the rolls of film are joined together with patches so tiny that they are hardly visible to the eye and can barely be felt with the fingers. This is a remarkable improvement on the hand patch, as it is claimed by some that 75 per cent. of the deterioration of film is due to bad patches, causing the film to tear when being projected.

In the projecting room Nicholas Power testing projectors are used, and all film is inspected on the screen before it leaves the factory.

What impresses one most, however, is the class of people at work in the Palisade Film Laboratories. They are bright-looking, clean and satisfied. The company prides itself on the fact that it pays the best wages and engages the highest class of help it is possible to get.

Membership of 306 Increases as Fee Goes Up

THE intended increase in initiation fee from $75 to $100 on June 5 is having the effect of adding materially to the membership of Local 306. During the week just passed twenty-five applications were received and it is to be expected that even this number will be exceeded as the "zero hour" draws near.

Applicants are examined as speedily as possible but it behooves those who wish to save twenty-five good dollars to send in their names at once to avoid the rush at the end of the month.

From Canada

LOCAL 360, Motion Picture Projectionists' Association of Edmonton, Alberta, wishes to announce that it has given the idea of paying dues three months in advance a thorough try-out and find it "Jake." The system as they have worked it out is as follows: A man is supposed to keep in advance three months with his dues from date and if he falls behind the present date with his dues he is automatically suspended. We figured that as the Local had to pass its per capita tax and all affiliation dues to Labor Councils, etc., three months in advance, that it was nothing but right that the individual members should also pay their share the same distance ahead.

C. S. Stuckey, Press Sec'ty, Local 360.

One Case Where Music Is More Important Than Picture

FOR the past two and a half years I have been writing on the subject of "Music and Pictures." What have I accomplished? Was I able to convince some of our exhibitors that music is as important as the picture itself? How many exhibitors have been converted during this time into men who are partly responsible for the fact that the motion picture theatre of today is considered the strongest competitor of the old established and legitimate stage production? How many exhibitors received a part of that big amount spent in the good old United States for legitimate orchestra and vocal concerts?

How many? I don't believe anybody can effectively answer these questions. I don't think anybody in the world can show or in any way procure reliable statistics or an itemized statement to definitely prove from a commercial standpoint what music is worth to the motion picture exhibitor. All I know is that a lot of guesswork has been done in this connection. It has been nothing but a variety of opinions created by men in the business who, I admit, have all been equally born, but have not been equally able to acquire education, experience, and that little essential in everyday life, "common sense."

How in heavens can I, bare of substantial proofs and statistics, convince the exhibitor that music is making just as much money for him as a good picture? I cannot do it. I know that and you know it, but I can prove through nothing else but plain logic and that little bit, so essential in everyday life, called "common sense," that music is not only as important as the picture itself, but the only thing of consequence that points the way to success and puts your theatre in a place of such distinction that people simply must patronize it.

This is quite a risky statement and some people may think I am crazy, or have fallen down from heaven and haven't yet awakened, but neither is the case, and here follows the proof of my statement. Suppose, Mr. Exhibitor, you show the finest picture in the world. Mike sees it. He likes it and he goes home satisfied, thinking that he received the greatest value for his money. He even gets enthusiastic and tells it to his wife, and the next day he attacks his neighbor, Joe. "Oh, Joe, what a wonderful picture I have seen!" "What's the name of it?" is the query. Remember, Mr. Exhibitor, Joe didn't ask "Where did you see it?" He asked: "What's the name of it?" and suppose Mike tells Joe the name of the picture. It is then Joe's prerogative to see it wherever and whenever he chooses to do so, but if Mike would have said: "What wonderful music I heard!" "Where?" would have been Joe's question, and the consequence would have been that the name of your theatre would have been the answer to this question.

Now, Mr. Exhibitor, what gives you the distinction in this case? Is it the picture or the music? Is it beyond your conception that music means the same thing to your theatre as brains to yourself, and that the picture is as removable as is money in your pockets? Can you be deprived of your mental capacity as you can of your money, and can your theatre be deprived of its musical atmosphere and artistic surroundings as it can of its picture? Again I am emphasizing that music is the one and only medium that establishes the name of your property "your theatre," as a distinctive locality of amusement, and that the picture is nothing but a salable commodity which is at the disposal of every nickel joint as well as your own.—M. Winkler.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles"—Waltz. A positive successor to "Till We Meet Again" (J. H. Remick & Co., 227 W. 45th St., New York.)

2—"When You Hold Me In Your Arms"—Waltz. A new waltz that is growing remarkably. One of those numbers on the style now so popular. By H. F. Klickman (McKinley Music Co., 145 W. 45th St., New York.)

3—"Limbo Land."' One step from the Comic Rhapsody "Tumble-In" By Audolf Friml. The most emphatic musical play hit of the season. (G. Schirmer, 3 E. 43d. St., New York.)

4—"Chinese Lullaby"—by Robert Hood Bowers. Featured by Fay Bainter in "East Is West." Successful from its first hearing, and gaining fresh laurels steadily because of its peculiar charm and sheer beauty, this ought to be played by every orchestra in the country. The orchestration is exceptionally good as it preserves all the character and color of the composition while getting the best possible effects from the ensemble. (G. Schirmer.)

5—"Bullets and Bayonets." Sousa's latest march. Never has John Philip Sousa's wonderful melodic gift and sense of the effective been better demonstrated than in this march. It is tremendously virile throughout. It is something of red blood and lustiness. Its "go" and movement make one's very being tingle with energy and that mysterious uplift of spirit that surges through all of us when we think of our victorious soldiers or when the flag goes by. (G. Schirmer.)

6—"Wild Honey." Lyric and music by Lee David. That fox trot melody you are hearing everywhere. (Gilbert & Friedland, 232 W. 46th St., New York.)

7—"Flirty Flirts"—By that very capable and well-known musician and composer, Sol P. Levy. A fascinating intermezzo rubato, most suitable for light society dramas, or garden or reception scenes. (Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Ave., New York.)

8—"Camelia" from the Boutonniere Suite by G. Tonning. No flower of the garden has been more written, sung, and told of than the Camelia. The composer's conception is a beautiful melodious ¾ Allegretto Moderato which either for the lone pianist or organist, or for any combination of musicians to symphonic orchestra will be particularly delightful, and the repetition therein only enhances its beautiful and inspired melody. (Belwin, Inc.)

9—"A Waltz Dream," by Strauss. From his famous Operetta. Ellis Brooks' arrangements complete with introduction and coda. (Belwin, Inc.)

10—"Caprice Viennois," by Fritz Kreisler. Arranged for orchestra by Edmund Tiersch. An artistic and very effective orchestra arrangement of this famous solo which in itself is one of the best liked and most interesting of the many Kreisler compositions. (Carl Fischer, Cooper Sq., New York.)

11—"Iris."—Rudolph Friml, composer of Sympathy, Katinka, Allah's Holiday, Adieu. Friml at his best. A second Narcissus. (Boston Music Co., 26 West St., Boston, Mass.).

Song, "A Fallen Idol," Honors Evelyn Nesbit

EXHIBITORS who show Evelyn Nesbit's forthcoming William Fox picture, "A Fallen Idol," will have good advertising material in a song which has just been written and dedicated to Miss Nesbit. The title of the song is "Fallen Idols," and it is now in course of publication by a well-known Broadway music house.

The music of "Fallen Idols" was written by Richard A. Whiting and the lyrics are by Alfred Bryan and John William Kellette. Mr. Kellette is assistant director with Kenean Buel, who directed Miss Nesbit in "A Fallen Idol."

Feist Publishes Talmadge Song

ANOTHER popular song dedicated to Norma Talmadge, Select Pictures star, has been published by the Leo Feist Company of New York. The name of the song is "Norma." The words are by Sidney D. Mitchell and the music is by Archie Gottler, who collaborated with Mr. Mitchell on the recent song successes, "America, I Love You," "I Hate to Lose You," and "Mammy's Chocolate Soldier."

An important point in the publication of this latest Norma Talmadge song is the co-operation between the Leo Feist Company and the exhibitors of Norma Talmadge pictures. Orchestrations of "Norma," and two lantern slides, one announcing Norma Talmadge in her forthcoming Select Picture, "The New Moon," and another showing the chorus of the song, will be distributed by the Feist Company to every Norma Talmadge exhibitor in the country.

In addition to this plan of co-operation, the Feist Company is having posters printed which will be pasted in the windows of every music house handling the song. The posters are in colors and bear a large portrait of Miss Talmadge, with appropriate wording announcing that she is a Select star, and that the song has been dedicated in her honor.

Unlike "The Heart of Wetona," the new song, "Norma," is not confined to one picture. "The Heart of Wetona" was also published by the Leo Feist Company and was inspired by Miss Talmadge's Select Picture of the same name. The new song, "Norma," is a movie fan's song. Both Sidney D. Mitchell and Archie Gottler are movie fans, and Norma Talmadge is their favorite star. Together they worked on the composition of the piece until it reached the height of perfection which they sought. It is a song of Norma, to Norma, and will be sung by every admirer of Norma Talmadge in the country. All of the first run theatres are planning to play "Norma" in conjunction with her forthcoming Select Picture, "The New Moon."

"The Man Who Turned White"

(Robertson-Cole—Produced by Jesse D. Hampton)

T has been sometime since H. B. Warner has graced the screen—a long enough time to make many of his romantic brothers of the histrionic world quite easily forgotten. But as his personality is enduring on the silversheet the fact that he has staged a "comeback" should regain him his old-time popularity. There are few actors better equipped than the star for the interpretation of colorfully romantic parts, and in "The Man Who Turned White" he will pick up his popularity where he left it a few short seasons ago.

His intelligence and personality are equal factors toward the success of this conventional picture. We think "conventional" is the right word, since he and others of the romantic school have been seen in this identical number time and again. The only difference is he has changed his British uniform for a French one in renouncing his race to take up the Oriental cause. He becomes an Arab instead of a Hindu, and until the girl and the call of his blood bring him back to his natural color, the costume and the stoicism of the "child of the desert" become him well.

The supporting cast that includes Barbara Castleton, Wedgewood Howell, Carmen Phillips, Jay Dwiggins and Eugenie Fords, is entirely adequate. Length 5 Reels. Distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual.—Laurence Reid.

Two British Pictures

(Obtainable Through Cosmofotofilm)

"THE Kiddies in the Ruins," a three-reel picture made by Welsh, Pearson and company, producers of "The Better 'Ole" and founded on a series of French cartoons, proves to be a subject full of heart interest and is splendidly acted by a cast that includes grownups as well as children. Nothing we have seen in a long while touches the heart so surely as does the scene between the Poilu and the Tommy when they meet and explain to each other by signs and expressions that each is a father. The acting of the two men is so true that the human quality of the situation is multiplied.

The action that concentrates on the play and sorrow of the children of the ruins gives a peculiar and interesting insight into the manner in which the youngsters have taken the war. However, the expression that the older players put into their roles touches the heart even before the kiddies themselves. The plot is a simple little thing and tells of a father who went to war and who returned to find his home in ruins and his wife, for the time, a prisoner of the enemy. While the director has brought out the heart interest with a deft touch and was ably assisted by the players the continuity of the offering is rather below our standard.

"God and the Man," a six-reel version of Robert Buchanan's book dealing with the initial steps of the Methodists in England and telling a story of rivalry and romance in which hate finally gives way to a broader understanding, is a costume picture and is quite overacted.—Peter Milne.

"Sally's Blighted Career"

(Christie Two-Reel Special)

THE producer of a Broadway musical revue usually acts on the principle that his out-of-town patrons (those males who night after night swell his box-office receipts) like to see pretty girls and much of them. Al Christie was evidently moved to produce "Sally's Blighted Career" because of his knowledge of this fact. The difference is that the patrons can stay in their own towns and witness Sally's activities, while they must pay railroad fare in addition to admission and war tax to see the other girls' blighted careers.

"Sally's Blighted Career" shows a musical show from the front of the house and from back stage—which is unusually interesting. It's only favored members of the Follies' patronage who can enter a dressing room. Christie takes you right in with his camera and doesn't bother you with the formality of an introduction. The show around which his plot skips is full of pretty femininity and shows a runway with the girls streaming out on it in typical Broadway style.

Certainly Al Christie's special is amusing, and certainly all local bald-headed rows should fidget in prescribed theatrical fashion on seeing the beauty chorus.—Peter Milne.

Three Educationals

(One Reel Each)

THE latest Educational pictures are headed by a Robert Bruce scenic entitled "The Pale Pack Train," which shows a number of scenes taken in the mountains of Oregon. As the title suggests, the camera has followed the winding trail of a pack train, consisting of four white horses, two men and two dogs, up the mountain side. The scenes are notable for the atmosphere of contentment and beauty that seems to surround them, even the titles and the tinting of the film going to contribute to this impression.

A most interesting reel is "A Day and a Night at Coney Island." All sort of glimpses of this famous resort near New York City should provide genuine entertainment for all picture audiences. Views of all the unusual concessions are included in the reel.

Silk Hat Harry is animated again, this time in "Rubbing It In." This shows Harry's experiences when he essays to enter a Turkish bath on ladies' day. He meets with a retainer a dozen times his size who certainly "rubs it in" to him. The cartoonist has permitted his imagination to run riot and, as he has a particularly humorous imagination, the results are exceedingly good.—Peter Milne.

HARRISON'S EXHIBITOR REVIEWS

"Taxi"—Triangle

IF you have played Taylor Holmes's last two pictures you ought to have a pretty good knowledge by this time of the kind of stuff he appears in; the general run of his stories is of the light, pleasing variety that appeal to patronages demanding clean amusement. While his pictures don't cause roars of laughter, they do something that is equally as good—they please inwardly, putting the spectator in a happy frame of mind.

Wills, and incomes, and the danger of losing them if such and such conditions are or are not complied with, is the idea that has inspired this story. The hero, in this instance, by accident befriends a chorus girl; but she turns out to be the missing heiress, whose income of $10,000 a year he is enjoying, because she could not be located. Being thus left penniless, he goes to work; but in doing so he complies with certain terms of his father's will, which brings him an income. In the end, he marries the girl. Released May 11. Length, 5 reels.

"Caleb Piper's Girl"—Pathe

ALTHOUGH there is nothing big about this picture, yet no one will say he didn't get his money's worth, because the story is just a little human document, appealing to the tender emotions.

The deep love the heroine feels for her father forms its basis: When her father unable is unable to meet the mortgage, she goes to work. She obtains a job as a moving picture actress, but loses out for lack of experience; just as she is leaving the studio, however, she bumps into a young actor, whom she once became acquainted with in her little town. This young man, upon learning the cause of her discharge, so pities her that he fixes it up with the manager on the quiet to take her back and pay her out of his own salary. In the end, strong love springs between them and they get married; they then return to her father and receive his blessings. Released May 18. Length, 5 reels.

"Oh You Women"—Emerson-Loos Production

YOU will actually be at a loss what to admire the most, the excellent entertaining qualities of the picture, or the brains that conceived and executed it. As far as the writer is concerned, the credit goes to the brains. You all undoubtedly know who Anita Loos and John Emerson are; for the benefit of those who might be newcomers into the ranks of the exhibitors, however, it may be stated that the former is the one who, through the ingenious construction of the subtitles in most of the pictures of the old Triangle days, featuring Douglas Fairbanks, assisted that star's inherent, unique screen qualities to come forward at breakneck speed; the latter, an experienced stage as well as screen actor, who, as a director of several Mary Pickford and other pictures, alone and in collaboration with Miss Loos, has given ample proofs of his directorial skill. This much for the brains.

Now for the picture, as an artistic production as well as an entertainment: Have you ever dreamt of a picture that would, from the first to the very last scene unfold itself with ease, without giving you a "kick in the ribs," that is, without containing such situations as would make you feel as having received such a sensation (a sensation present in the majority of the pictures released, that jars and jolts and shocks a blunt-nerved, shock-proof spectator); a picture in which the characters act and talk as regular human beings would; a picture which will not make you sit on the edge of your seat, nor hold you spellbound, but will put every particle of your body in harmony with your good senses, in harmony with the thought of the story and every situation of it; a picture that will make you laugh so heartily that it will make you hang your hands down and give up in despair any further efforts at laughing? Well, "Oh, You Women" is the one.

You have all heard, I presume, of the "Third Sex," product of this war. This picture is a satire on that sex, and on suffragism in general. Since the production of "When Women Vote," in the happy old single reel days, some twelve years ago, pictures ridiculing suffragism have been produced aplenty; but this one is the most intelligent of them all—it drives the point home more forcefully. The authors have used irony, sarcasm, persuasion, appeal to the common sense of women, all with delicacy and force.

If you have the production of better pictures at heart, make room for more days for this picture on your program; encourage this conscientious pair of producers, as by so doing, not only you further the better picture cause, but also you automatically help shut out some inferior ones. Released through Paramount. Length, 5 reels.

"The Unpainted Woman"—Universal Special

"THE Unpainted Woman" is another example of what a simple story can do, if, when constructing it, appeal to the best there is in human nature is the main object. There is nothing new or original in it; it is just a page from the human experiences; but the interest it excites is very strong, and the sympathy it awakens for the principal characters, most warm-hearted.

The story deal with the heroine, a servant girl to the wealthiest family of a small town, who is loved by the son, an emotional young man. He marries her in spite of the family's objections. The impetuosity of his love soon cools off, and he commences to neglect his wife. Turned down by every friend, except a saloon keeper, he abandons himself to drink. While in an intoxicated condition, he gets into a fight and is hit on the head with a bottle, expiring shortly afterwards.

The heroine, instead of giving up in despair, gets to work, grimly determined to make a place in this world for herself and her baby boy. She drudges and toils and dreams in her farm, until it makes it a paying proposition.

In the course of the story, she befriends a tramp, whom drink had caused to sink low. Touched by the kind treatment of the woman, who fed him and didn't ask him to work for it, the tramp remains on the farm and insists upon helping her. The influence of the heroine makes the tramp swear off drink for ever. Toward the end, love springs between them and they become united.

The scenes showing the hero rescuing the heroine and her boy from the barn, which was set on fire by the saloon-keeper, will thrill.

In point of entertainment, "The Unpainted Woman" compares favorably with the best ever contributed by Universal with Mary MacLaren in the lead. Released in May. Length, 6 reels

"The Best Man"—Hampton-Hodkinson

GOVERNMENT papers of great importance, stolen by a gang of crooks and recovered by the hero, who incidentally also gets the usual picture prize, is the theme of the story. There is nothing new about it, good, bad, and indifferent pictures having at innumerable times in the past been produced; in this instance, however, it beats the wildest dime novel that has ever seen the light. There are things done in it that could not have happened in real life. In comedy, they would have been the source of genuine merriment; but they are treated seriously in this instance. The actions of one of the characters, a member of the gang of crooks, in particular, stands out most prominently: Attired in full dress, he follows the hero all over, now running in the street after his automobile, now climbing the last car of the train, and in fact doing things that, in real life, would have landed him either in jail or in the insane asylum.

As wild as the story is, however, there is no doubt in my mind that it will appeal to a good number of picture goers, particularly to those who go to a picture theatre to spend an evening and forget their troubles, irrespective of the logic in a pictured story. It is only those who demand strict realism that may be disappointed. Another reason why not so many kicks may be heard is the fact that the picture is free from such situations as jar and jolt the feelings, leaving an unpleasant impression behind. Released May 4. Length, 5 reels.

"Fools' Gold"—Arrow Film

"FOOLS' Gold" has, figuratively speaking, all the characteristics of a horse that has run wild in a field; it starts out on one thing and then spreads in all directions. In fact, it may be rightly called the combination of several stories incoherently connected into one, actuated by a motive that is barely sympathetic, and wherein the characters are forced to show emotion where hardly any is needed.

The villainy of a man who cheated his partner, hero of the story, out of his sweetheart, the heroine, marrying her; the baseness of a woman who, by lies and misrepresentations, makes him believe the heroine, now a widow,—her husband having been beat to death in a saloon by some drunken brutes,—is his enemy, and by making him believe the heroine is against him, she lures him into marrying herself, thus destroying the happiness of two human beings about to be united; strikes and labor unrest;—all these happenings and many more have been thrown together to form a plot—the basis of this feature. Non-critical audiences may take in such a wild melodrama and enjoy it, but it is rather hard to ask of other picture goers to swallow such a conglomeration. Length, 6 reels.

HARRISON'S EXHIBITOR REVIEWS

"Mary Regan"—First National

IN considering this picture for your booking, you will be compelled to invoke the assistance of several factors: First of all, the popularity of the star, which is undeniably of first rate; secondly, the drawing possibilities of the picture, which are also very promising; and thirdly, the picture's artistic treatment—Miss Lois Weber has directed the picture.

As far as the story itself is concerned, although interesting and entertaining enough, the fact that it is not the best she ever had can hardly be denied. Its suspense is of mild tensity, there hardly being in the story a motive strong enough, or important enough, to create tense suspense; on the other hand, the construction of some of the subtitles is such as to hurt the suspense by giving away the action in advance.

The story is of the clean crook sort, in which the heroine is introduced as the daughter of a crook father; but she is straight. She loves a young detective and is loved by him, but she will not marry him in spite of his pleadings, being unwilling to allow the man she loves to marry a woman, the daughter of such a father as hers was. A gang of crooks, who are acquainted with her past, is trying to coerce her into assisting them in their scheme of robbing a wealthy young man, but she will not submit. In order to shut out all possibility of the detective's inducing her to become his wife, she marries the young wealthy man. In the course of the story, the detective asks her assistance in rounding up the gang of crooks. In the rounding up, however, her husband is killed. Being unable now to deny the pleadings of the man she loves, she consents at last to become his wife. Length, — reels.

"The Master Man"—Pathe

WITH crooked politics and crooked politicians as the material on hand, the author has written a story that fits the personality of Mr. Keenan particularly well, giving a vivid as well as realistic expression to his irresistible will. He is presented as the Master Man, to whose beckoning men, proud and strong, respond as mere puppets; whose will governors and other influential politicians obey as mere weaklings; who has it in his power to crush any one that dares oppose him.

The story is melodramatic. Several of the situations do not conform strictly with logic, the picture, nevertheless, is entertaining just the same, chiefly because of the good acting, as well as the skillfull continuity, the credit for which being due to Mr. Jack Cunninham. The exhibitor, in his eager desire for better pictures, has entirely overlooked the continuity writer. The success of a picture lies chiefly with him. Most of the stories are submitted in script form; it is this crude material which a continuity writer must whip into shape. It is his skillfulness that can make a first class screen story out of a script, sometimes a very poor one; it is also to the inexpertness of a continuity writter that many a bad picture, based on an otherwise good plot, is due. So, in giving Mr. Cunninham a great deal of the credit for the success of this picture, one is doing nothing but justice. Released May 25. Length, 5 reels.

"Home Breaker"—Paramount

MISS Dalton is presented this time as a saleslady; she is so successful in her work, and so congenial in her manners, that she is regarded by her employer as one of the family. She is in love with the son, a young man who cares more for pleasure than for work. While she is away on a trip, he falls in the hands of two swindlers, a man and his wife, posing as Russian nobles. She is introduced to them upon her return, and recognizing the crook in them, she sets about to counteract their plans. In order to disillusion the young man and make him forget the Russian woman who has charmed him, conceives a plan whereby she hopes to arouse his jealousy. She introduces the old man to act young, and pretend he is in love with herself. The plan works, and eventually the young man is brought to his senses. In the end, the bogus nobles are arrested, having been caught with some loot; the heroine then gets the hero.

While there is nothing big about the picture, yet it will entertain, just because the story is human, and because it has been handled with intelligence. The impression it creates is as if one had before him a successful story teller relating an interesting story, full of ginger. There are numerous clean and wholesome comedy situations in it that will draw hearty laughs. Released April 20. Length, 5 reels.

"The Red Lantern"—Nazimova Productions

THE story, which is entirely different than the usual run, combined with its numerous other merits, should, as a drawing card, surpass all of Nazimova's previous contributions.

The story takes the spectator back to the Boxer uprising days, when they seized Pekin, in an attempt to drive all foreigners away from China. Mme. Nazimova assumes a double role; she represents two half-breed sisters, the children of a white father and a Chinese mother. The one is raised as a Chinese girl, while the other, as a white. The Chinese girl, heroine of the story, falls in love with a white young man, but is made to understand by his mother that the barrier is inseparable. The objections raised by the mother deeply wound her feelings, the pain being augmented by the knowledge she is part white. Embittered against the white race, she joins the Boxer movement. In order to enlist a large following, she impersonates a goddess, supposedly having come down from heaven to assure them that she approves the movement. The uprising takes place, but fails, due to the timely arrival of European troops. The failure of the movement, as well as her inability to induce her father, who is in Pekin at the time, to acknowledge her, leaves no other alternative but death; so she dies at the feet of her father and her lover, who were summoned to the palace at the last moment, by drinking poison.

The theme is tragic, but not such as to leave depression. There are numerous situations in it that are highly dramatic. On the whole, it holds the interest tense in spite of its length of seven reels.

"Some Liar"—American

"SOME Liar" should satisfy a good number of picture goers, although, as compared with several of Mr. Russel's late contributions, it falls somewhat below their standard in entertaining values. The one attractive feature about it, however, is the fact that it is so different than the everyday run of pictures; also that it is clean and can be shown to any audience.

What stands out the most in the picture is, not the story, but the hero; almost all the interest is centered on him. He is presented as a man who can spin yarns by the mile. As a salesman of coffins and cradles, a queer combination, he cannot be excelled. With some miniature samples in his travelling case, he drops into a small Western town, and after explaining the utility of his ware, he receives several orders. In the course of the story, he finds hmiself in a position where he has to become a hero. Once, he beats the bully of the region, thus saving the girl, heroine of the story, from molestation. Again, he beats another villian, recovering from him some valuable letters, written to him by the heroine's mother, and which he was using in coercing her to give him her daughter as his wife. In the end, the hero and the heroine are united, but not until he has promised never to lie again.

There are several situations in the picture that will cause good laughs; the action of plot, on the other hand, becomes pretty rapid after the first two reels. There are also some good thrills in it. Released through Pathe May 18. Length, 5 reels.

"The Amateur Adventuress"—Metro

"THE Amateur Adventuress" is an offering above the average. There is enough originality in the story, and enough comedy situations in the picture, to satisfy any taste, however exacting. The types selected for the parts are highly successful; some of them are so comical, and they fit their part so well, that they cause an outburst of laughter whenever they appear on the screen. Victor Potel, the famous Slippery Slim of the single reel days, is one of them.

The heroine works as stenographer for a women's welfare society, the head of which is a hypocritical old man, a regular fox. She is engaged to marry a young man, so cheap that, whenever he invites her out, will not spend more than thirty-five cents for a dinner. The sight of the fine dresses other women wear, and the good dinners they enjoy in company of other men, make her revolt. She denounces her fiance, and, going back to work, forges the name of her employer to a letter, thus obtaining gorgeous dresses from a milliner. Dressed in such fine wear, she goes to a cafe in search of adventure. It is while in her first adventure that she is engaged by a stranger to "vamp" the young man who is charmed by the delicatessen girl. The scheme succeeds, but she falls a victim to the love of the stranger, who is the young man's uncle, marrying him in the end.

The picture is clean and fit for any audience. Released May 5 Length, 5 reels.

"THE THIRD DEGREE"—VITAGRAPH

Alice Joyce Stars in Fine Screen Version of Stage Success

MARK up another golden star opposite Alice Joyce's name. As the heroine in the screen version of Charles Klein's famous play, "The Third Degree," the Vitagraph star has probably scored her greatest triumph. And this is said when one takes into consideration her remarkable performance as Shirley Rossmore in the adaptation of the dramatist's other play, "The Lion and the Mouse."

Her charming girlishness, her force, and individuality, have never been given better expression than in the character of the waitress-wife whose love and faith in her husband saved him from the electric chair. She never wavered when events loomed up woefully black and her courage and devotion shaped things to an effective and satisfactory conclusion.

Most theatregoers are familiar with the play so there is no reason to dwell upon the dramatic structure nor the vital message it carried as expressed in simple faith and humanity. But space must be utilized in stating that Vitagraph has never turned in a better production—not even including "A Million Bid." The big smashing situations and climaxes have been faithfully visualized, and though the picture is seven reels in length this fact is never noticed so compact is the action.

Tom Terriss has done an excellent work in his picturization which is noticeable in the progressive development of the plot and the keen dramatic values that are realized. And it is staged with artistic detail. The supporting players are so thoroughly in their characters that they contributed largely in giving tone and quality to the play.—Length, 7 reels.—Released May 19.—Laurence Reid.

Directed by Tom Terriss.

PRESS NOTICE

Alice Joyce, the charming and talented Vitagraph actress, will come to the ——— theatre next in her latest picture, "The Third Degree." This is an adaptation of the play of the same name by Charles Klein and is considered one of the most absorbing and, therefore, entertaining pictures in which the star has ever appeared. Under the direction of Tom Terriss the feature has been given an elaborate production and one calculated to rouse the highest praise. All the faithful points of the original play have been carefully preserved and brought forward so that it retains its dramatic highlights. Miss Joyce contributes a noteworthy performance that is marked for its sincerity and charm. An excellent cast support her, that includes such capable artists as Gladden James, Anders Randolf, Mrs. DeWolf Hopper, George Backus, and L. Rogers Lytton.

The play lends itself remarkably well to picturization, as it embodies a wealth of action, suspense, human interest, and romance. These elements are admirably woven together, and through them the star shines radiantly.

As the working girl-wife of a young millonaire, she has occasion to express the highest form of histrionism. Her husband is disinherited for marrying beneath his station, and when he is wrongly accused of murder and given the third degree until he confesses to the crime, it is she who stands by him through thick and thin and shows such courage and devotion that he eventually gains his liberty.

THE STORY

It was during Howard Jeffries term in college that he became enamored with Annie Sands, a waitress in a local restaurant, and marries her. Happy in their love the young people returned home where they were greeted with haughty reserve by Jeffries, Sr., and his new bride, who, incidentally had carried on a violent love affair with Howard's unscrupulous college chum, Robert Underwood. The father utterly repudiated Annie because of her low station and when her young husband stood by her he was promptly disinherited. And the bridal couple took up quarters elsewhere.

Underwood, in financial straits, found an opportunity to write Mrs. Jeffries, Sr., for money and threatened suicide unless it was forthcoming. Terrorized, and fearing a scandal, she visited his apartment and refused to offer him any aid. In the apartment at the same time, in an intoxicated condition was Howard who sought to recover some of his debt. Being asleep at the time he didn't know that Underwood had killed himself. But he was arrested for acting strangely by the police. The "third degree" methods were tried upon him and the grueling tactics became successful after hours of exhaustion. And so he confessed.

His father refused him any aid, but Annie after several attempts enlisted the services of the family lawyer. Howard's case looked hopeless, however, until Mrs. Jeffries, Sr., conscience-stricken, offered up the fatal letter which showed that Underwood intended to take his life. All the evidence was in except the identity of the woman who visited the apartment on the eventful night. So Annie blackened her own name to spare the guilty woman any misery. In the end her nobility was appreciated. Thus she found happiness not only with her husband but with his father.

CATCH LINES

Charles Klein's greatest play, "The Third Degree," has been made into a wonderful picture with Alice Joyce as the star. Come to the ——— theatre ——— week and see a rare achievement.

How would you like to be arrested for a crime you didn't commit and given the "third degree" until you dropped from exhaustion and declared yourself guilty to stop the punishment? That is the experience that the hero underwent in "The Third Degree." You will see an absorbing play when it comes to the ——— theatre.

No matter if her husband appeared guilty she KNEW he was innocent. And she worked to save him. Did she succeed? See "The Third Degree," an adaptation of Charles Klein's great play.

She sacrificed her good name that another woman might be spared. She did this after she had left no stone unturned in freeing her husband from a charge of murder. A noble character? Indeed. See Alice Joyce in her latest and greatest role.

PROGRAM READER

The management takes great pleasure in announcing that Alice Joyce will appear at the ——— theatre in the near future in what is considered to be her greatest picture, "The Third Degree." As most of our patrons know, the subject is an adaptation of Charles Klein's great play that had such a successful run in New York and throughout the country. And as a picture it is every bit as praiseworthy as when it appeared here as a spoken drama. Many of you know the idea of the play that it exposes the cruel methods of a vicious police system known as "the third degree." It was through the agitation of this drama that these methods have largely become obsolete at the present time.

Miss Joyce appears as the waitress-wife of a young millionaire whom she marries while he is in college. The union isn't looked upon favorably by her father-in-law with the result that her husband is disinherited. When the young man goes to collect a debt from his chum the latter kills himself. His death is so mysterious that the husband is arrested upon a charge of murder. How he vindicates himself through the faith of his wife, and how she goes to any length to save another woman's honor, are the connecting climaxes of a powerfully absorbing photoplay. Miss Joyce is surrounded by such well-known players as Gladden James, George Backus, Anders Randolf and Mrs. DeWolf Hopper. Tom Terriss directed the picture.

SUGGESTIONS

There is nothing insignificant about this picture which leads us to suggest that you feature it as a special with all the advertising it will carry. It is not going too far to state that

"THE SIREN'S SONG"—FOX

Theda Bara in a Story of Love and Intolerance; Fairly Convincing

IT seems odd to see Theda Bara in one of these old-fashioned pictures of parental intolerance where the heroine bursts the bonds of her environment, goes out into the world seeking expression, and after a proper lapse of time comes back to be misunderstood as before. The star has usually had subjects that were based upon unconventional plots and characterizations and if they were generally far from being plausible, at least they were not conceived for this purpose.

But "The Siren's Song" contains a moss-covered story that is far removed from truth, although the spectator must accept it as real because Miss Bara does not appear in one of her customary daring roles. Instead she is just another lighthouse keeper's daughter, who tolerates her father's bigoted outlook until the thought occurs to her that there are other people in the world who will accept her with a spirit of humanity.

The details, which show this Bretno fisher maid happy in the outside world, and her return to her former domicile, where she experiences her father's intolerance and a love-sick dominie's hypocrisy, are over-elaborated so that a semblance of life is not realized.

Had the story and characterization been treated more intelligently, the picture would have sounded a human note. Yet despite the theatricalities, the offering will undoubtedly please, since it brings into play a deal of action and love interest.

Miss Bara gives her usual good performance and makes the heroine quite sincere. The character of the dominie is so overdrawn that L. C. Shumway could do nothing with it. The others fitted. J. Gordon Edwards directed.—Length, 5 reels.—Released May 4.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

The latest Fox picture starring Theda Bara and entitled "The Siren's Song" will be the feature attraction on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. It presents a story based upon intolerance and bigotry, sacrifice and love, which, of course, make it an ideal vehicle for the expression of the star's emotional endowments. The central character is a Breton fishermaid, who is blessed with a beautiful voice, but who is condemned by her puritanical father because of her ability to charm the villagers with her gift for song. He also upbraids her for attempting to find happiness in the sheer joy of living instead of taking life seriously. His tyrannical attitude causes her to attempt suicide though she little knew at the time that it would result in giving her fame and fortune. Marie, as she is known, is fortunately rescued from a watery grave by a vocal teacher and it is through him that she is able to reach the heights.

And so the maid of Brittany becomes the siren of Paris through the charm of her voice. She also becomes the sweetheart of Gaspard, a wealthy manufacturer, who gives her the love that has been denied her in the Breton village. A former suitor, who professes to be a minister, but who might be called a wolf in sheep's clothing, entreats her to return home to sing for the departing soldiers. Marie doesn't know that his real motive is one of lustful passion until he reveals himself a true hypocrite. So she consents to go back. Her reception there, the retribution that is heaped upon her, the painful realization of her father's intolerant attitude, the sorrowful blow that comes when she discovers her voice is gone, the spirit of self-sacrifice she expresses in giving up her lover, and the final happiness that is hers when he returns—these are events that conclude the chapters of a powerfully dramatic photoplay. Miss Bara is admirably fitted by temperament and experience to play the stellar role. She is excellently supported.

THE STORY

Jules Bernais, the lighthouse keeper of a little Breton village, does not look kindly upon his daughter's joy of living and the fact that she possesses a beautiful voice. His puritanical manner was responsible in driving the girl's mother from home and he frowned upon Marie because she didn't take after him. He accuses her of being a temptress when she doesn't respond to the advance of Raoul Dieppe, a young minister, and the latter gives her up when his parents reprove him for loving beneath his station. Stunned by his action, Marie plunges into the sea but is rescued by Hector Remey, who was formerly a noted tenor, but who is now ekeing out a living in conducting a Punch and Judy show. He happens to be in the village because of the carnival season.

Appreciating the marvelous voice of Marie, Remey takes her to Paris where he is successful after a few years in making her a famous singer. Her happiness is made complete when Gaspard Prevost, a wealthy Parisian, comes into her life and offers a genuine love. But a shadow from the past looms up on a certain day in the shape of the minister who is shocked to learn of Marie's love affair and tries to persuade her to return to her old home. She agrees to go back to sing for the departing soldiers.

The intervening years haven't softened her father, who, when he learns of her liaison, prays for a curse to descend upon her. The shock kills him, and Marie, saddened by his death, enters into a state of spiritual exaltation. Raoul takes such an interest in her moral salvation that she gives up Gaspard. But events happen which show that the minister's solicitation is false, that because he coveted her is the reason he wanted the lover out of the way. So she denounces him and having sacrificed her voice for the soldiers, the girl abides her time until Gaspard, unable to forget his love, returns and makes her his wife.

PROGRAM READER

A story of a Breton fishermaid whose soul is tortured by the bigotry and intolerance that form the bonds of her environment, but who finds happiness in love and sacrifice and the gift of a beautiful voice, is presented in "The Siren's Song," a Fox feature shortly to be seen at the ——— theatre. Written by Charles Kenyon, one of the most prolific screen writers of the day, directed by Gordon Edwards, and starring Theda Bara, the picture promises to be one of the most powerful that the management has had the pleasure of presenting in some time. Our patrons know the dramatic and pictorial values that are so splendidly emphasized in the star's productions, and "The Siren's Song" is marked by the same high quality of theme and scenic investiture. Miss Bara does not humanize one of the famous heroines of history, nor does she appear in her familiar role of a vampire. So by playing a different kind of a part she will show you how capably she is endowed with emotional talent. "The Siren's Song" contains the necessary dramatic elements that excite attention and arouse suspense, and its theme is powerful enough to set one thinking. It is a strong picture and an appealing one.

"THE UNPARDONABLE SIN"-GARSON-NEILAN

Particularly Fine Combination of Talent Produces Wonderful Results

THE most enthusiastic reports of the popular appeal contained in "The Unpardonable Sin" were realized in fact before the picture had run its full length at the Broadway theatre, New York, on its opening night. While a list of incidents includes rape, wholesale murder and minor atrocities, things that are supposed to be in the discard these days, they are treated with such sure dramatic skill and contrasted with such effective comedy scenes, that the whole picture looms as a real epic of drama, the fundamentals of which are brute passions and unprotected innocence.

Major Rupert Hughes, of course, knows how to treat a story. So does Marshall Neilan. Here he has caught the Hughes' touch of narrating a drama with an ever dominant element of suspense, nor has that sense of comedy which he demonstrated to such fine advantage in his Mary Pickford pictures deserted him. It is this comedy that balances the picture so excellently and which furnishes invaluable relief.

Blanche Sweet returns to the screen in the dual role of the sisters, Dimny and Alice Parcot, and plays both parts wonderfully well. She brings out the bitter sadness and eager intensity of the former and the utterly hopeless attitude of the latter with a differentiation that is almost marvelous. Mr. Neilan has lighted her exquisitely.

The whole production as far as artistry and lighting go is in Mr. Neilan's typical and nearly unapproachable style. And the way he has brought out the suspense in the various episodes is still another tribute to his skill. Realism permeates every scene, whether of ruins, interiors or countryside.

Matt Moore makes much of the hero's role, playing with a sincerity that never loses its hold on the spectactor. Wallace Beery's German officer is an excellent study, and Wesley Barry's boy character, the center of the comedy, is a delightful piece of work. Mary Alden, as the mother, gives another highly creditable performance.

"The Unpardonable Sin" is the result of a particularly fine combination of talent. As a box office attraction it should lead them all for many weeks to come.—Length, 8 reels.—Peter Milne.

THE STORY

As Noll Windsor returns to his home preparatory to leaving to serve under Hoover on the Belgian Relief Commission, he finds Dimny Parcot, a beautiful girl, in a faint on the corner. He carries her to his house, and for days she remains unconscious. By a letter Noll discovers the shock that caused her coma. Traveling in Belgium, her mother and her sister Alice had been caught in the German onrush, and though they had taken refuge in a convent, the beasts had attacked them and ravished them both. Windsor eventually brings Dimney to consciousness, and she expresses her desire to go abroad and seek out her people. In Washington she is refused a passport because she is unmarried—and that is why she consents to go through the marriage ceremony with Windsor.

In Belgium, in the territory occupied by the Germans, Dimny and Windsor search for Alice and Mrs. Parcot. Often is Dimny subjected to the grossest mistreatment on the part of the Germans; once a big brute strips her in search of papers. But they are unable to protest. Colonel Klemm, he who ravaged Alice, sees Dimny and believes she is the same girl. When at last Windsor locates Alice and Mrs. Parcot, Dimny arrives too late to speak to her sister, as she is again brutally attacked and dies soon after. Windsor and Dimny takes Mrs. Parcot in charge, together with the little refugees who cared for her throughout her wanderings, and Windsor attempts to get return passports. But he finds that some power prevents him. Little does he know that it is Colonel Klemm who has issued the order. The Colonel promises Dimny passports for the party if she will but meet him at the intelligence office. Here he attacks her after giving her the papers.

But Windsor has followed, and through what seem to be God-sent circumstances, he rescues Dimny and drives like mad with her and the others to the Holland border. The Germans pursue, but are made captive by the Dutch soldiers and interned. So in America Dimny and Windsor begin a new life of mutual love and understanding rising out of and obscuring the horrors of the past.

PROGRAM READER

There are little sins that we all but smile at. There are those that we frown upon. There are those that are readily forgiven if the sinner but express his repentance. There are those that may be condoned only after penance of the severest sort. And there is the UNPARDONABLE SIN! A sin that the world cannot possibly forgive—that even God cannot forget! It is the most despicable sin of all. Alice Parcot and her mother were victims of this unpardonable sin. They had done nothing wrong, nothing to offend, and yet one day the skies to them became heavy with clouds, clouds that would never roll away. To Dimny Parcot, the sister, and to Noll Windsor this sin loomed as something unimaginable, something utterly without the pale of human circumstance.. They could not believe. But they went and they saw! What! Something that made their blood run cold, their hearts turn to ice, their eyes stare——

In "The Unpardonable Sin," the special production adapted from Rupert Hughes' novel and produced under the direction of Marshall Neilan, this that they discovered is shown to you.. "The Unpardonable Sin" marks Blanche Sweet's return to the screen in a dual role and a cast including Matt Moore, Wallace Beery, Wesley Barry, Mary Alden, Edwin Stevens and Bull Montana support her. It is a dramatic and tremendous production.

PRESS NOTICE

Manager ——— of the ——— theatre announces Harry Garson's "The Unpardonable Sin" as his attraction for all ——— week. This announcement will be received with great interest by those who are familiar with events in the picture world, for "The Unpardonable Sin" has already scored a tremendous success in Detroit, New York and Chicago, as well as other big cities throughout the country. It is adapted from the well-known novel by Major Rupert Hughes, and was produced under the personal direction of Marshall Neilan, without doubt one of the real artists of the day. Picture-goers of this city will recollect his work on a number of delightful Mary Pickford pictures.

"The Unpardonable Sin" is a story of Belgium in the days before the United States entered the World War. Manager ——— realizes that the conventional war picture is shunned sometimes during these days, but feels that time and conditions can never alter in effect or decrease the power of such a picture as "The Unpardonable Sin." It presents a drama of the utmost strength, in which the principals are neutral Americans, grossly mistreated by the invaders of Belgium. Major Hughes' plot and his powerful treatment of it have been brought to the screen with the utmost fidelity by Director Neilan, with the result that the picture has been acclaimed little short of a masterpiece wherever it has been shown heretofore.

The picture is notable in that it marks Blanche Sweet's return to the screen. She does some of the best acting of her whole career in the dual role of Dimny and Alice Parcot. An excellent supporting cast, including Matt Moore, Wallace Beery, Wesley Barry, Mary Alden, Edwin Stevens, Bull Montana and Bobby Connolly assists Miss Sweet. The picture contains a parallel thread of genuine comedy to balance its highly dramatic plot.

SUGGESTIONS

Of course, you will go out of the way to present such an extraordinary picture in an extraordinary manner. It has been our endeavor throughout this plan book to suggest in what directions your advertising lines shall run rather than to lay out the lines themselves. This latter is a task that the individual exhibitor can handle better to his own advantage. The direction of the lines is something very important, however. In the catch lines you will find the first a good one to precede your big type title, the second a suitable one to follow the title.. The third contrives to bring out the power and force of the picture, despite the fact that it is a war picture. This is based on the seemingly general assumption that war pictures aren't wanted these days. But if you can tell them you have something extra fine, and tell it impressively, they will come. Any exhibitor who has followed the reports of the business done on this feature knows that.

The Program Reader is an elaboration of the first catch line, and will stimulate interest in the production by reason of what it does not tell, and the Press Notice has been worded in a style to lend weight to the announcement.

"THE UNPAINTED WOMAN"—UNIVERSAL

Faithful Study of Rural Life That Is Rich in Characterization

NO picture in a long time has carried a more faithful reproduction of country life in its plot, characterization, and scenic investiture as Mary MacLaren's new offering, "The Unpainted Woman." The quaint rusticity of the scenes and settings, and the unexaggerated drawing of the rural characters, spell keen observation on the sponsors' part in making the picture reasonably true to the life it depicts.

There are loopholes present, however, in the dramatic cloth that do not harmonize with the idea. For instance, the spectator is led to believe that he is in for a quaint comedy sketch which naturally would have been more adaptable to the characterization, since it is humorously conceived. But after an introductory chapter, the story takes a melodramatic turn that is so entirely commonplace that the picture loses some of its charming atmosphere and quaint characterization. Yet it is interesting withal. Made so of course by its simplicity of plot, its emphatic notes of pathos and sympathy, and excellent interpretation.

The theme presents the struggles of a Swedish servant girl in her search for love and happiness. And before she emerges triumphant in the end, a lot of human interest and heart appeal have been conveyed to the spectator. A belated thrill tacked on to the arbitrary finish sends out a bit of suspense. Mary MacLaren makes the heroine real, and the other players give lifelike performances. The picture was reviewed at length on page 3089 of last week's issue.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

"The Unpainted Woman" is the feature that holds the place of honor on the ——— theatre's program for ——— of ——— week. This is a new Universal offering with the talented Mary Maclaren as the star and, in its quaint story by Sinclair Lewis, it reveals a glimpse of rural life that is made enjoyable because of its real characterization. It is seldom that this type of story is measured with such a human note because the policy has usually been to exaggerate. The author here has fashioned his tale with a keen insight into human nature, particularly, as it is found in the open country. And his skill merits the highest praise. Miss Maclaren has the role of a hired girl who is made fun of for her gawkiness although this defect does not prevent the village boob from marrying her. Her happiness is cut short when the husband takes to liquor, and when he is killed in a drunken brawl, she is placed in difficult straits. The heroine buys a farm with her savings and a hobo happens along and works it for her.

She is so magnanimous toward him that he will accept no pay. And as the months roll on he gradually regains his self-respect enough to offer his love. Of course a few obstacles are placed before her. Her late husband's chum attempts to discredit the tramp and make him out as responsible for setting her barn on fire. The latter is about to be lynched when the heroine hoves into sight and effects his rescue. Thus the romance develops into marital happiness. The scenes and situations are cleverly worked out and contain a deal of action and suspense as well as quaint comedy highlights. The picture is rich in atmosphere. Space does not permit the telling of the salient points of the story, but suffice to say that it contains enough incident to excite attention.

THE STORY

In Mullinsdale, a rural community in the Middle West, lives Gudrun Trygavson, who works as a hired girl for Mrs. Hawes. Though the girl is quite prepossessing in appearance her actions are so gawky that she is the laughing stock of the villagers with one exception. Charley Holt loves her. And though his socially ambitious mother attempts to discourage him and his friends hold Gudrun up to ridicule, nevertheless he makes her his wife and settles down to provide her a living. Her happiness is of short duration, however, because of Holt's unquenchable thirst, and he neglects her company and that of his little boy to engage in drinking contests with Heine Lorber, the proprietor of the town livery stable. In a drunken brawl Holt is mortally injured and after his death Gudron takes what little savings she has and invests it in a neighboring farm.

There she prospers. The sorrow in her life is completely effaced when Martin O'Neill, a hobo, who she has rescued from the depths of starvation and despair, offers her the love and respect that should have been given her by the lately deceased Holt. Martin it is, who has put the farm on a paying basis. He works hard, asking no financial reward but only his room and board. When he has regained his self-respect he offers to marry her and Gudrun accepts.

Had it not been for the despicable conduct of Lorber in setting her barn on fire, the young widow might never have known the true character of her new husband. The villain had attempted to discredit Martin in her estimation by declaring he started the fire. But virtue has its own reward. Thus Gudrun found love and happiness with the regenerated tramp.

PROGRAM READER

Mary Maclaren, who has appeared upon the screen of the ——— theatre in some of the most unusual pictures, will return shortly in her latest Universal offering, entitled "The Unpainted Woman." The story was written by Sinclair Lewis and produced by Tod Browning and it offers the star a wonderful opportunity to display her emotional talent. She assumes the role of a servant girl who is ridiculed by the natives of her community although one of them has the courage to marry her. Her happy courtship is turned into misery when her husband embraces liquor. After his death she finds happiness through the love of a "knight of the open road." Just a simple tale of love and sorrow—sorrow and love—punctuated with human characterizations, quaint comedy touches and rural backgrounds. It carries a wealth of action and detail and the management feels sure that its patrons will be highly entertained.

The author has developed his material splendidly and it has been handled with the utmost skill by Director Browning. The scenes reveal charming rusticity through their faithfulness to country life and against such a background the plot takes on a value that makes it more than just a medium to express a story. Miss Maclaren is given excellent support by Thurston Hall, David Butler, Laura Lavarne, Fritzie Ridgway, Willard Louis and Carl Stockdale. They are all rural characters to the life.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have played the Universal pictures which starred Mary Maclaren and found them successful you should have no trouble in cleaning up with her latest issue. We would advise that you emphasize it as a quaint comedy-drama of rural folks—the kind of story that has made "Way Down East" so enduring upon the stage. It has considerable pathos and sympathy and the characters are human and recognizably real. Bring out how a poor servant girl comes into love and happiness after the drab clouds in her life are swept aside. She is richly contrasted with the other characters, though all of them are quaint. Some effective word arguments can be used on this theme and also its picturesque backgrounds. Display the star and the scenes from the picture, bringing out the fact that she appears in a quaint character role. This subject will not raise ridicule for its rural spirit. It is true to life and the community it represents. Dwell on this point. The title is a striking one and it might be used in bringing out the character of the heroine. The climax carries a thrill in a fire scene that might be effectively used. In all, the picture contains plenty of angles for exploitation.

Mary MacLaren just couldn't help loving this little one in her latest Universal offering, "The Unpainted Woman"

"THE HOME BREAKER"—PARAMOUNT

A Highly Satisfying Comedy-Drama Starring Dorothy Dalton

DOROTHY DALTON should feel as highly satisfied with her latest screen expression as her following will feel contented after they have witnessed her in "The Homebreaker." That she has qualified as a comedienne has long since been proven, and Paramount with true appreciation and a good sense of showmanship, has given her a subject which brings her gift for comedy into full play.

It is a delightful offering, this one that presents the star as a traveling saleswoman, and as you may guess, the characterization is embroidered in the plot for all that it stands for in the world of realities. The story is human and bright and truly representative of its personages, and if it is developed along extravagant lines, this is because the comedy values demand it. The idea of a traveling saleswoman who gives up the road to teach the junior member of her firm how to conduct himself in matters of love and deportment seems like something new in the film scheme of things. And it is treated with humorous and serious consideration. A melodramatic note is introduced to give it substance and though it is arbitrary it serves its purpose.

The picture carries plenty of color in its backgrounds. A yacht figures in the scheme for the purpose of showing the star attired in overalls. She makes a pleasant picture at the wheel. Edwin Stevens has a big part and makes it stand out conspicuously, while Douglas MacLean attends to the character of the hero.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 20.—Laurence Reid.

CATCH LINES

You all have met traveling salesmen. You know what genial, what hail-fellows-well-met they are and how chock full of personality. Well, this can be applied to the female of the species. Mary Marbury is a lady drummer and she is genial and resourceful and possesses a charming personality. Come to the ——— theatre and make her acquaintance in "The Homebreaker."

In which a resourceful girl breaks up a home to teach a young man a lesson and this accouplished she builds it up again.

She was able to convince buyers with her color and chatter, but she had a tough time in convincing a certain young man who was the idol of her heart. Not until she nearly broke up his home did he value her love and friendship.

PRESS NOTICE

Dorothy Dalton's latest Ince-Paramount photoplay, "The Homebreaker," will come to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is from a story by John Lynch, an experienced screen writer, and affords the star a most attractive part—one that is quite a departure from the Western character she has so ably interpreted in the past. She appears as a traveling saleswoman who has no trouble in disposing of Abbott & Son's goods but her selling ability is not sufficient to convince the junior member of the firm that she thinks a great deal of him and that he should stay away from the bright lights and pay attention to business.

The elder Abbott would like to have her as a daughter-in-law but the son is too busy in chasing Broadway butterflies to appreciate what a fine little wife she would make. So the dashing drummer concocts a scheme with her senior employer to arouse the young man's jealously and make him embarrassed in the bargain. How it works out successfully, how the girl routs a party of grafters and saves the daughter of the house from a disastrous elopement, how her romance is developed according to her wish, are events which spell a most fascinating picture. Miss Dalton is afforded a chance to display a number of striking gowns which will delight the feminine patrons. Her dramatic work is of a high order.

"The Homebreaker" is a picture with a purpose and is true to life. Among those who help to convey the realities, aside from the star, are Douglas MacLean, Edwin Stevens, Nora Johnson, Frank Leigh and Mollie McConnell. The feature has been scenarioized by R. Cecil Smith, and produced under the direction of Victor Schertzinger, while Thomas H. Ince looked after the supervision.

THE STORY

Mary Marbury is a traveling saleswoman, and like all people who follow that vocation, whether male or female, she is fully able of taking care of herself. While sojourning in a "tank town" in Illinois the fair drummer encounters a couple of crooks and so obnoxious does the masculine party become in his attentions toward her that the resourceful girl promptly shows him his place. Indeed, the representative of Abbott & Son has the two crooks put off the train that is carrying her back to New York. She is considerably disappointed on reaching the office to discover that the junior member whom she expects to marry is setting himself a merry pace in the land of Bohemia. So Mary concocts a scheme with the elder Abbott whereby he is to humiliate his son by cutting up capers and thus bring the young man to his senses.

At a reception the father astonishes his guests in his spirit of youth and his flirtation with Mary. Which, of course, has the desired effect upon Abbott, Junior. Another factor which has contributed toward the old man's worries is the ease with which the two crooks mentioned above have ingratiated themselves with the children. These undesirable guests happen to be at the reception where the masculine party is planning an elopement with Lois Abbott. Everything is made ready even to the extent of the safe being robbed and the yacht made handy for a quick get-away when Mary discovers the plot. During a dancing interval she had gone aboard the boat with her employer and found the stolen money that the crook had placed there, for he intended to escape via. the water route. Of course the girl loses no time in straightening things out and when Lois sees the error of her ways and the thieves are captured, Raymond Abbott realizes that Mary is a wonderful girl. With his best drummer to guide his son through life, the senior member of the firm has no doubt about the young man's future behavior.

SUGGESTIONS

There are any number of good values in this picture for exploitation aside from the drawing power of the star's name. To begin with, its central character is conceived away from the beaten track as it presents a traveling saleswoman—really something new in characterization. This looks like a good angle to play up. Also make mention of the fact that the "drummer" is a whirlwind on the road and can talk any buyer into taking her articles, but who is unsuccessful in selling the junior member of her firm the idea that he should come to his senses and save his business from ruin. The humorous values are the ones to concentrate upon, despite the fact that the story carries a deal of dramatic action.

You might bring out that a yacht figures largely in emphasizing Miss Dalton's personality, for she has to don overalls and she looks splendidly efficient in them. She also wears a number of striking gowns. Bring out that point if your copy is written around the star. Also play up her captivating smile which is not duplicated in the wholesomeness it radiates by any other actress. The author's name is a good lead too, if you cater to a fan crowd. He has turned in some good stories.

Dorothy Dalton, the Ince-Paramount star, will be seen in her latest picture entitled "The Homebreaker," shortly, at this theatre. This is a story of a traveling saleswoman, who is able to convince the buyers on the road that Abbott & Son's products are the best on the market; but, who is unable to impress the junior member of the firm that more attention to business and less catering to the bright lights would spell success in larger letters. Not until the girl concocts a scheme with the elder Abbott whereby she is to appear as an adventuress in luring him to the "dogs" does the young man, who is very dear to her heart, come to his senses.

An appealing story and one strongly fortified with comedy and dramatic highlights is "The Homebreaker," and really one of the best in which Miss Dalton has appeared, if one can single it out above the others. The star has plenty of opportunities to reveal her charming naturalness, her captivating smile, and her generous measure of talent. She has been riding on the wave of popularity due to her keen characterization of Western heroines. Here she has a different kind of role and she shines just as brilliantly. An excellent cast surrounds her which includes such well-known players as Edwin Stevens, Douglas MacLean, Frank Leigh, Nora Johnson, and Mollie McConnell. The story was written by John Lynch, scenarioized by R. Cecil Smith, and produced under the direction of Victor L. Schertzinger. Thomas H. Ince supervised.

"JOSSELYN'S WIFE"—ROBERTSON-COLE

Drama of Love Quadrangle Made Effective Through Surprise Finish

BESSIE BARRISCALE'S new picture, " Josselyn's Wife," an adaptation of Kathleen Norris' novel of the same name, is based upon a love quadrangle. To look at the framework one would think it offered a bigger problem than the customary eternal triangle, but unfolded as a photoplay it doesn't carry half the complexities that one would imagine. Indeed, it is easily followed until the climax, and this requisite is so deftly arranged with a novel twist that it compensates for a somewhat vague and lackadaisical story.

The star is well equipped through experience to play the character of a sorrowful wife, and she brings out all the pathos and sympathy that the part demands and makes it thoroughly human in every detail.

In drawing the heroine as the rival of her husband's step-mother, the author has introduced a new situation in screen dramaturgy, though it is not developed here with the intensity that one expected. There is too much heart appeal and too little conflict to place it in the category of " passionate drama "—where it should belong. The wife is one of those dependent creatures who trusts everybody. And the drama suffers accordingly.

However, when the husband is indicted for the murder of his father, the subject unfolds a lot of action which, while belated, is suspensive and novel enough to make it entirely effective. It develops that the little boy did the shooting while playing " soldier."

The star is surrounded by a capable cast that includes Ben Alexander. As the child of the story he supplies the comedy as well as the heart interest. Howard Hickman's direction is entirely praiseworthy. Length, 5 reels.—Released in May.—Laurence Reid.

CATCH LINES

She married a man who fell in love with his step-mother! Think of it! Here were father and son living at cross purposes. An interesting picture of a domestic quadrangle is " Josselyn's Wife."

An artist and his siren step-mother caught in his studio by his wife and father. Here is a delicate situation for you. Come and see how it is worked out in " Josselyn's Wife."

By Kathleen Norris, one of the most prolific writers of fiction today.

PRESS NOTICE

Bessie Barriscale's latest picture, entitled "Josselyn's Wife," will be the feature attraction on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. This is an adaptation of Kathleen Norris' book of the same name and has for its central character a charming young wife whose husband is an artist by profession. Gibbs Josselyn, as he is known, takes his bride to Europe as he does not look favorably upon his new step-mother. After a lapse of years he brings his family back home where a reconciliation is effected. It is then that he notices that the woman he formerly frowned upon is decidedly attractive.

Events occur which place the philanderers in a communion of understanding, and the estrangement that is springing up between Gibbs and his wife, Ellen, seems ready to be effected any day. A time happens when the guilty couple are caught in a studio by the wife and father. And this introduces a rich situation. How the husband is caught in a trap that means his imprisonment for murder, how the future looms up dreadfully black for Ellen, how the tender appeal of the little boy coupled with his confession of the crime, enacted in all innocence, rights things eventually, are events that are absorbingly told on the screen.

Miss Barriscale is again directed by her husband, Howard Hickman, and those in support are Nigel Barrie, Kathleen Kirkham, Joseph Dowling, Ben Alexander, Josephine Crowell, Tom Guise and others.

THE STORY

The indifferent cruelty of the young people at Mrs. Rose's reception preyed so upon Ellen Lattimer's mind that she bade a hasty adieu. She fully intended to return to her country home, but no sooner had she left the house than she encountered Gibbs Josselyn who was late in arriving. As the young man did not look with favor upon his new step-mother, he found Ellen's company very attractive, and after a brief courtship they were married.

An artist by profession, Gibbs took up residence in Europe to enlarge his talent, and when he had made his mark he brought his wife and little boy back to his father's home where a reconciliation was effected. His step-mother, being a personable and clever young woman, began to wield a strange influence over him. And as he was about her age she enjoyed his company much more than she did that of her elderly husband. It happened, however, that the unwholesome creature did not play her cards cleverly. A time came when the younger Josselyn suspected her of being indiscreet and when she tried to square herself she became involved in a tangle of lies. The adventure erected a barrier between father and son, the result of which the latter took up quarters elsewhere. Yet the elder Josselyn loved Ellen and his little grandchild, who would come and play " soldier " with him by the hour.

One morning the old man was found dead, shot through the heart, and Gibbs was indicted for murder since there was an estrangement between them. There seemed to be no solution of the crime for Ellen believed in her husband's innocence, until the little boy admitted he had played " at war " with his grandfather and had shot him. So Gibbs was exonerated. His prison confinement had gone hard with him, but he found his health eventually and with it came happiness.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ———— theatre have long since accepted Bessie Barriscale as one of their favorite stars. Her long line of entertaining pictures have established her firmly across the film horizon. The management takes great pleasure in announcing, therefore, that included in the coming attractions that are booked for the ———— theatre, is "Josselyn's Wife," Miss Barriscale's latest contribution. The picture has been adapted from Kathleen Norris' book of the same name, and presents the story of a misunderstood young wife whose love for her husband is trespassed upon by his charming step-mother. He had endeavored to avoid the voluptious woman but to no avail, and in the process of the story he succumbs to her blandishments. A set of complications develop that all but engulf the philandering husband. But eventually the sun shines with radiance and the cracks in the domestic hearth are sealed up again.

SUGGESTIONS

In advertising " Josselyn's Wife " center your arguments and pictures around the central idea of the play, i. e., the love quadrangle. Triangles have been given to us in every conceivable shape, but here is something new in screen patterns that should not be neglected. It should make a striking argument for it presents a son at odds with his father over the latter's wife. Think of the fine copy obtainable in the fact that a young man is in love with his own step-mother and neglects his own wife to bask in her radiance! This idea if concentrated upon is going to excite a lot of curiosity. The climax also affords an opportunity for special appeal to the public. It presents the husband charged with the murder of his father and who is not given his liberty until his little boy comes forward with a strange story of how he killed grandpa while playing soldier. Don't give it away exactly—only state that a child figures strongly in vindicating his father's honor.

"MARY REGAN"—FIRST NATIONAL

Third Anita Stewart Picture Should Prove Another Success

MARKED by lavish settings, action staged as extravagantly as the backgrounds, and possessing a story of a certain type of underworld life that should appeal to the popular mind, Anita Stewart's third First National production bids fair to score another box office success.

Miss Stewart herself is considerably more in the foreground than in her first production " Virtuous Wives," and the plot has melodramatic substance and action in greater quantity than did her second, " A Midnight Romance," so, considering the success of these former vehicles, it seems right to assume that " Mary Regan " should travel the same lines to box office success.

The star gives a performance well in keeping with her new-grown popularity and the support she receives is of the best. Frank Mayo as the leading man contributes a good characterization, while Carl Miller, Brinsley Shaw, George Hernandez, Barney Sherry and Hedda Nova, furnish assisting performances of value.

During some of its phases the action of the story is rather artificial, but the swift course that the melodrama takes makes stopping to point these places out a foolish pastime.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

CATCH LINES

Why was Mary Regan shunned by society when she had done nothing wrong? She had wealth, beauty, position, her mother had been well liked in the best circles—and yet her friends refused to accept Mary Regan! See " Mary Regan," the latest picture in which Anita Stewart stars.

She deliberately refused the man who loved her—the man she loved and instead accepted the proposal of a drunken wastrel who did not have the courage to acknowledge her as his wife! Her reasons for so doing are only revealed in " Mary Regan," Anita Stewart's latest First National production.

Produced under the direction of Lois Weber, she who made " A Midnight Romance " and Mrs. Charlie Chaplin's most successful pictures.

PRESS NOTICE

Anita Stewart, who scored such successes recently at the ——— theatre in " Virtuous Wives " and " A Midnight Romance," returns again on ——— of ——— week for a run of ——— days in her latest First National production entitled " Mary Regan." This is an adaptation of LeRoy Scott's book of the same title and was produced under the direction of Lois Weber. It affords her the role of a young woman whose father was a notorious crook. She is ever fearful lest this trait of her parent's shall show in herself and so she refuses the love of Robert Clifford, a man high in the city's municipal circles.

As a result of this refusal she becomes entrapped in a clever blackmailing scheme, hatched by her father's former associates, in which she finds herself as an unwilling cat's paw. When she comes fully to a realization of the plot she communicates all the information she possesses to Clifford and through his efforts the schemers are foiled. And after this Mary accepts Clifford, who is finally able to convince her that marriage to him will do him no harm.

" Mary Regan " has been produced as lavishly as were the other two pictures in which Miss Stewart appeared recently. The star appears to her usual splendid advantage in the title role while surrounding her is a cast of particular skill including such well-known players as Frank Mayo, Carl Miller, J. Barney Sherry, Brinsley Shaw, George Hernandez, L. W. Steers and Hedda Nova.

As far as stories dealing with outlaws of society go " Mary Regan " may easily be classed among the best of this type.

THE STORY

Mary Regan is ardently loved by Robert Clifford, an official of the city. She refuses to marry him, however, because her name has a smirch on it. Her father, a notorious gentleman crook, married an heiress and while Mary has inherited all the finer qualities of her mother she is afraid that the traits of her father will some time show in her. More than this, she knows that Clifford will suffer if he marries her and attempts to introduce her to his friends.

Peter Loveman and Jim Bradley, old associates of her father's, attempt to win her over to their " trade "—blackmail. She refuses to have anything to do with them and goes away to the mountains for a rest and to endeavor to " find " herself.

To the same hotel Bradley brings Jack Morton, a young waster, put in his charge by a too-trusting father. Jack falls in love with Mary, which is just what Loveman and Bradley wanted him to do. Back in the city he proposes marriage and Mary, believing that she can save him from bad associates and sincere in her conviction that she can only be a hindrance to Clifford, accepts him. They are married and at a hotel near the city register under assumed names, as Jack wants to keep the affair secret from his father. However, the elder Morton learns of their being there and puts the wrong interpretation on the situation.

Later Mary learns of the attempt to swindle Morton of a sum of money through the predicament that Jack has fallen in and communicates her information to Clifford. Co-operating with the police he prevents the scheme from going through. But Jack, after his last wild revelry, dies. Mary, again free, feels the need of Clifford's love and protection and accepts him as her husband.

PROGRAM READER

Mary Regan accepted the proposal of marriage of Jack Morton's even though she did not love him, even though she loved with her whole heart and soul Robert Clifford and knew perfectly well that he loved her. But she believed that she would only bring him misery and sorrow as his wife. She thought that society would turn from her in scorn—refuse to accept her as being of their kind. And so she married Jack Morton. Then for a time events moved so rapidly that she had small time to think of Clifford. In the first place, Jack was afraid to acknowledge her as his wife and because of this fear his father branded Mary as a disreputable woman! Then suddenly she found herself the cat's paw in an astonishing scheme to blackmail the elder Morton! And she was perfectly innocent! The career of Mary Regan was, indeed, infested with all the adventure that the average mortal could require in a life time. Who was she? Why did society turn its back on her? She was innocent and yet they shunned her! You can see the conclusion of this fascinating picture at this theatre shortly, when " Mary Regan," the latest of the First National attractions starring Anita Stewart is shown for the first time in this city. It was produced under the direction of Lois Weber from a story by LeRoy Scott and is probably the best of Miss Stewart's recent efforts.

" THIRD DEGREE "

Vitagraph has never turned in a better production, and we would advise that you bring this angle out for it is as big as " A Million Bid " in its dramatic quality. You have a number of arguments to exploit here. First off is the fact that it is an adaptation of Charles Klein's great stage success. The majority of your patrons have probably seen it in its original version, since a great many companies toured with it and it was also brought out in stock. So most of your people will want to see it on account of its familiarity. The central idea that the cruel, tortuous methods of the " third degree " are responsible in convicting an innocent man can be well utilized. And effective word arguments can be used in emphasizing the faith and love of the victim's wife in establishing his freedom.

Paper spreads hinting at the police methods in securing a confession will excite attention. The subject lends itself well to any kind of advertising. The star has a vast following and you won't make any mistake in going the limit in advertising her. She takes wonderful photographs and these displayed liberally in the lobby and the papers are going to attract not only her followers but those who do not frequent the picture houses. Bring out the director. He is well known to the fans as a man who is entirely dependable. And in the cast, such well-known players as Gladden James, Anders Randolf, Mrs. DeWolf Hopper, and L. Rogers Lytton will arouse comment among the dyed-in-the-wool patrons.

"TAXI"—TRIANGLE

Starts Slowly, But Gathers Speed Toward the Middle

"TAXI" is a good comedy. For the first two reels it moves rather slowly. One might say that it doesn't seem as if all the cylinders were hitting. Then along about the middle it picks up and makes good speed and finishes with the meter ticking off the laughs quite as fast as the dimes tick by in reality. If it had started well "Taxi" might be described as an excellent comedy.

Taylor Holmes makes a likable chap of the hero-taxi driver and next in the cast in a position to furnish comedy is Maude Eburne, an actress who has had much success on the stage in eccentric comedy parts. She certainly makes the most of the role of the boarding house slavey in this picture and her scenes with the other players are all filled with excellent comedy due to her fine ability. Lillian Hall as the heroine is dainty and appealing.

"Taxi" hasn't much plot or at least not much has been brought out on the screen. This is the fault of the producers. They have really neglected to make the most of their opportunities, especially in the opening reels. But much of the comedy simply asserted itself, particularly when assisted by such a capable actress as Miss Eburne.—Length, 5 reels.—Released May 11.—Peter Milne.

CATCH LINES

Taxi, lady? Taxi, sir? Come take a round trip of romance and laughter for the price of admission to the ——— theatre where "Taxi" is now being shown. Taylor Holmes does the comedy honors—and asks no tips.

Ever hear of a taxi driver as a hero? Most people look on them as robbers. But this fellow is different. See him brought to life by Taylor Holmes in his latest comedy, "Taxi."

"Taxi"—in which and by which Taylor Holmes breaks all speed limits on laughter.

"Taxi" will make your laugh meter register to its capacity.

An hour's ride of fun and romance is what you'll find in this "Taxi" and the rate is cheap—see "Taxi" at the ——— theatre.

Some people think they can't afford taxicabs and they're right, for with a perpetual motion meter and a bandit at the wheel the tariff is high —but everyone can afford this "Taxi," the rate is the price of admission to the ——— theatre and the man at the wheel of laughter is Taylor Holmes. He'll give you a wonderful joy-ride on the road of laughter and romance.

PRESS NOTICE

Taylor Holmes, the popular Triangle comedian, will appear again at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest picture entitled "Taxi." Readers of modern fiction will recognize this title as that which adorned George Agnew Chamberlain's recent Cosmopolitan Magazine story. As a serial it afforded thousands a monthly cause for hearty laughter and now as a picture it seems destined to surpass its former record on the printed page.

Mr. Holmes assumes the role of Robert Randolph who forfeits a ten-thousand-dollar income so that a girl may have it and who goes forth to make a living driving a taxi. During her career behind the wheel he has many a humorous adventure, adventures which stand him in good stead when the climax of the story arrives. His position as chauffeur puts him on the inside track of a contemplated swindle and by his quick wit and by using his friends to good advantage he prevents it from going through and so saves the girl's income for her—and himself.

Mr. Holmes' ability as a comedian is well known and he derives the most from his unusual role here. He receives support of an adequate character from Lillian Hall as the girl, Maude Eburne in the comedy part of a slavey and Irene Tams, Henry Sedley, Jane Jennings and Olive Trevor in other prominent roles. The picture was produced under the direction of Lawrence Windom and includes many interesting scenes of New York City as backgrounds for the action.

THE STORY

Robert Randolph receives an income of ten thousand dollars a year by reason of the non-appearance of Imogene Pamela Thornton, who, by the terms of the will, would receive it if she could be found. Robert is jilted by Madge Van Tillier because ten thousand doesn't appear large enough to her. More or less disconsolate, Robert hires a taxi and rides about the town. As he draws up by the stage door of a theatre a pretty girl jumps into the cab and a man tries to follow her. Seeing the situation Robert throws the intruder out and drives off. What is his surprise to learn that the girl is none other than Imogene.

He takes her home to his apartment and turns it over to her and then goes forth in search of work—becoming a taxi driver. Imogene, because she took an immediate liking to Robert, doesn't relish the idea of depriving him of his ten thousand and tries, with other of his friends, to find him. But Robert refuses to be found. He becomes a very popular driver with all the city roustabouts because he always deposits them tenderly at their doors instead of merely throwing them out of his cab.

On one trip Robert hears a plot hatched by Imogene's oppressor to swindle her of her stock in the taxi company by which he is employed. He attends the directors' meeting himself and finds among the men a lot of the fellows grateful to him for taking them safely home. So the plot fails as Robert turns the tide in Imogene's favor. Besides this he is elected general manager and vice-president of the company. And then he asks Imogene to be his wife.

PROGRAM READER

Taxi! Taxi—Taxi? Taxi, lady? Taxi, sir? Don't say no, you really want this taxi. You'll have a round trip of wholesome fun all for the small price of admission to this theatre—and you don't have to tip the driver either. All of which means that "Taxi," the latest Triangle comedy starring Taylor Holmes, will come here shortly—and we feel sure that you will want to see it. The star's ability as a comedian is known by his previous work in Triangle and Essanay pictures but "Taxi" provides him with what is probably his most original and humorous role. There's great comedy in its five reels. The scenes between Mr. Holmes and Maude Eburne, the popular eccentric comedy actress of the stage, are some of the most laughable you ever saw and there's delightful romance in which the star is again ably assisted by Lillian Hall. In fact, "Taxi" has just about everything a picture could have to make it enjoyable. It's taken from George Agnew Chamberlain's Cosmopolitan Magazine serial and was produced under the direction of Lawrence Windom. The five reels include a number of New York City scenes filmed at night.

SUGGESTIONS

You ought to be able to make your advertising of this picture stand out as something altogether apart from the usual conventional announcements. The title, it need hardly be said, offers all sorts of opportunities for original copy. In the catch lines an effort has been made to play on the title interestingly. These, of course, may not appeal to your eye but they at least offer the basis of a number of catching advertisements. Build up on them with illustrations and arguments. Let your entire advertising copy go to elaborate on the title. And display the title prominently. It will catch the eye of itself.

"Taxi" also offers a good opportunity for teaser advertising. A repetition of the title by itself or with the word "hey" in front of it or "sir" or "lady" ater it would attract attention if run several times in the newspapers before the day of the showing. The same idea could be used for throwaways.

Lobby decorations, no matter how large or small, should follow out the same lines as the newspaper advertisements. If you are in the habit of "dressing" your lobby and your house employees when you play a picture for any length of time, of course "Taxi" offers you an easy opportunity. A stunt that might cost a little money but which would advertise the show well would be to placard a taxi with "You can't ride in this taxi but 'Taxi,' now at the ——— theatre, will give you the best joy ride in town," or some similar line, and hire a man to drive it around town.

"JOSSELYN'S WIFE"

Feature the star's name. Miss Barriscale has arisen to the top of her profession through sheer ability. Bring out that her role of the trusting wife is an ideal one and that it perhaps is the best thing she has ever done. Play up the child actor, Ben Alexander. He scored a knock-out in Griffith's "Hearts of the World." Also announce that the star's husband, Howard Hickman, produced the picture.

"SOME LIAR"—AMERICAN

William Russell Breezes Through in Extravagant Farce-Comedy

WILLIAM RUSSELL disarms criticism in the style of pictures which he is offering the public. Inasmuch as they are extravagant things, based upon ridiculous ideas, one must accept them for their true value, which is that of inviting laughter without any measure of pretensions. The star has been maintaining a happy average of late and struck the high-water mark with his last previous picture, "Brass Buttons." Perhaps the pace has become too rapid for, in his new contribution, "Some Liar," there is a noticeable let-down in spontaneity of action and humor.

The idea behind it, while reasonably true, seems somewhat forced in execution, if one may take into account a lot of repetitious detail. It being extremely weak, the picture runs its course early and the spectator is only kept at attention through Mr. Russell's enthusiasm for his work.

Here the star is a traveling salesman with a line of cradles and coffins. In disposing of them he tells some whopping big lies, and having a breezy manner and a likeable disposition, he interests the gullible miners and the only girl. His gift of gab leads him into all sorts of trouble before he utters his first truthful remark—"I love you."

The picture departs from its farcical flourish in much of the action, and the melodramatic scenes substituted do not suffice to give it weight, although the principals work mighty hard to put it over. A few thrilling fights interspersed with the hero's lies and it is all over. Haywood Mack as the v-i-l-l-a-i-n, Eileen Percy as the girl, and Gordon Russell as an extra heavy complete the cast.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

CATCH LINES

He sold cradles and coffins, and being a traveling salesman he told some whopping big lies. His listeners drank in his words with silence and when he was through no one believed him but a mighty pretty girl.

He told her he killed a dozen men every day just for excitement. And she liked him because he was so cave-like in his killings. She didn't know that he was some liar.

William Russell in his latest breezy picture—a picture that will shake your sides so many laughs does it contain.

PRESS NOTICE

William Russell, the popular comedian of American pictures, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest photoplay entitled "Some Liar." This is the breezy story of a young traveling salesman whose line consists of cradles and coffins. He arrives at the town of Yellow Jacket, Arizona, where he finds that the townsfolk have much need for his latter article. He sells a lot and tells a lot of lies. In fact, the salesman seems to market lies with as much ease as he markets his coffins and after a time all the inhabitants of Yellow Jacket have "fallen" for him, including one Celie Sterling.

He boasts to Celie about his prowess as a killer of men and that's where he makes a little mistake. For Celie, be it known, is bent on having a person named Sheldon Lewis Kellard killed for her special benefit. The salesman hadn't bargained on this and so finds himself surrounded by hot water—very hot water. How he gets out of it and manages to find a cool shower, how he finally comes to the point where he simply must tell the truth—when he realizes that he loves Celie, are events the humor of which can not be related here. Suffice it to say that the picture winds up in a veritable whirlwind of comedy even as it started.

Russell makes the title part a delightful personality while Eileen Percy as heroine and Hayward Mack as the villain lend good support. The scenario of "Some Liar" was derived from James Oliver Curwood's novel and production was in charge of Henry King.

THE STORY

Robert Winchester McTabb is a traveling salesman with a line of cradles and coffins, and when he comes to the mining town of Yellow Jacket, Arizona, he has no trouble in disposing of them. He is something of an accomplished liar and his yarns are such whoppers that the miners and a certain pretty girl are considerably impressed. Celie Sterling, as she is called, offers to invest in a coffin if Bob will get rid of an obnoxious individual by the name of Sheldon Lewis Kellard. As the salesman has told her of his man-killing exploits, he has to live up to them even though he is considerably scared.

High Spade McQueen, the proprietor of the gambling hall, also has a score to settle against Kellard, and so Bob sells him a coffin. As the gambler attempts to get familiar with Celie, the young Ananias knocks him down, though he is warned to order a coffin for himself. While lunching with the girl soon after his fracas with McQueen, he happens to see Kellard and is scared stiff. The latter warns him that he has nothing to fear as long as he is with the girl. So it is just one lie after another until Bob finds himself on the point of being lynched for supposed horse-stealing. When his innocence is proven in this case he still has Kellard and McQueen to settle with. The former has some compromising letters of Celie's in his possession and Bob recovers them after a severe tussle that involves not only these two men but McQueen. When everything is straightened out and Celie has discovered what an enormous liar the salesman is, he squares himself by uttering the first truth he has ever told—"I love you."

SUGGESTIONS

There is a wealth of advertising material in this picture which could be largely emphasized around the title. A number of novel lines will immediately suggest themselves to an enterprising exhibitor if he looks at the title for its full humorous value. There are malicious liars and others who lie for the fun of the thing. The hero here belongs to the latter variety. And the world laughs at and forgives such a fellow. Bring out this point and you can have some fun with your patrons if you tell them to watch closely and see if they can find themselves on the screen. Bring out the idea of the story in appropriate catch lines. The picture can sell itself on this angle alone. Advertise it as one of William Russell's breezy comedies, and bring out that no star is surpassing him in the quality of his subjects. He has a likeable personality that should count largely in his favor when he comes to your screen.

The author deserves mention because he is one of the most prominent in the fiction world. In his name and Russell's, coupled with the rich ideas that can be gained from the title and story, you should have no trouble in bringing the picture home a winner.

PROGRAM READER

There is no denying William Russell's popularity. After seeing him in a single picture you can't call him William any more. You simply must switch to Bill. Bill's latest picture, "Some Liar," an adaptation of James Oliver Curwood's novel of the same name, is one of the fastest and breeziest comedies that ever went over the screen. Imagine, if you can, a salesman, carrying a line of cradles and coffins stepping off the train in a little town in Arizona where killings were a perfectly ordinary occurrence. Would he have trade? Of course. But this particular salesman was also a born liar (no reflection on other salesmen) and he started in to sell his lies as fast as he dispensed with his coffins. He found himself in hot water before he could shake a lamb's tail twice and you'll find yourself in various ecstasies of laughter, providing you are still human. Eileen Percy is the girl that inspires Bill to tell the truth finally when he says "I love you," while others are Hayward Mack and Gordon Russell. It's five reels of laughter that are coming to you in "Some Liar"—and they're coming here soon.

William Russell must have been just telling one in "Some Liar," his American production distributed by Pathe

"THE AMATEUR ADVENTURESS"—METRO

Excellent Comedy Marks Emmy Wehlen's Return to Screen

METRO certainly sets a high-water mark for polite comedy in "The Amateur Adventuress," a picture which marks Emmy Wehlen's return to the screen after an absence of several months. It tells the story of a stenographer who forsook a life of drudgery for one of adventure. She is employed by a wealthy woman to break up her son's love affair with a delicatessen proprietor's daughter, and how she does it is amusing to a degree.

The whole picture, however, from first to last, covers in its various episodes as abundant comedy as ever was included in five reels of film. Miss Wehlen has a pair of excellent comedy foils in Victor Potel and Gene Pallette, while she herself appears to radiant advantage. That radiant covers everything —her looks, performance and her gowns.

A review of "The Amateur Adventuress" would not be complete without mention of the exceedingly clever subtitles, most of which are spoken. They are fitting and supply a laugh as well as the proper information.

But it was skilled work from every angle of production that caused "The Amateur Adventuress" to turn out so well. Metro seems to lead the field in the feature comedy line, particularly when this, its latest effort, is considered.—Length, 5 reels.—Released May 5.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

"The Amateur Adventuress," the Metro comedy which will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week marks Emmy Wehlen's return to the screen after quite a long absence. Her many friends will be glad to know that her return is marked by a picture, the comedy of which cannot be easily overestimated. As Norma Wood, the stenographer, in an adaptation of Thomas Edgelow's story which appeared in Young's Magazine, Miss Wehlen plays with a grace and charm and an appreciation of the comedy values of the story that again stamps her as one of the most skilled actresses on the screen. The plot is so arranged that the star is afforded opportunities for wearing a number of beautiful gowns.

Briefly the story tells of a stenographer's rebellion against a humdrum existence. She manages to secure some wonderful clothes and by means of these she is offered the job of weaning a rich man's son away from a delicatessen keeper's daughter. Of course there is her own romance to balance the picture. The comedy in "The Amateur Adventuress" is plentiful and never for a moment does the picture's gayety let down. The subtitles fairly sparkle with brilliant lines, while the situations of the story show an originality and humorous value that makes them doubly interesting.

Miss Wehlen receives capable support from A. D. Sears as the hero and from Gene Pallette, William V. Mong and Victor Potel in comedy roles. The story was adapted for the screen by June Mathis and Luther A. Reed and produced under the direction of Henry Otto.

THE STORY

Norma Wood is a stenographer tired with the monotony of her existence. Employed by Claxtonbury, the hypocritical president of a working girls' association and engaged to George Goodie, a smug, self-satisfied, selfish clerk, she finally rebels against it all and announces her intention of seeing life. The first thing she does is to charge a lot of gowns to Claxtonbury. His wife discovers it and Norma raises a small rumpus in the family when she says that Claxtonbury had sponsored the idea himself. She plays the game well and, although she is discharged, she receives a check from Claxtonbury to provide for her wants until she gets another job.

Subsequently she dons some of her fine clothes and enters the dining-room of a fashionable hotel. Here she is spoken to by Oliver Morley, who takes her home to his sister, Mrs. Sentel. The good woman is very much worried over her son who is infatuated with the daughter of a delicatessen proprietor. It is Norma's job to break up the affair. Gregory Sentel proves to be a conceited man and fails to live up to his mother's enraptured description. But Norma finds her job a difficult one until eventually she plays on Gregory's conceit and wins his attention. After that it is easy to disillusion him regarding the other girl by inviting her to tea. The way she acts, in comparison with Norma, finishes the job.

All this time Oliver has been falling steadily in love with Norma. When she plans to leave he proposes to her and she, after confessing all her "sins" to him, accepts.

PROGRAM READER

Over the little table in a cheap little restaurant George Goodie whispered what he thought words of love into the ear of pretty Norma Wood. This night of all nights he had resolved to spend sixty-five instead of thirty-five cents on their dinners and he had also resolved that they should get married. In fact he had done all the resolving without consulting Norma's feelings in the least. He helped himself to the biggest portions of everything and then blandly told her that after they were married she would have to get up an hour earlier in the morning so that she could finish the housework before going to the office! This was his idea of married life! It stung Norma to the quick and then she flared up. She flared and she stood up—on the table! With a glass of wine in her hand and the light of youth in her eyes she fairly sang forth her resolve to see LIFE! Then she walked out of the place and left George gaping. How Norma found life is told in the Metro picture, "The Amateur Adventuress," in which Emmy Wehlen is starred and which will be shown at this theatre shortly. It is one of the sprightliest comedies ever—a picture full worthy to mark Miss Wehlen's return to the screen after an overly long absence. Don't fail to see it.

SUGGESTIONS

If the previous Emmy Wehlen pictures were popular at your house advertise "The Amateur Adventuress" as marking her return to the screen. She has not been seen in any new pictures lately; hence you might make something of an event out of this one. Advertisements written in the form of an invitation to meet Miss Wehlen again at your theatre would be attractive and if you have a mailing list of regular patrons play up her return.

As regards the story you can go the limit on boosting its comedy. Without doubt it will prove amusing to every class of picturegoer. The theme, well expressed in the title itself, is one that possesses a lot of interest and you can develop this in your advertising. Don't be afraid of using superlative in talking about the picture. It's worth them.

If you cater to a regular fan patronage don't overlook the appearance of Victor Potel, an old time picture comedian. He has a prominent part and plays it well. His recent appearance with Mary Pickford will have recalled him to many.

But concentrate for the most part on Miss Wehlen's return (mention her wonderful gowns for your feminine patrons if it attracts) and the fact that as a comedy the picture ranks exceptionally high. Word of mouth advertising will do the rest providing you play the picture for a suitably long run.

"DAUGHTER OF MINE"—GOLDWYN

Human Interest Story That Hits the Mark

MADGE KENNEDY has a human interest story in "Daughter of Mine"—one that is endowed with realities so fraught is it with glimpses of everyday life. It is seldom that the quality of verisimilitude figures so largely upon the screen, so eager are scenarists and directors in surrendering to the conventions. But the star's latest contribution throbs with humanity and so is made genuine.

Hugo Ballin, Goldwyn's art director, is responsible for the story. He has journeyed to the East Side and came back with a slice of it which is visualized in the religious conflict engendered between Christian and Jew.

Mr. Ballin introduces a fanciful vein which, while of no consequence in the theme, balances the play with a humorous note. This idea of his has been used on the stage, but without much success, which is probably due to the dramatists attempting to deal in the ethics of the two religions.

Miss Kennedy invests her playing with charm and understanding. Tully Marshall as her father gives a convincing performance. A wonderful characterization. John Bowers is the young man in the case. Mr. Badger's scenes are faithful in atmosphere. There is the Ghetto teeming with life.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Rosie Mendelsohn	Madge Kennedy
Charles Howard	John Bowers
Papa Mendelsohn	Tully Marshall
Joseph Rayberg	Arthur Carew
Rabinowitch	Abraham Schwartz

By Hugo Ballin.
Directed by Clarence G. Badger.
Photographed by Marcel Le Picard.

THE STORY

Rosie Mendelsohn is a young girl of the tenements, beloved by George Howard, a struggling author, and watched over tenderly by old Papa Mendelsohn, a tailor. The latter does not take kindly to the young man, owing to his different race and religious belief, and the girl is induced to part with him through filial devotion. Papa Mendelsohn endeavors to find her a husband through a marriage broker but is unsuccessful, and since George has disappeared, Rosie's life is made miserable.

In an effort to locate her beloved, Rosie becomes a stenographer in a publishing house, thinking, perhaps, that he may turn up there with his manuscript. As she learns nothing of his whereabouts she conceives the idea of tracing him through his story and induces her employer to offer a prize for the best solution of it. Rosie types the first part of it from memory. Of course George, who has been having a hard time making a living, reads the advertisement in the papers and also recognizes the story. Spurred to ambition, the young man promptly submits the remainder and wins the coveted prize. So the lovers are reunited and return to Rosie's home where Papa Mendelsohn gives them his parental blessings. The old man appreciates that love breaks down all barriers.

PROGRAM READER

Rosie Mendelsohn was brought up to honor and obey her parents and when romance came into her life it ushered in a serious problem. Was it nobler to give up her Christian lover out of respect of her father's creed or follow the dictates of her heart? Surely it was a quandary. But she loved her father and accepted his religion and being a dutiful daughter she obeyed and gave up her romance, though the sacrifice meant a great deal of sorrow. However, she was unable to adopt his suggestion that she should marry a man of her own race. As time went on Rosie saw nothing of her lover until a day came when she could stand it no longer. She planned a scheme to bring him into her life again despite her father's wishes. And when he responded and picked up the threads of the old romance the event brought sunshine into Rosie's heart.

How the lovers, through their devotion to each other, made Papa Mendelsohn realize that race and creed form no barriers in affairs of the heart, how the old man gave them his blessing in the knowledge that love is generated in the melting pot of America, make a picture that is thoroughly appealing. We have no doubt but what you will be immensely satisfied when you see it on the ———— screen. "Daughter of Mine" was written by Hugo Ballin. It will appear here in the near future.

PRESS NOTICE

Madge Kennedy, Goldwyn's piquant star, forsakes the comedy field, in which she shines so brilliantly, in her latest picture, "Daughter of Mine." She will come to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in a story of considerable heart interest and human appeal. Quite a radical departure for her! The theme has been generally neglected upon the screen, perhaps because producers were afraid to tackle its vital problem. But the author here has deftly treated the conflict of race and creed and has swept aside the barriers through the aid of America's melting pot.

Rosie Mendelsohn was her father's daughter and that is why she obeyed him and gave up her Christian lover. Papa Mendelsohn was a product of the old world and followed its ancient traditions and customs in all things. His belief was that people who professed different religions should not marry. Rosie on the other hand had a new perspective on things since she was born in America, the land where races and creeds are ground together in the melting pot.

Yet, because of her filial devotion she obeyed her father and gave up her lover, though it made her greatly unhappy. Love will have its way despite every obstacle and when Rosie was reunited to the man of her heart, Papa Mendelsohn realized that his theories were punctured. And so he gave his paternal blessings.

It is a delightfully human story and capably acted by Miss Kennedy and her players. In the cast are Tully Marshall, who gives a remarkably lifelike portrayal as the father; John Bowers, Arthur Carew, and Abraham Schwartz. The picture was directed by Clarence G. Badger from a scenario by Hugo Ballin.

SUGGESTIONS

Your exploitation on this picture should be dignified as it deals with religious conflict or the barrier which separates Christian and Jew. It presents the old world traditions that are shattered in the melting pot of America. Love sweeps aside the barrier of race and creed in the story and as it carries a deal of pathos and sympathy you should handle it not only in an impressive way but in a manner that will not offend. Aside from the drawing power of the star's name and what it stands for upon the screen, the best plan is to bring out the theme of the story for it is a powerful one and well calculated to arouse the greatest interest. It is a subject that has been neglected upon the screen and the fact that it appears original will excite curiosity. So let your advertising tell of the conflict of religion and how love and the melting pot of the new world breaks down the barrier.

Although Madge Kennedy is accepted as a comedienne she gives ample evidence here that she is something of a dramatic actress. Don't neglect this angle. Your audience should be acquainted with her versatility. The picture carries such a deal of truth in its main idea that it should be driven home. A spread of the star and another of Tully Marshall, who gives such a wonderful portrayal as the representative of orthodox prejudices, will help a lot. And be sure to get your patrons in the right mood that the picture doesn't solve any religious or racial problems but shows how the melting pot is making good Americans of them all. Play up the star and the theme in effective arguments. Miss Kennedy has become one of the most popular players on the screen, and her story is really something new under the camera lights.

CATCH LINES

She was a girl of the tenements and her father didn't look with favor upon her lover, who belonged to a different race and creed. But doesn't love sweep aside all barriers? The answer is found in "Daughter of Mine."

Madge Kennedy's radiant personality is seen to splendid advantage in a picture of the byways and highways of New York.

The personable Goldwyn star in a story of everyday life—a story of the tenements where the sun scarcely penetrates.

Although forbidden to see the young man in the case, the call of Love was heard and she obeyed.

When her old papa forbade her to see the boy—he came from a different race and creed—she obeyed. But her unhappiness won her father's consent and the love of the two children broke the barriers.

Delightful Madge Kennedy in a different kind of role. Not a madcap this time, but a simple girl of the tenements.

"THE MASTER MAN"—PATHE

Frank Keenan Stars in Forceful Play of Love and Politics

FRANK KEENAN cannot keep his light under a bushel. As he possesses a dominant personality, what could be more appropriate to make it conspicuous than one of those tried and true melodramas of crooked politics? So as the master man—the power higher up—he comes into his own again. As the play calls for the fullest concentration upon the leading character, naturally the others are submerged to bring this feature about, although it must be said that the star shares the spotlight as much as possible with his players. Yet the picture is Frank Keenan all the way. And he gives it force and vitality so that it really becomes a high class melodrama.

As the Attorney General of the State, his dominant personality sweeps everything aside. If the Governor is fearless enough to fight the machine—well, death can be his reward. And the master man controls the invisible strings until a cog slips in the machine, and he emerges quite on a level with his oppressors and is duly captured.

A brief outline of the plot does not convey the intelligent treatment it has received from the sponsors. It unfolds a splendid array of novel situations which are so well handled for their suspensive values that one unconsciously takes a firm grip upon the chair. Each scene builds from the preceding one with ever-increasing interest, and though it is obvious that the god from the machine will be caught in his own trap the action is so tense that one hasn't time to notice the rift in the dramatic cloud.

Mr. Keenan receives excellent support from Jos. J. Dowling, William Mong, Kathleen Kirkham and others.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

CATCH LINES

In which the political machine of the State is given a sound trouncing. Come and see "The Master Man" and watch how crooked politics are made.

The masterful Frank Keenan in "The Master Man," a picture that will stir the blood and quicken the pulse. A big picture in every way and the star at his best.

Don't fail to see Frank Keenan in "The Master Man." You will like him and the picture.

PRESS NOTICE

Those who delight in a good political story will fairly revel in Frank Keenan's next Pathe picture, "The Master Man," which comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is a drama of crooked politics, centering about an unusually powerful personality, Emanuel Blake, the character portrayed by the star. It is a part which fits Mr. Keenan particularly well. Emanuel Blake is a master of men and there is hardly an actor better fitted to interpret such a part than Mr. Keenan. On second thought there is no actor better fitted for it—and few who could even equal Mr. Keenan's masterly performance.

Blake is as hard-headed and hard-fisted a politician as ever rose out of a rough ward for the greater part of the story. When anything gets in his way his motto reads "Crush It." But there is something good in the worst of it and this proves the rule with respect to Blake. And it is a woman who awakens within him something finer, at first perhaps it is only pity, but soon after it turns to love and when the tale is done there is a new Blake to be reckoned with.

"The Master Man" was written by F. X. James and scenarioized by Jack Cunningham, the same writer who showed such fine style on the previous pictures that Mr. Keenan did for Pathe. Ernest C. Warde directed the picture. A strong cast including Kathleen Kirkham, Joseph J. Dowling, William V. Mong and J. Barney Sherry surrounds the star.

THE STORY

Emanuel Blake, Attorney General of the State, dominates the political machine which has placed him in office, by his will power and magnetic personality. Thus he is known as "the master man." Governor Wheeler, an anti-machine man, is a menace to Blake and his satellites, since he has in his possession a document that would break up the ring. So Davenport, a catspaw for the men "higher up," is commissioned to recover the vital information. In his blundering methods, however, he accidentally kills the Governor and escapes into Blake's office, where he is safe under the latter's protection. The master man makes it appear that a young opponent of his machine, Mitchell Murray, is the murderer, although the evidence is so circumstantial that he doesn't go to prison until a long time has elapsed.

Blake also controls the destinies of Vanter, a wealthy steel man, and the latter's daughter is looked upon with deep affection by both Murray and the master man. As she has been adopted by the magnate it is advantageous that she obey his wishes in giving Blake her love although she thinks more of his young opponent. Her father, a derelict, bobs up to annoy her with his unwelcome attentions, and it happens that during the reception which is to usher in her marriage to Murray, the old man sneaks into the house and poisons Vanter. As Murray is framed at the same time, Blake is given a clear field to win the girl. But the master man is caught in his own trap and is sent away for a brief term in an asylum. When he comes out he is astonished to learn that Janice is facing trial as the party who killed Vanter. As a result he gains his coveted position on the jury in order to hold out against her conviction. Though eleven men attempt to win him over to their side, the master man is obdurate. And Janice is given her liberty when Blake points out her father as the guilty person. He also imparts the information that he is responsible for Wheeler's death. Permitted to leave the courtroom on heavy bail, he refuses to run away with Janice. And so Blake, now regenerated, resolves to pay his debt to the state.

SUGGESTIONS

No exhibitor need be told the proper manner in which to exploit the Frank Keenan productions. While there is a certain similarity about them as far as characterization is concerned, yet this factor is an important aid in advertising them. The star's personality is so emphatic in its forcefulness and magnetism that it has carried him through to success in nearly all of his works. But vigorous as he is, he can't do it all in establishing his chief stock-in-trade. So you must do your part in bringing out that his pictures are representative of his forceful personality. Let your patrons know that a Keenan subject is always endowed with a rugged quality. You will have them watching for it with a keener interest, for everyone who likes good red meat in his entertainment is sure to enjoy it.

As far as the story is concerned it deals with crooked politics—of the men higher-up. And being of this brand it bears a resemblance to life. Play up this point, for politics are always interesting. There are some communities that are bound to be hit by the story contained here. And the people will notice the resemblance. The title is a good one and indicative of a man who conquers with his brain and personality. Bring it out emphatically. Carry out the suggestion in the catch lines and photographs.

PROGRAM READER

A story of crooked politics as they control the governing processes of the State is contained in "The Master Man," Frank Keenan's latest picture, that will be seen here in the near future. The star is well endowed by nature and experience to play these masterful roles of which his Emanuel Blake, the Attorney General of the State, is perhaps the most virile of the lot. He is the master man who pulls the invisible strings that set the puppet legislators dancing, and if anyone opposes him—well, he can be attended to with quickness and despatch.

"THE UNWRITTEN CODE"—WORLD

In Which Kiku-San and Dick Tower Meet, Marry and Part

THE pictures that prove the truth of Kipling's "East Is East," etc., are many in number and "The Unwritten Code" may take its little place among them. Here the protagonists of the drama, Kiku-San and Dick Tower, meet in marriage, but it is not for long or ultimate happiness. Marriage fails to bridge the differences of race and customs and so they part, each of them wondering what it is all about.

"The Unwritten Code" has Shirley Mason as its star, and from this it may be judged that it was made some time since. If she fails to include a suggestion of the Orient in her facial makeup, she at least gives a well conceived and strikingly appealing interpretation of the little heroine. Matt Moore, too, performs well as Tower and Ormi Hawley and Frank O'Connor lead off a supporting cast, the other members of which are Japanese, with a brace of good performances.

The story is set in a pretty Japanese garden and some realistic interiors. The lighting is somewhat confusing with its sudden changes. "The Unwritten Code" is appealing and interesting, although as far as dramatic action goes it appears that a superfluous thousand feet of film is preventing this element from showing itself with good effect.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

PROGRAM READER

Can there be a perfect marriage between an Oriental and an American? Would not the Unwritten Code interfere with the smooth running of such a matrimonial venture? To Dick Tower these questions were the merest sort of flapdoodle. There was nothing in his bright lexicon of youth that interfered with true love. And so in far-off Japan he took the beautiful little Kiku-San as his wife, despite the protests of his friends. They warned him that he was running headlong into unhappiness. He laughed back at them and told them he was running straight for happiness! What was the outcome of this marriage? Would it prove an exception to the rule? What, indeed, was the rule? All these questions are answered in "The Unwritten Code," the charming photoplay of Japanese life, which will shortly be presented at this theatre. We know you will enjoy it, particularly when we tell you that Shirley Mason plays Kiku-San and that Matt Moore carries the part of Dick. And the pretty Japanese garden scenes! These are fairly indescribable. Suffice it to say that everything in "The Unwritten Code" goes to make for the best in entertainment. It is an unusual and beautiful photoplay.

PRESS NOTICE

"The Unwritten Code," starring Shirley Mason, supported by Matt Moore, will be the featured attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is a romance laid in a Japanese setting, the principals of which are Kuki-San, a native girl, and Dick Tower, a young fellow from the States. After a courtship fraught with excitement and accompanied by all sorts of dangers, Dick marries the little Japanese flower and in a native house, surrounded by what seems to them a fairy garden, the young couple settle down to what gives great promise of being an ideal existence.

"But the best laid plans of mice and men—," Dick discovers after only a short time that the other Americans in the city refuse to accept his wife as one of themselves. Their ostracism goes further than that and even Dick himself is ignored by those who used to greet him gladly. Two or three of his old friends stay by him and it is one of these, Thompson, who advises him that he can easily end it all before it is too late by discarding his wife—after the custom.

But this Dick will not hear—it is all his fault, he says, and he will remain true to his wife no matter what happens. But "The Unwritten Code" enters into their destinies and brings developments of which Dick little dreamed. The conclusion of the tale is left for the screen to tell.

"The Unwritten Code" has some exquisite garden scenes while the atmosphere and costuming of the various players is always realistic. Miss Mason gives a performance full of appeal while Matt Moore, as always, renders a characterization of the first water.

CATCH LINES

THE STORY

In far away Japan, Dick Tower, from the States, meets Kiku-San, the sister of his college chum. She leads an unhappy existence, as her father is constantly drunk and gambles all his money away at a nearby Geisha house. The proprietor of this place, after looking on Kiku-San's beauty, plays a crafty game and succeeds in running up the father's debt to an enormous sum. Then he demands Kiku-San in payment thereof. And so low has the wretched man sunk that he agrees to the scheme. But when the girl enters the Geisha house, Dick goes to her rescue and takes her to his home. He is at a loss as to what to do with her until finally the bright idea dawns on him to marry her. This he is advised against by his friends of the American Club but nevertheless he makes Kiku-San his wife.

In the intimacy of their home the young couple lead a very happy existence but Dick finds when he ventures forth into American society with his wife that he is shunned by those who previously called him their friend. As time goes on he grows to see the folly of his marriage but the realization that it was largely due to this impetuousness and knowing the innocent love of the girl for him, are elements which bring his pity to the surface and he resolves to abide by his first choice.

It is Kiku-San's brother, however, who proves the deciding factor. Seeing that his sister is unhappy with her husband he forces her to refuse to accompany him to the States when he plans to return in time for Christmas. Hardly knowing why she does so, the girl-wife turns from her husband. He goes away happy in the thought that the parting was not a cross for her to bear while Kiku-San waits and waits for his return—and waits in vain.

SUGGESTIONS

By playing up the marriage between an American and a Japanese girl you should be able to work out some good advertisements on this picture. Be careful, however, not to include anything offensive to anyone in your copy. Interracial stuff always offers such opportunities and the utmost care should be exercised in avoiding them. Glance over the catch lines printed elsewhere on this page and see if one or more of them will not answer the purpose for inclusion in an advertisement. These are also written so as to cast a certain mystery over the title of the picture. NOT over the story, and if you use them they will stimulate interest on this account.

Decorations for newspaper and lobby advertisements should be Japanese in character. The garden scenes in this picture are beautiful and mayhap among the stills you will find a scene worth reproduction or copying.

The star is well known. Her Paramount pictures have put her way to the fore. Be sure to mention her in all advertising. Try to find room for Matt Moore, too. Common with his brothers, he is one of the best known leading men on the screen today and his name will carry weight.

If you haven't used Kipling's "East is East and West is West, etc.," on every Japanese picture that has come along you might use it in your publicity and advertising on this feature. It sums up the content of the story and at the same time stimulates real interest for it.

"THE WHITE HEATHER"—MAURICE TOURNEUR

Another Artistic and Unusual Melodrama from Tourneur

MAURICE TOURNEUR is establishing a new type of picture in the Drury Lane melodramas he is bringing to the screen. "The White Heather" is the latest sample of his art along original lines. And the secret of this originality is apparently due to the fact that Mr. Tourneur endows the product of Drury Lane with an atmosphere as artistic as that which he brought out in "The Poor Little Rich Girl" and "The Blue Bird." Transference to the screen by a hand less skilful and "The White Heather" might easily have turned out a "howling melodrama." Mr. Tourneur offers an artistic melodrama: still containing the popular appeal of the older kind and multiplying it by fine treatment.

Suffice it to say here that the story holds the interest firmly. It is the backgrounds to which we wish to draw attention. The undersea scenes including the fight beneath the waves, photographed by means of the Williamson Submarine Tube, are still startling in their newness. They form a most valuable advertising angle as well. But the backgrounds of all the action are notable. The superbly lighted rural scenes of Scotland, the groupings that confirm again that Mr. Tourneur is a landscape artist of the highest class, and the careful attention to detail in the interiors (interiors that afford any number of chances to go wrong), all these contribute to the excellent impression the picture leaves.

A cast of uniform excellence interprets the leading roles. H. E. Herbert, Mabel Ballin and young Ben Alexander are the most prominent among them.

"The White Heather" will stand the strongest sort of boosting and doubtless you will find that your receipts will increase with each day for its very originality will cause the best sort of word-of-mouth advertising.—Peter Milne.

Including startling scenes photographed on the bottom of the sea.

PRESS NOTICE

Maurice Tourneur's latest production, "The White Heather," will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is an adaptation of the famous old Drury Lane melodrama of the same name by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton and tells a story laid in Scotland and England, with the capital as the background for much of the action. The picture is notable in that throughout it is invested with the artistry that one always associates with the works of Mr. Tourneur and some remarkable undersea photography taken through the Williamson Submarine Tube. The climax of the play takes place on the ocean floor where two men, burdened in heavy diving suits, fight for the possession of a ship's record that will make or break a lady's good name. The fight is staged with all possible realism and makes a most unusual climax.

Mr. Tourneur's melodramas which he has been offering the followers of the pictures recently are nothing if not original. The artistic finish he equips them with tends to lessen their baldy sensational spots and redeems them as a most advanced sort of picture entertainment. "The White Heather" shows some exquisite scenes of Scotland, all of which give evidence of the artistic eye of the director, and the ability of his technical staff to make the commonplace beautiful in the extreme.

The principal roles of Mr. Tourneur's melodrama are enacted by a cast in which H. E. Herbert, Ben Alexander, Ralph Graves, Mabel Ballin, Jack Gilbert and Spottiswood Aitken are prominent. The screen version of the play was made by Charles Whittaker.

SUGGESTIONS

Probably Maurice Tourneur is as well known as any director in the field today—his past productions such as "Woman," "The Blue Bird," "Sporting Life," "The Whip," and "The Poor Little Rich Girl," together with the first Elsie Ferguson pictures have established him as one of the foremost in his art. By all odds then use his name in heralding your showing of "The White Heather." State also that it is an adaptation of another Drury Lane melodrama.

You have a good line of advertising copy springing from the fact that the climax of the picture takes place on the bottom of the ocean. There is no fake about this and the fight, ending when one of the participants in striving to cut the wind pipe of the other, cuts his own, is realistically staged in every detail. You can boost this climax as something different in the run of features and it would also be a good one to build your advertising pictures and arguments around. Its novelty will attract and make the reader wonder.

For the rest let Mr. Tourneur's name and the source of the play suffice. But remember this—you can boost and boost and boost, and, unless we're very much mistaken, everyone is going to want to know why you didn't boost it more.

PROGRAM READER

Lord Angus Cameron knew that if those records were found he could never assume a respected position in the business world. For they proved that Marion Hume, his sister-in-law's housekeeper, was his wife! His career, then, would be utterly ruined if the record of the marriage ever came to light. He felt pretty sure that they never would come to light for the simple reason that they were lying at the bottom of the sea in the sunken White Heather. But his fear kept bothering him. Just suppose Alec McClintock should go after those records and get them! So he finally made all haste to the little town opposite which the White Heather went down and attempted to hire a diver to descend to the depths and open the strong box. There was no diver to be found—and he had to don the suit and perform the trick himself! Down, down, down—finally his feet touched the soft bottom—the ship was there—he found the strong box—and then—there was Alec McClintock, ready for a fight to the death! This fight to the death on the ocean bottom forms the climax to one of the most thrilling melodramas ever shown, "The White Heather," which will be seen at this theatre shortly. It is adapted from the Drury Lane success of the same title and bears Maurice Tourneur's name as producer, which is enough said.

THE STORY

Lord Angus Cameron is heavily in debt and he goes to his brother in Scotland to ask for a loan. His brother tells him that he will give him nothing unless he marry in his own class so that he may have an heir. This it is impossible for Angus to do inasmuch as he is already secretly married to Marion Hume, his brother's housekeeper. But he evolves a plot. First he endeavors to do away with his little son and when Marion discovers this she makes known their relationship. Angus denies that they were ever married. Marion's father brings the case to the London courts. It appears that Angus and Marion, before two witnesses, took the marriage oath after the Scotch law on board Angus' yacht, the White Heather. Afterwards the boat sunk, taking with it one of the witnesses. The other had disappeared. And so the court rules against Marion and refuses to recognize her marriage.

Dick Beach, who has long admired Marion from afar, goes in search of the remaining witness and after long days finally finds him but gets no satisfaction from him. In the meantime Angus has located the spot where the White Heather went down. He attempts to secure a diver to go down after the records. None available, he descends to the depths of the sea himself. Alec McClintock, for a long time Marion's ardent lover, dons another diving suit and follows. On the sea floor the two men fight and it is only Alec who comes to the surface. The ship's records prove the marriage legal. Marion's good name is saved and then at last she goes to Alec's arms.

"The White Heather" has its tranquil moments, of which this is representative

"FIRES OF FAITH"--FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY

Salvation Army Picture Should Prove Profitable

IN all probability the popularity of the Salvation Army will be responsible for this picture's success. The drama was written around the activities of the organization both at home and in the war zone and people are just now waking up to the fact that it did a very great work.

As far as the drama itself is concerned, it remains the usual war picture, richer perhaps, in the way of comedy, but unable to cope with many of its companions as regards continuity. The action is rather choppy owing to an endeavor to tell two romances and to give a little insight into the history of the Salvationists. The comedy awarded to Robert Anderson, however, is well realized by this capable player. From a part similar to that which he carried in "Hearts of the World" he derives some delightfully human humor.

Eugene O'Brien, Catherine Calvert and Ruby De Remer in the other stellar roles appear to advantage, Miss Calvert in particular making a sincere and likable figure of the Salvation Army lass. Mr. O'Brien and Miss De Remer do not have much to do but do the little well.

Probably the exhibitor will find that cooperation with the local branch of the Salvation Army will result in good houses for his run of this feature.—Length, 6 reels.—Peter Milne.

Directed by Edward Jose.

CATCH LINES

Are you one of the few who think the Salvation Army an inconsequential organization? If you are or if you're not, see "Fires of Faith," the picture drama of the times.

A picture that glorifies the great work of the Salvation Army in the war and that presents a wonderful drama of romance and thrills.

PRESS NOTICE

"Fires of Faith," a Famous Players-Lasky special production, will hold the position of honor on the bill of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. "Position of Honor" is used advisedly, inasmuch as "Fires of Faith" presents a drama written around the wonderful work of the Salvation Army during the war. While the picture contains a personal story of the most interesting sort, the producers have managed to weave deftly in the dramatic action, scenes showing the members of the Salvation Army rendering help to the soldiers at the front. No more worthy organization than the Salvation Army operated during the hard years of the war and "Fires of Faith" besides offering an entertainment of the best sort pays a lasting tribute to the men and women who carried on the fight just behind the lines in France.

Space does not permit the relation of the personal story here, but suffice it to say that the dual romance of Elizabeth Blake and Luke Barlow, Agnes Traverse and Harry Hammond, carried through some of the severest fighting at the front, is full of homely heart interest and invigorating thrills. The leads are exceptionally well taken by such well known players as Eugene O'Brien, Catherine Calvert, Ruby de Remer and Robert Anderson.

The reels of the picture give some insight into the history of the Salvation Army and show Commander Evangeline Booth in a number of the scenes. The picture was produced by Edward Jose from a story by Charles Whittaker.

THE STORY

Harry Hammond scoffs the Salvation Army until Mrs. Traverse, mother of Agnes, to whom he is engaged, tells him some of the organization's history. But even then he cannot sit through one of the meetings held at the headquarters and he goes out in the street to wait for Agnes and her mother. He goes to the rescue of a woman he sees being mistreated by thugs. They slug him and shanghai him aboard a steamer bound for France. Elizabeth Blake, the woman he endeavored to rescue, had been betrayed and had come to a low level in life's scheme. Restored to health by the Salvation Army, she joins their ranks and when the United States enters the war departs for France with the first unit. Agnes is also a member of this body.

In the meantime Harry has learned of the wonderful work done in the war zone by the Salvation Army men and women. His manhood is awakened and he enters the flying corps. An explosion renders him blind and he is placed in a hospital where Elizabeth sees him every day and recognizes him as the man who attempted to save her in New York. She falls in love with him, but dare not speak of it. During a German advance Harry is left behind in the cellar of an old chateau where come Elizabeth and Agnes and Luke Barlow, a one-time farm hand, who has fallen whole-heartedly in love with Agnes.

With the assistance of a little boy and an old Frenchman they manage to hold out against the Germans until the tide of battle turns again and the Americans and French retake the village. Harry's sight is restored and a little later there is a dual wedding, Elizabeth never making known her love for Harry.

PROGRAM READER

Probably no charity organization rendered greater service during the war than the Salvation Army. With all due and proper respect to the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A. and other organizations, the Salvationists fitted in where no other workers fit—the Salvationists had their places—the others theirs. Any returned soldier will tell you of the S. A. doughnuts and the S. A. pies and of the hundred other little things that members of the organization handed out to make the going over the rough road easier. Today the Salvation Army is honored. Thirty-five years ago its members were stoned and turned into prison! It is in appreciation of this work of the Salvation Army that the Famous Players-Lasky corporation produced "Fires of Faith," the special production which will come to this theatre shortly. Besides giving an interesting insight into the work of these people in the war zone it tells an absorbing drama in which the principal players are Eugene O'Brien, Catherine Calvert, Ruby de Remer and Robert Anderson. Commander Evangeline Booth of the S. A. appears in a number of scenes in the picture. The story for "Fires of Faith" was written by Charles Whittaker and produced under the direction of Edward Jose.

SUGGESTIONS

You'll have no trouble getting all sorts of publicity for this picture. As it shows various of the activities of the Salvation Army on the battlefront here are a few of the means by which you can get publicity cheaply and effectively.

If you show the picture during the coming Salvation Army drive, donate a share of your receipts to the organization. Your local organization will gladly cooperate with you if this is the case.

No matter when you show it the local branch of the Salvation Army will be glad to help you out. It is official because Commander Evangeline Booth appears in a few scenes in it.

Some returned soldier will gladly write an endorsement of the wonderful work done by the Salvation Army in the war zone. Use this in all advertising.

Probably the smaller newspapers will be glad to carry editorials written on the rise of the Salvation Army to its present position. They at least will cooperate with you to the extent of reviewing the picture at length in their columns.

Sell copies of the song "Fires of Faith," regarding details of which you can learn through your exchange. A music store might cooperate along this line.

"THE BOOMERANG"—PIONEER

Henry Walthall in Seven Reel Capital vs. Labor Picture

CAPITAL vs. Labor is the theme of this picture starring Henry B. Walthall. It possesses the usual personal plot and winds up with all differences between the two classes amicably adjusted. " The Boomerang " is in seven reels and has many little by-plots. The producers were possessed of a good idea and from time to time glimpses of a sincere endeavor to present the case of each side clearly are caught. However the action runs somewhat too long and the producers have failed to concentrate on any one line of action to sustain the interest from beginning to end.

Mr. Walthall's performance as the hero is the brightest spot in the entire seven reels and always commands interest and attention when he is on the scene. A cast of competent players surround him.

The picture offers a variety of scenery both among the high and the low and preaches a good moral in that it shows selfish capitalism as a miserable thing.—Length, 7 reels.—Peter Milne.

CATCH LINES

PRESS NOTICE

" The Boomerang," an interesting picture in which capital and labor figure prominently, is scheduled to be shown at the ————theatre on ————of————week. This is a special seven-reel production, in which Henry B. Walthall, the noted dramatic actor, is starred. Ever since his appearance in " The Birth of a Nation," Mr. Walthall has laid just claim to being the foremost actor on the screen today. Though not so often mentioned among the " big " stars as some of his lesser contemporaries, his performances, one after another, have surely established him in an enviable position in the hall of actors' fame.

His part in " The Boomerang " is that of a young lawyer, the son of the president of a gigantic meat corporation. He plays this role with true feeling in all its many phases. In fact, whenever he is on the screen he holds the center of attention, and by his ability and depth of expression creates a character that will long be remembered. The story takes up the case of this young lawyer after he has been turned from his father's home owing to his opposition to a gigantic amalgamation that will bear down on the poor of the city with increased hardships. How he takes the side of the oppressed; how he fights for them and eventually wins out, even over his father and his powerful ally, are events which make a picture of unusual interest. There is a pretty romantic thread interwoven with the action of strife, and the whole picture is very well balanced.

Surrounding Mr. Walthall is a cast including players of special competence headed by Melbourne McDowell, Nina Byron, Helen Jerome Eddy, Jack MacDonald, Nigel De Brullier and Bert Appling. The picture shows a variety of setting and some unusual mass effects.

THE STORY

George Gray, son of a rich meat packer, is engaged to Rose Cameron, daughter of his father's most formidable rival. Cameron proposes a consolidation of the two business interests, and the results will give the single company absolute control of the market. George, as attorney for his father's corporation, opposes this as he thinks of the suffering it will probably cause the poor. George had previously paid a check to Snape, a vulture preying on society, who claims that Rose's brother has betrayed his niece. This check was made out to the niece herself, Nora Yorke. Peter Cameron secures this check and, misinterpreting it before his daughter and Gray, breaks off the engagement.

Subsequently George is turned from his home. He goes to a nearby city and there devotes his life to studying the conditions of the poor. He becomes something of a power in labor circles and attracts the attention of the independent candidate for governor, who, after his election, appoints him a district attorney. The consolidation of the meat corporations having been put through, the results are that prices go up and the quality of the meat goes way down. Several of the poor people are poisoned by it. George goes busily on studying the facts of the case. He learns also that Nora is really married to young Cameron, and it is through his services that the young man again gets a grip on life.

In time George brings suit against the meat corporation, and clearly wins his case. Besides proving his father and Cameron guilty, he opens their eyes to the true condition of affairs, and when the story closes it has brought a happy ending to the love affair of George and Rose and has brought a feeling of charity and kindness into the lives of the capitalists.

PROGRAM READER

" Boomerang, n., a missile used by the Australians, consisting of a piece of flat, curved hard wood, which, when thrown by the hand in a certain manner, describes a series of curves, and finally returns to the thrower, striking the ground behind him." Such is Webster's definition of the word boomerang. But there are other boomerangs besides those used by the Australians. And sometimes that are not thrown expertly. Instead of striking the ground behind the thrower, they sometimes return and strike him. Peter Cameron thought he knew how to wield the missile, and he threw it with all the force of his mental strength. It went careening through the air and returned —striking him full in the face! Peter Cameron didn't know how to judge human nature—that was why he failed. He thought the workers of the world were a bunch of cattle to be herded hither and yon at his beck and call. But he learned a lesson—a lesson which he never forgot. The lesson is shown in " The Boomerang," a spirited Capital and Labor story, with Henry B. Walthall appearing in the stellar role. It is a stirring picture, seven reels in length, and will be shown at this theatre shortly.

SUGGESTIONS

Pictures showing controversies between Capital and Labor should be of particular interest at this time. The question is a big one and interests everybody, even your middle classes, which are the backbone of the theatre audience when all is said and done. In your advertisements on this picture play up this angle, always being careful not to offend either side. It's a ticklish subject as well as an interesting one, and if you take a step too far on either side of the line you are liable to get in trouble with the authorities. However, presented judiciously, the picture should attract considerable attention.

The catch lines and the Program Reader take the Labor side of the situation, as is, in this instance, quite appropriate, inasmuch as the capitalists of the picture are won around to a sane way of thinking before the story's close. If you use them, or ones molded on the same pattern, you will be appealing to the popular mind and at the same time keeping out of trouble.

" UNPARDONABLE SIN "

For the rest, all the advice we have room for here is to display the title—it's a corker. Display the author's name—he is exceedingly popular. Display the director's name—he is among the best known in his art. Tell of Blanche Sweet's return and her wonderful performance. All these things wil help put the picture over in the smashing style that it has gone over elsewhere.

CATCH LINES

There are little sins that we all but smile at; there are those we frown upon; there are those that must be condoned by the severest penance, and there is THE UNPARDONABLE SIN.

A striking picturization of Major Rupert Hughes' dramatic novel, produced under the direction of Marshall Neilan and marking Blanche Sweet's return to the screen.

Time and conditions never alter in effect or decrease in power a truly great picture. " The Unpardonable Sin " is one of these. Tomorrow and the day after it will remain as great as it is today and was yesterday. You must not miss it.

The splendid blending of a tremendously dramatic theme, deep pathos and spontaneous comedy —don't deprive yourself of THE dramatic thrill by missing " The Unpardonable Sin."

Blanche Sweet's triumphant return to the screen in a tremendous version of Major Rupert Hughes' dramatic novel of things as they were.

"FOOLS' GOLD"—ARROW

Mitchell Lewis, the Star, in a Disconnected Story

"FOOLS' GOLD" provides Mitchell Lewis with a role that demands a certain amount of versatility. In the opening reels he is the big-hearted, sympathetic son of the soil again, while with the passing of time and footage he becomes one of those iron masters who grind the less fortunate with crushing heels. In neither phase of the picture's action does Mr. Lewis appear at his best. In the first part he presents the character well enough, but the plot fails to assist him in scoring his usual appeal. Later, his head closely shaved, he seems lost in a new character and new makeup.

As for the story of "Fools' Gold," this is a disconnected piece of work. After the skip of years it begins on a totally new line of action—there is no connection between it and the first half. Strikes and labor unrest are introduced and not dramatically. The author seems wandering around in a maze of foreign incidents, incidents foreign to him and to each other.

The locations and camera work of the production can be highly praised, but in this instance these good qualities only go to dwarf the story still further. In its present state the picture bears subtitles that are exceedingly poor. With these rewritten and with careful editing the aspect of the picture might be improved considerably.—Length, 6 reels.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Marshall Strong	Mitchell Lewis
John Moore	Wellington Playter
Constance Harvey	Florence Turner
Lilas Niles	Sarah Truex
Old Niles	Francis Joyner
David Moore	Kempton Green
Nancy Smith	Evelyn Brent
Miss Hatch	Mlle. Marguerite Serruys
Sir Horace Seaton, Bart	Harry Hyde
Chris Kuhn	Loan Star Dietz
"Mother"	Elizabeth DuBarry Gill

Directed by Laurence Trimble.

SUGGESTIONS

If Mitchell Lewis is a favorite at your theatre you can create interest in the showing of this feature by announcing the fact that he appears in a new sort of role. You might even take one of the photographs of him in evening clothes, with his hair cut close, and print it with his name and an interrogation point beneath it. Thus you will inaugurate a teaser and campaign that would be effective if followed up each time with additional information regarding the star and the picture.

Lay stress on the beauty of the outdoor scenes and state that the picture presents a mining story. If you think that advertising a struggle between capital and labor counts you might use this angle as such a struggle is introduced toward the close of the picture.

PROGRAM READER

Marshall Strong, the big, cheery miner that he was, refused to give up hope of striking pay dirt when his partner John Moore, could do nothing but complain. It was Strong who kept things going, who urged himself on and buoyed up his partner's spirits. And finally the great day came when they struck the precious streak of ore. Their mine was successful after all. Then they rested and enjoyed the fruits of their labor and then one day Constance Harvey came to the nearby village to teach school. Both men met her, both were attracted by her, Strong felt a great love for her, Moore coveted her because she was pretty. And Moore saw to his dissatisfaction that Strong was receiving the favored glances from Constance. Maddened by his desire to possess the girl Moore set about to discredit Strong in her eyes and he eventually accomplished his purpose. He married her with a laugh behind his face—which, be it known, is a dangerous sort of laugh to have. And what was Strong to do then? Strong who had never done a wrong deed in his life—who had loved and who could not understand? In "Fools' Gold" which comes to this theatre shortly the outcome of this dramatic story is revealed. The star of the picture is Mitchell Lewis, one of the greatest character actors of the day and the picture is set in a variety of beautiful outdoor scenes.

THE STORY

Marshall Strong and John Moore are partners in a mine and one day they strike pay dirt. To the village near their claim comes Constance Harvey, school teacher, and both men fall in love with her. She favors the bashful awkward Strong to the more sophisticated Moore, but by playing a clever game in which he woes not hesitate to trick his partner, Moore wins her hand. After the marriage he becomes jealous of Strong and Constance comes to the realization that she chose her husband unwisely. Moore is killed soon after in a saloon brawl and Strong is blamed. He attempts to see Constance but when he goes to meet her spies some of the posse waiting near her and believes that she wishes to turn him over to the law. Embittered towards her he leaves that part of the country.

Many years later Marshall Strong is the owner of a valuable mine. He has married and the union is blessed with a daughter, Nancy. She is the only good influence in Strong's life. His wife is ambitious and cold and he himself grinds his workers as hard as he can. David Moore, Constance's son gains a position at the mine. He meets Nancy, and they fall in love. Strong's refusal to grant the workers' demands leads to an accident and David is trapped in the mine. Strong then realizes that through his neglect he has brought more sorrow into Constance's life. But David is rescued as are the other miners, Strong's nature softens again toward his employees and he gladly permits Nancy to marry the man of her heart, David.

PRESS NOTICE

"Fool's Gold," a six part feature, with Mitchell Lewis in the stellar role will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This contains a story of the western mining country and offers the well known star a wonderful opportunity to prove his versatility. In the first part of the picture he is shown as a big-hearted, good-natured, lovable miner, striving all the day with his partner to strike pay dirt on their little claim. And in time fortune smiles upon the two men and the yellow ore is unearthed. Happy in his new acquired wealth Strong (Mr. Lewis) now turns to pleasanter things—such as Constance Harvey, the village school teacher, who looks with favor on him.

But Constance is not for Strong. His partner, Moore, by one trick after another succeeds in placing Strong in a wrong light and as a result Constance tries to forget him and marries Moore. In time she grows to realize what a great wrong she did the man who really loved her but she is unable to right the situation. The plot then skips several years and takes up the romance of the second generation. How Strong's attitude, now hardened by disappointment and the knocks of the world, almost brings on another tragedy is graphically told in the concluding reels of "Fool's Gold."

Mr. Lewis appears as a different man in the latter reels of the picture and his many admirers will notice that he reveals a versatility heretofore not shown on the screen. Mr. Lewis is supported by a singularly able cast of talent.

Mitchell Lewis in a dramatic story of the great outdoors.

He thought he had struck real pay dirt and it turned out to be Fools' Gold!

He found gold but lost happiness.

He had lived through tragedy and become hardened but he changed in time to prevent a recurrence of the situation that wrecked his life.

"SIREN'S SONG"

bound to excite the interest of the screen-going public. Probably no star on the film horizon has been publicized like Miss Bara. Every one knows who she is and what she stands for. She has no superior in the delineation of vampire roles and in playing them she has established her popularity. In this picture she gets out of her famous part as an everyday human being. And this looks like the angle to play up.

Tell your audience that Miss Bara is not a one-part actress, that here she shines with equal radiance in a role that is sympathetic and appealing. As filmgoers know about her from past publicity there is no use of treating of her personality unless you want to revive their memories through repetition. The best angle as suggested above is to concentrate upon the "different" picture idea, supplementing it of course with the fact that the same high quality of production is evidenced as usual. Entertains Many Visitors from the West

It was "Old Home Week" recently at the New York offices of the Pioneer Film Corporation. M. H. Hoffman, general manager, was about the busiest man in town entertaining his callers from all parts of the country.

Among those who gave the Pioneer headquarters a portion of their time was T. L. Talley of San Francisco, who incidentally bought "Wives of Men" for his territory. Mr. Tally has been so busy during his New York visit that he says he'll have to take a week off when he gets home just to rest up.

A. Cubberly of Rubin and Finkelstein, before returning to Minneapolis, dropped in and stayed so long that he nearly missed his train while D. R. Graver of Charlotte, N. C., found time between his engagements to run in and talk over his plans for the future.

R. A. Scott of the W. P. Dewees office in Vancouver was a visitor who came only for a social chat but remained long enough to see and buy for his territory "Wives of Men."

John A. Schuberg of Vancouver was a late visitor who spoke with great optimism of the prospects in Western Canada, where the motion picture business is entering upon a new era, he stated. Mr. Flynn of Richards and Flynn of Kansas City, Mo., dropped in and brought some territorial rights to "Wives of Men" and "The Still Alarm."

Two Companies Busy at Capellani Studio

Two companies are now at work at the Capellani studio, in one of which Creighton Hale and June Caprice will be costarred under the direction of Albert Capellani, and the other of which Dolores Cassinelli is the featured artiste under the direction of George Archainbaud.

Work of enlarging the studio organization to accommodate the increased activities of the company is progressing rapidly. The newest addition to Director Capellani's staff is Lucien Andriot, formerly cameraman for the World Film Corporation and more recently an aviator in the American Cinematographic Division.

Other additions are George Archainbaud as director, Lucein Tainguy, as photographer, and Albert Dorris and Philip Masi as assistant directors.

Says Maciste Is Popular in This Country

Reports from various territories where D'annunzio's famous war hero, "Maciste," the well-known star of two great spectacles of the part now appearing in the super-serial, "The Liberator," confirms Harry Raver's prediction that "The Big Fellow's" newest vehicle would prove a splendid box-office attraction and add greatly to his already tremendous popularity. "In fact," said Mr. Raver, "the wildest enthusiasm is being shown wherever 'The Liberator' is circulating.

Weintroub and Febvre Visit Gaumont Plant

M. WEINTROUB, Manager of the Fontenelle Feature Film Company, of Omaha, spent the past week in New York. He reports that the motion picture industry is thriving in the middle West.

During the week, Mr. Weintroub was an interested visitor at the Gaumont Company plant, at Flushing, Long Island. The Fontenelle Feature Film Co. is handling the Gaumont News and Graphic, "Satan on Earth," and the Gaumont serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," in Iowa and Nebraska; and one object of Mr. Weintroub's visit was the booking of Gaumont's new novelty release, "Pictorial Life."

Another visitor to the Gaumont plant was Charles Febvre, manager of the Gaumont interests in Argentina, who arrived in New York last week. This is Mr. Febvre's second visit to the United States in the past twelve months; and his reports as to the popularity, in South America, of our film productions is very encouraging.

While here, he will look at specially meritorious pictures with the object of purchasing the rights for Argentina, Brazil, Uruguay, Peru and Chili. He will also, it is said, buy a number of pictures for Spain and Portugal, and possibly for some other European countries.

Confer in Chicago on West Comedies

Reversing the old idea of a coast to coast trip, Milton L. Cohen, president of Bull's-Eye Film Corporation in New York, and Nat H. Spitzer, studio manager in the Billy West studios in Hollywood, left their respective offices late last week and met in Chicago on Monday, April 27, for a conference with other Bull's-Eye officials on the New Billy West Comedies.

"We have no reason to doubt the success of the new series of Billy West comedies," said Mr. Cohen before entraining. "But our mutual desire is to make better and better comedies, and I have arranged this happy medium to prevent a coast-to-coast trip that would take up too much of our time."

Goldberg Makes Bet and Wins Umbrella

Unlike most men closely connected with the picture business, Lee L. Goldberg, secretary and general manager of the Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, Ky., likes to see it rain. It gives him an opportunity to display the new silk $5,000 umbrella he possesses.

The umbrella did not cost $5,000. Mr. Goldberg calls it that to recall the manner in which he won it. On starting through a string of Kentucky and Tennessee towns to obtain bookings for First National Exhibitors' Circuit, of which Col. Fred Levy, of Louisville, is a franchise holder, Mr. Goldberg said he was coming back with $5,000 in bookings in three days and a half. Col. Levy bet Mr. Goldberg he couldn't pass the $5,000 mark.

When Mr. Goldberg returned his bookings aggregated $10,260. First, he visited Memphis, where Bridges and Tarlton, of the Maestic Amusement Company, took "Virtuous Wives," the Mary Pickford Pictures, "Shoulder Arms" and "A Dog's Life," all for return engagements. Later they reported better business on the repeats than on the original runs.

Vitagraph News Bits

William Duncan is this week casting the first episodes of a new serial production which is to start immediately. The story for the new chapter play was written for Vitagraph by Cyrus Townsend Brady and Albert E. Smith. Its title has not yet been decided upon.

The Bessie Love Company, under the direction of David Smith, this week started the production of her next picture, adapted from the novel, "Hurrying Fate and Geraldine," written by Florence Morse Kingsley. The story was adapted to the screen by Stanley Olmstead and Edward J. Montague and will be given a new title for release.

The Antonio Moreno-Carrol Holloway company is making the seventh and eighth episodes of their serial, "The Perils of Thunder Mountain."

Universal Newsettes

Jack Ford has started production on the latest Harry Carey western picture, "A Man of Peace," written by Frederick J. Jackson, and prepared for the screen by H. Tipton Steck and George Hively of the Universal scenario staff. The cast includes besides Harry Carey, Joe Harris, Duke Lee, Jack Walters, Vesta Pegg, William Cartwright, Howard Enstedt and Zoe Rae.

There remain two weeks' work to complete "The Right to Happiness," the latest Dorothy Phillips production being staged under the direction of Allen Holubar. William Stowell and Robert Anderson appear in the principal supporting roles.

Paul Powell has practically completed his production of "The Weaker Vessel," starring Mary MacLaren. The story was written by Elmer Elsworth and Producer Powell in collaboration. Thurston Hall appears opposite Miss MacLaren.

Director Lynn Reynolds has been using the Midwick Country Club ground this week making exterior scenes in his production of "A Little Brother of the Rich," taken from the novel of that name by Joseph Medill Patterson. The cast includes Kathryn Adams, Frank Mayo, Barney Sherry and Lillian Leslie.

With Monroe Salisbury in the stellar role, Rupert Julian has begun the production of a multiple reel picture, whose working title is "Devils Have Their Friends." The story was written by Elliott Clawson, author of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." The greater part of the action takes place in Alaska. No supporting cast has thus far been announced.

Under the direction of Jacques Jaccard, Eddie Polo has just finished the production of "Cyclone Smith's Partner." Beatrice Burnham appears in the leading role opposite Polo.

Peggy Hyland smiling her way through her latest Fox production, "Miss Adventure"

Having completed "Hate Everlastin'," Pete Morrison has begun the production of another two-reel western comedy drama entitled, "The Terrible Bandit." Magda Lane appears opposite him.

James J. Corbett has reached the twelfth episode of his Universal serial, "The Midnight Man," which is being made under the direction of James W. Horne. Kathleen O'Connor appears as his leading woman.

At the Ince Plant

By way of preparation to meet the terms of his new Paramount contract which goes into effect about September 1st of this year, Thomas H. Ince last week added Lloyd Ingraham to his production staff at the Culver City studios to direct Douglas MacLean in a series of forthcoming features. There are now four companies at work under the Ince banner, including the Ingraham-MacLean troupe. This number will be increased to six before September.

Although no official announcement has thus far been made by Ince executives, it is generally understood that the MacLean productions are being gotten under way with a view to filling the gap in the Ince releases that will be made January 1st, when Charles Ray leaves to produce for the First National Exhibitors.

Bert Seibel, assistant director, and John Strumar, cameraman, have left Los Angeles for New York, to join the Dorothy Dalton company in the production of a new Thomas H. Ince feature, an Apache picture which is to be staged in the east under the direction of Joseph De Grasse. The company will probably remain in the east the better part of a year.

Plans for a complete laboratory designed to take care of negative and positive films have been approved by Thomas H. Ince for his Culver City studios. At present the company develops only its negatives, positive prints being contracted for on the outside. Work on the new laboratory, it is announced, will be begun shortly.

Thomas H. Hopkins last week joined the Ince scenario staff as continuity writer for John Lynch.

Under the direction of Fred Niblo, Enid Bennett has begun work on a new production at the Ince studios. No title for this release has thus far been decided upon.

About Metro Players

Edwin Carewe, of the Metro producing staff, who left the coast for New York upon the completion of his last Viola Dana picture, "False Evidence," has returned to the Hollywood studios. It is expected that he will direct the action of the Bert Lytell company in the story that is to follow "One-Thing-at-a-Time O'Day," on which they are at present working.

John J. Conley, formerly of the reading department at the Metro, has been promoted to the post of assistant director with the Charles Swickard company now at work on the May Allison production, "His Father's Wife."

The Hale Hamilton company, under the direction of Harry L. Franklin, is at work on the production of a comedy drama entitled, "Full of Pep," adapted for screen purposes by A. S. Le Vine from the original story of that name by Robert F. Hill. The story deals with what happened to a small prohibition republic when a young man, full of pep and bringing a suitcase full of liquid stimuli, pays a visit to the country. Hamilton is supported by a cast including Victor Potel, Alice Knowland, Alice Lake, R. D. MacLean, Charles Hill Mailes and Fred Malatesta. Rudolph Berquist is doing the camera work.

For the first time since the United States entered the war, the United States Shipping Board has granted a film company the privilege of using one of the nation's ships for making dramatic productions for privately owned companies. This week the Hale Hamilton company was allowed to go aboard the West Sequana, a government-built 8,000-ton freighter, to film scenes for the production of their latest picture, "Full of Pep."

Maxwell Karger has purchased "It's Easy to Make Money," a story by John H. Blackwood, as the next vehicle for Bert Lytell.

Metro presents Bert Lytell in "Blackie's Redemption"

Finis Fox is preparing the scenario. Edwin Carewe is to produce it.

John Ince is to direct Emmy Wehlen in the production of her next picture, "A Favor for a Friend."

Fox Studio Doings

The Gladys Brockwell company under the direction of Frank Beal is still working on the production of "Sadie," a story of the west in which Miss Brockwell appears in the role of waitress. Her supporting cast includes William Scott, Richard Rosson, Harry Dunkinson, Irene Aldwyn, Walter Long and Claire McDowell. Friend Baker is the cameraman.

"Be a Little Sport" is the title of a new Albert Ray-Elinor Fair comedy under way at the Fox plant. Lule Warrenton, George Hernandez, Leota Lorraine and Eugene Paulette complete the cast. Roy Klaffki is cameraman.

Here and There

Lieutenant Leslie Stuart, late of the Royal Field Artillery, at present playing an important part in Tom Moore's latest Goldwyn production, has suffered a relapse from a shrapnel wound received several months ago, which may necessitate an operation.

Harry Beaumont is directing the production of a film whose action is laid in England. Tom Moore is starred with Naomi Childers opposite. Herbert Standing, father of Wyndham Standing, has also been engaged for a character role in the production.

Director A. Barry has returned to the Goldwyn studios with Pauline Fredericks and company, after a week's stay in Berkeley, Cal., where they have been making scenes for a forthcoming production.

E. Richard Schayer, recently returned from overseas service, has been appointed head of the scenario department at the Brentwood studios. He is at present collaborating with King Vidor, director of Brentwood productions, on the next story to be staged by that company. No title has thus far been chosen for the new picture, but it has been announced that it will feature Florence Vidor, the producer's wife.

Schayer has a long list of photoplays to his credit, among them the screen version of Thomas Dixon's "The One Woman," several Stewart Edward White stories, and a number produced by the Paralta and B. B. Hampton companies.

C. H. Christie, of the Christie Film Company, has arranged with the Arrow Photoplay company of Denver, Colo., to distribute Christie films through that territory. Shipments have already left for Denver, including current one-reel subjects and the two-reel special releases, "Sally's Blighted Career" and "Rowdy Ann."

Under the direction of Lloyd Carleton, Ruth Clifford is at work in the production of a six-reel feature written especially for the company by Henry Christeen Warneck. The supporting cast includes Edward Coxen, opposite Miss Clifford, Andrew Robson, Richard Morris and Louise Fortune. Fred Hartman is photographing. No title has been assigned the production to date.

Frank E. Woods, supervising director for the Famous Players-Lasky company, is to leave Los Angeles May 7, for a three weeks' trip to New York.

Winifred Westover has been engaged by the American Film corporation to play leading roles opposite William Russell in forthcoming productions.

John Gilbert has been engaged by the Universal to play a leading part in Lynn Reynolds' production of the screen version of Joseph Medill Patterson's novel, "Little Brother of the Rich."

Virginia Kirtley of the past, who is now Mrs. Eddie Lyons, has had her pretty hilltop home done in cretonne for the summer. The color scheme will be announced later.

As we go to press, no local paper has carried the story that Nell Shipman has inherited two million dollars, and so we rise to inquire what happened to the press agent on the Coast.

William Desmond has grown much stouter on one cheek than when we last knew him. Bill says it's a tooth, and some mean individuals inquire whether his bride, Mary MacIvor, is that powerful in swinging a rolling-pin.

A mimeographed rumor reached HOOKUM that the P. A.'s are going to reorganize, or at least have a May party at a beach cafe. Clark Irvine is the instigator, and insists upon the old title of "The Screen Club."

Finis Fox wrote a continuity for Metro, and described one character as "the shadow of the poison ivy vine that prays upon the family trees." But what we intended to ask was ,"who named Finis—it's the last word in names, anyway."

The song-writing element of our colony threaten to have a contest on the preparation of lyrics for a new melody titled "Of All My Wife's Relations, I Love Myself the Best." Jack Kerrigan has promised to contribute and himself sing the song.

Speaking of the man who carries the theatre programs home to start his fire with, reminds us of an actor we know who collects all the candidate cards dropped in his automobile with the hope of some day starting a junk yard for scrap paper. Of course, we couldn't tell who the actor is.

One of our dailies pulled a bonehead this week when a compositor put an "o" in a word in the first syllable instead of a "u," and an "e" instead of an "a" in the last syllable. The studio wanted a musician, but instead a flock of semi-invalids called for engagements. The Spanish scene was not filmed that day.

The F. McGrew Willis Institute is the sign on a door in our building, and from a daintily printed brochure we learn this institution is to lead the motion picture industry out of the wilderness of poor stories by educating the uninitiated how to write for the screen by the direct detail method of plot writing. You came to a good building, McGrew.

Mary Anderson and Rosemary Theby, who knew each other at Brooklyn, which has 420 churches, met the other day at the Horsley studios and renewed acquaintances. They compared statistics on the number of miles of paved streets in Brooklyn, and are very proud they came from that town. The same evening Mary won the prize dance at the Southern California Theatre Owners' annual high jinks.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to February 16, 1919.

"The Border Legion" (Goldwyn)—"Not a good picture. Bates too old. Did not draw. Better stars would have been a knockout. Average business."

"Go West, Young Man" (Goldwyn)—"Well liked to big business."

"I Want to Forget" (Fox)—"She does not draw here. Fair picture."

"De Luxe Annie" (Select)—"Dandy picture to big business."

"Go West, Young Man" (Goldwyn)—"Average business."

"Fortune's Child" (Vitagraph)—"Average business."

"The Forbidden City" (Select)—"Extra big business two days."

"Woman" (States Rights)—"A wonderful beautiful production. Something different. Big business three days."

"Law of Men" (Paramount)—"A dandy picture to big business two days."

"Mickey" (States Rights)—"Return date two days to extra big business. Greatest drawing card we have ever had."

"Luck and Pluck" (Fox)—"Men like Mix. Women do not. Average business."

"The Indestructible Wife" (Select)—"Picture pleased and drew well."

"Life's a Funny Proposition" (Robertson-Cole)—"A picture that will please any audience. But it did not draw here. Average business."

"His Birthright" (Robertson-Cole)—"A fine picture but did not draw well."

NEW THEATRES BUILDING

CALIFORNIA

Benicia—Walter B. Crooks, an exhibitor here, announced that plans are completed for the erection of a new theatre in Benicia to seat 600 persons and cost about $15,000.

Santa Cruz—H. Green states that the new Hihn theatre to be erected at the corner of Walnut and Pacific streets in this city will seat 1,400.

ILLINOIS

Freeport—The site has been acquired for Freeport's new $150,000 theatre. It will be located on Chicago street and Spring and have a seating capacity of 1,500.

Oglesby—The contract has just been awarded for a new motion picture theatre to be built here. It will seat 500 persons.

INDIANA

Anderson—Two additional motion picture theatres will soon be erected here, according to announcements made. John Ryan proposes to erect a theatre adjacent to the Banner Grocery on Main street. It will seat 400 persons. Manager Lockwood of the Cozy theatre is said to be planning a new house on West Eighth street.

KANSAS

Topeka—Plans are announced for the erection of a new $100,000 theatre at 815-17-19 Kansas avenue by local theatre men.

MASSACHUSETTS

Springfield—On the site of the old opera house a new theatre seating 2,500 will be erected, it is reported, at a cost of $250,000. Abraham Goodside of Portland, Maine, is said to be behind the project.

MISSOURI

Jefferson City—Billy Mueller, manager of the Jefferson theatre, has recently become the owner and also will build another theatre here on High street adjoining the Masonic building.

NEW JERSEY

Woodbury—The Woodbury Amusement Company is erecting a theatre to cost $20,000.

NEW YORK

Brooklyn—A seating capacity of 3,200 will be provided for their new theatre at Bedford avenue and Lincoln place, according to announcements of Levy Brothers. The project is said to represent an investment of $500,000.

Hempstead—The Philip Realty Company is reported to have plans for the erection of a new 1,600-seat theatre opposite the Long Island Railroad station.

Herkimer—A $40,000 corporation has been formed to build a new motion picture theatre on the Griswold lot. W. T. Manion, T P. Griswold, Frank M. Baker, F. A. Fagen and John E. Windecker are the promoters.

New York City—B. S. Moss will erect a new theatre to seat 3,500 at Prospect avenue and 161st street, according to reports. It is scheduled for completion by next January.

Wellsville—The new Babcock theatre has been completed and has a seating capacity of 800. It took eight months to finish the building.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Dover—The new Strand theatre being erected by Harry Addition and Harris N. Shaw will occupy the site formerly occupied by the United States Hotel. The new foundations are already in.

OHIO

Cincinnati—The new Palace theatre now being erected on Sixth street has already installed the balcony, which will seat 1,600 persons, according to report.

Cleveland—The new Euclid theatre has been completed and opened to the public. It is located on East Ninth and Chestnut street, N. E., and has a seating capacity of 2,000. The cost is said to have been $400,000.

PENNSYLVANIA

Lykens—Lester G. Holtzman will erect a modern motion picture theatre on the Dr. Ulrich site, which he recently purchased.

Philadelphia—A capacity of 1,250 has been provided for the new motion picture theatre to be erected at 1524 to 1534 South street. —William Freihofer has commissioned an architect to draw plans for two new motion picture theatres to cost $350,000. One is to be located at Frankford avenue and Oxford lane and will seat 2,500. The other theatre will be located at Germantown avenue and Lehigh and will seat 3,500.—On the site of the old Tioga Convention Hall at Broad street and Allegheny avenue, a theatre will be erected that will seat 5,000 persons. Frank E. Cohen made the announcement.—The Stanley Company will erect a $1,000,000 motion picture theatre on the southwest corner of Nineteenth and Market streets with a seating capacity of 4,000.

RHODE ISLAND

Woonsocket—The Social Amusement Company has announced the site selected for the erection of its new 1,200-seat theatre. It will cost about $55,000 and have entrances on both Cumberland and Clinton streets.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Sioux Falls—Charles Sawyer has completed his new theatre here and named it the Liberty. It has been opened and has a seating capacity of 400.

The Precision Machine Co., Inc.
317 East 34th St
New York

Dear Sirs

I feel that it is my duty to tell you of the perfectly satisfactory service that I have received from the big "SIMPLEX" type S projector purchased through your concern over a year ago.

During the entire year the machine has been mounted on a heavy coaling truck, which is pulled from one part of the ship to the other every day to where they order the pictures shown, sometimes over gratings in the deck, over the raised bottoms of water tight doors and over places that make the machine subject to a great deal of vibration and jarring that would shake the spokes out of the wheels of a coal wagon.

During the firing of the big fourteen inch guns, also the five inch guns the machine sits right up on the gun deck, and within twenty feet of one of the five inch guns when it is fired eight and ten times in succession, and the same concussion and vibration coming from the firing of these guns tears ventilation pipes from the rivets and snaps half-inch rivets from the bulkheads of the compartments, but the SIMPLEX has gone through at least ten firings and to-day I will match the picture I am projecting against any theatre on the outside for steadiness, detail and beauty.

I am inclosing two pictures of the machine, so you can see what my four years projecting pictures in the U. S. Navy has proven to me to be the ideal way to mount a machine for service on board a battleship.

You may use the letter and pictures if you wish and I will be glad to show anybody the machine in operation any time the ship is in New York harbor.

Yours truly.
Olan L Hauck . Electrician

Convention of Managers of First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchanges, The Hotel Astor, New York, April 22, 1919

……

RESOLVED: That we, the undersigned managers of First National Exchanges, express to Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co. of Chicago, our appreciation for the splendid cooperation he has given us and for the extremes to which he and his organization have gone—far beyond the usual limits of business practice—to relieve emergencies and assist us in giving satisfactory service to our exhibitor customers.

FURTHERMORE: We feel that it is both merited and fitting that Mr. Rothacker be told that to each of us here it is a fact, proven by the statements of exhibitors to us, that no other group of exchanges can boast of prints with superior tinting and toning, with clearer definition, with more carefully printed lighting effects, or with greater quality in any particular, than that in the prints made by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co. for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

FURTHERMORE: The excellent system installed by Mr. Rothacker for filling emergency orders for replacements of short lengths of torn or destroyed scenes and titles operates greatly to our advantage in the promptness and accuracy with which they are filled.

FURTHERMORE: We know, from our experience in the past with the laboratory work of other concerns that the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co., in comparisons of quality, service, accuracy and promptness, eminently deserves the tribute of an uninterrupted continuation of all laboratory work for First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

FURTHERMORE: It is resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent to Mr. Rothacker, and to the Board of Directors for First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Signed: Harry Weiss, R. C. Seery, Chicago; Boyd Cunningham, Washington; W. E. Lusk, Cleveland; C. R. Beacham, Atlanta; James Skirboll, Pittsburgh; L. Bickel, Dallas; Jack Brainard, Oklahoma City; H. J. Fitzgerald, Milwaukee; Harry Scott, Detroit; J. F. Cubberly, Minneapolis; Lieut. Jim Anderson, Richmond; Lee Goldberg, Louisville; Tom Spry, Boston; J. H. Von Tilzer, New York; W. J. Heenan, Philadelphia; F. A. Fischer, Seattle; Floyd Brown, Indianapolis; F. W. Falkner, New Jersey; E. V. Richards, Jr., New Orleans, Percy Smith, Buffalo; Harry Nolan, Denver.

We have read the foregoing, and declare it to be a true copy of the original resolution.

"For Better, For Worse"

An ARTCRAFT Picture

"DeMille's Finest Achievement"

"There is no denying the artistic and commercial value of such a story. DeMille's direction has given it the tempo, distinction and perfect play of every feature required. A distinct advance for the man who directed it; rich in matter that lies close to the heart of today."—Edward Weitzel, in Moving Picture World.

"Any DeMille photoplay is a delight, but 'For Better, for Worse' seems just a little more so than its predecessors."—S. M. Weller, in New York Review.

"No Cupid's dart ever found its mark with greater accuracy than does DeMille in 'For Better, for Worse.'"—Motion Picture News.

"DeMille has come nearer to sounding a true note in 'For Better, for Worse' than in any of his others."—New York Times.

"The finest example of screen drama, as it should be made."—Exhibitor's Herald.

"Cecil DeMille has added a masterpiece to the studies of domestic problems."—New York Globe.

An ARTCRAFT Picture
Directed by ALBERT PARKER.

Twenty-three!

IT'S twenty-three weeks since a new Douglas Fairbanks-Artcraft picture was released.

In that twenty-three weeks, $264,000 has been spent in making the wallopingest Fairbanks' picture that ever saw the light of the screen.

They're waiting for him—they've been waiting these many weeks, and when they see him in "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" they'll come back and see it all over again.

They'll tell their friends and come along with them. Their friends will pass the good word along. They all want to see it.

Therefore—make your arrangements now for a run. It cost $150,000 more to produce than any previous Fairbanks picture. It's good for three times your ordinary run.

Paramount-Artcraft Special

From Arctic to Tropic

THE whole world is the stage for this great picture-drama of a woman's soul. Alaska, Southern France, Egypt, rural Scotland, India, London—these are the scenes through which the men and women of the picture-story play at their game of hearts.

Staged with all the sumptuous luxury and beauty at the command of a great director, Hugh Ford, and played by artists of real distinction, Katherine Macdonald, Milton Sills, Theodore Roberts, Jack Holt and Fritzi Brunette, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" offers an opportunity for exhibitors to cash in on a story with immense emotional appeal, beautifully acted, wonderfully staged and universally popular.

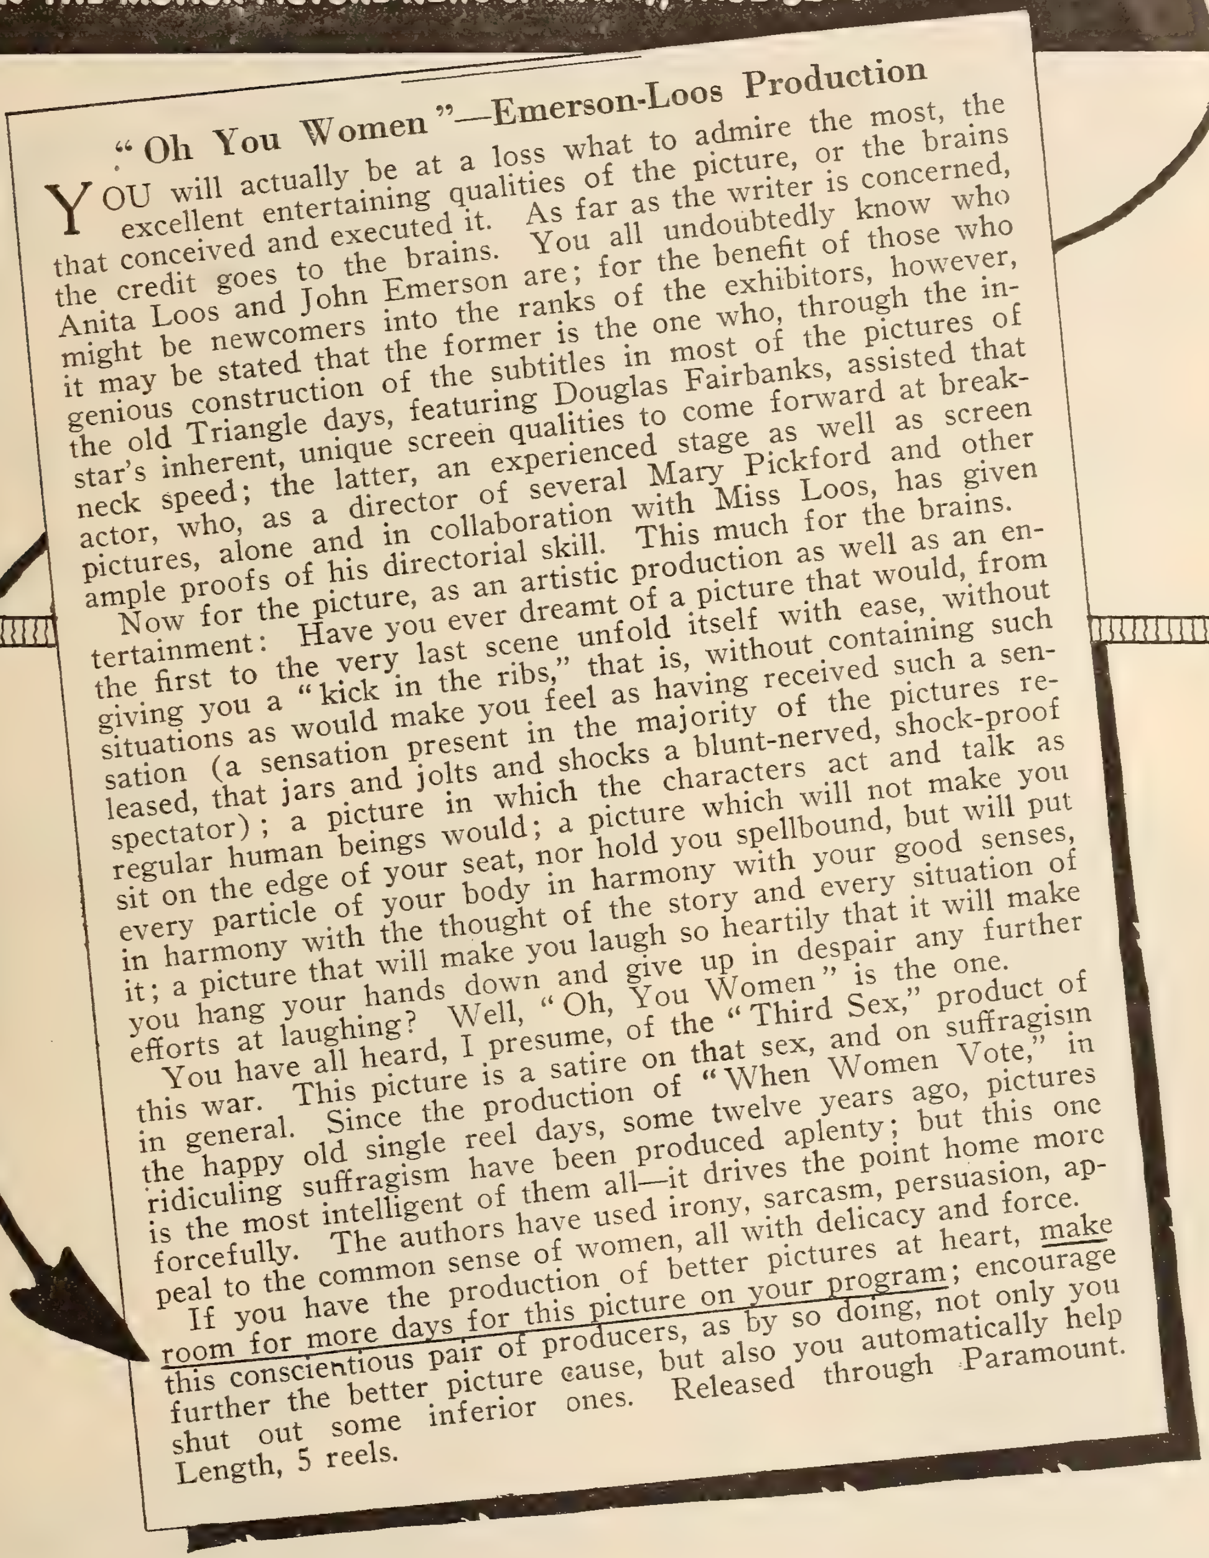
SOME EXCELLENT ADVICE FROM P.S. HARRISON

IN THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS of MAY 17, PAGE 3266



"Oh You Women"—Emerson-Loos Production

YOU will actually be at a loss what to admire the most, the excellent entertaining qualities of the picture, or the brains that conceived and executed it. As far as the writer is concerned, the credit goes to the brains. You all undoubtedly know who Anita Loos and John Emerson are; for the benefit of those who might be newcomers into the ranks of the exhibitors, however, it may be stated that the former is the one who, through the ingenious construction of the subtitles in most of the pictures of the old Triangle days, featuring Douglas Fairbanks, assisted that star's inherent, unique screen qualities to come forward at breakneck speed; the latter, an experienced stage as well as screen actor, who, as a director of several Mary Pickford and other pictures, alone and in collaboration with Miss Loos, has given ample proofs of his directorial skill. This much for the brains.

Now for the picture, as an artistic production as well as an entertainment: Have you ever dreamt of a picture that would, from the first to the very last scene unfold itself with ease, without giving you a "kick in the ribs," that is, without containing such situations as would make you feel as having received such a sensation (a sensation present in the majority of the pictures released, that jars and jolts and shocks a blunt-nerved, shock-proof spectator); a picture in which the characters act and talk as regular human beings would; a picture which will not make you sit on the edge of your seat, nor hold you spellbound, but will put every particle of your body in harmony with your good senses, in harmony with the thought of the story and every situation of it; a picture that will make you laugh so heartily that it will make you hang your hands down and give up in despair any further efforts at laughing? Well, "Oh, You Women" is the one.

You have all heard, I presume, of the "Third Sex," product of this war. This picture is a satire on that sex, and on suffragism in general. Since the production of "When Women Vote," in the happy old single reel days, some twelve years ago, pictures ridiculing suffragism have been produced aplenty; but this one is the most intelligent of them all—it drives the point home more forcefully. The authors have used irony, sarcasm, persuasion, appeal to the common sense of women, all with delicacy and force.

If you have the production of better pictures at heart, make room for more days for this picture on your program; encourage this conscientious pair of producers, as by so doing, not only you further the better picture cause, but also you automatically help shut out some inferior ones. Released through Paramount. Length, 5 reels.

All the Rex Beach speed, suspense and punch from start to finish. And a new setting—New Orleans of the Mardi Gras, under whose motley lie adventure, romance, passion, revenge—and happiness.

Against this background, Rex Beach has thrown a break-neck story of pursuit and conflict unequalled in any of his previous pictures. Its climax is the most ingenious and gripping situation of the year.

The spectacular beauty and excitement of the famous New Orleans carnival and a true all-star cast make this picturization of Rex Beach's famous novel an absolute special in all but booking price.

If you had to pay for "The Crimson Gardenia" what you pay for the whole Rex Beach Star Series, you would still be getting your money's worth—and more.

"Louis Bennison is sure to prove a delight in 'The Road Called Straight' and will furnish many a heart throb and thrill. The production looks as if all the money in the world was spent on some of the interiors. 'The Road Called Straight' is a corking picture from whatever standpoint one cares to view it."—Variety.

"By following 'The Road Called Straight' Louis Bennison has made a picture that will make many friends. Louis Bennison's personality makes his road to the heart of his public a straight one."—Moving Picture World.

A "Filler" That Fills

Almost any short subject can "fill" your program. There is only one that can fill your house—can put people in those few empty seats that mean the difference between failure and success.

The Ford Educational Weekly can do this by bringing you new patrons.

Not just people your competitor has had. If you can take them away from him, he can do the same to you.

NEW patrons—100 per cent new. People who don't ordinarily go to picture theatres. That is what you need and what the whole industry needs.

You can get these patrons with just one thing—the sort of film the newcomer likes and remembers and talks about—the scenic and industrial pictures of the Ford Educational Weekly.

The pre-eminence of the Ford product in its field is granted by every exhibitor who applies those two vital standards—quality and drawing power. The new patron recognizes this quality and becomes "a regular."

The name Ford is a guarantee to a vast army of Americans. The Ford Weekly draws new patrons as no other single unit in pictures.

Call it a "filler," if you like.

It will fill your theatre.

The Year's Most Luxurious

"When I find the woman I will kill her"

Motherhood—The thing that will not die!

Gowns and riches to whet the dreams of any woman who ever lived.

The Street of the Beggars in the Kingdom of Misery—the sweet, dream-laden odours of the East. The fumes and scents of the drugs of forgetfulness.

A love that whipped the strange devil in a beautiful woman and sent her back to look her husband and the world in the eye unafraid.

Special Production

Fascinating Paris—Enchanting Cairo. A sun-blistered, palm-clustered oasis in the sand-stung Egyptian Desert of Sahara.

An American civil engineer and his beautiful young wife, the most adored and admired woman of the world's gayest city, eating her heart out from sheer loneliness in the burning sand-sea, ruled by the mysterious Sphinx.

A fabulously wealthy Russian Baron, with the craft of the fox, weaving his dream of luxury and extravagance into the mind of a flattery-loving woman.

A deserted husband and wonderful child driven into the Street of the Beggars almost beside the walls of the opulent House of the Dawn, where the wife and mother fights the battle with her own conscience and again flees into the silent desert to remake the man whose mind and life she wrecked.

These are the stories that build the heart and mind-throbs of "SAHARA." Love and rejection. Temptation and flight. Conscience and maternal instinct. Retribution and reparation.

The drama awaits you. ENTER NOW!

"Have I made you happy?"

This "Writes the Ticket" on the Next Twelve Months in the Film Business.

1. The selling of individual pictures is the hot flame to burn the dross and slag out of the product of the film market.

2. As the number of pictures that the exhibitor supports no longer can be made to carry the weak ones, economic conditions will force a rearrangement of the plans of those who have been making film to support their producing and distributing machinery. This will mean consolidations, realignments and affiliations, particularly on the part of the smaller Producer-Distributor concerns if they are to successfully compete with a larger concern. Of greater importance to YOU, the Exhibitor, will be the fact that all of these concerns will, by the issuing of stocks or securities, place values on the basis of what they think THEY ought to have. And, as usual, they will call upon you to bear the burden of carrying them.

3. After these realignments there will be concentrated in the hands of the Producer-Distributor concerns a stream of quality product without which your theatre cannot exist. This product will be the life blood of your business. Economic conditions and modern merchandizing methods will then force the national operation of theatres, instead of individual operation and you must pay for this life blood with the virtual ownership of your theatre. In no other way can you satisfy the fictitious values placed by these Producer-Distributors on their businesses at this time and in no other way can these businesses exist after their long debauches of bidding against each other for stars, directors, books etc.

4. Only one concern in this business sees this condition clearly. Unthinkingly, you exhibitors have been helping create the very situation that menaces your independence. Only one concern has been building for years to meet this condition. Only one concern will, at the critical moment to you, as exhibitors, have a stream of life blood for your theatre that you will be able to obtain under conditions that will swell your profits instead of swallowing them. Only one concern will be able to use the general confusion for the exhibitor's and its own interest.

Don't you think it highly advisable to you to make a connection with this one, exceptional concern? Don't you think it advisable to support it while you can without injury to yourself, thereby establishing the contact with the stream of life blood that you are going to need, perhaps as quickly as the next six months?

In proof and support of these definite forecasts we have prepared one of the most dramatic books you have ever read about the motion picture business. It is entitled "12 Years" and will not be mailed to a general list. You must write to get a copy of it.

A MILLION DOLLAR MAN IS READY TO GO TO WORK FOR YOU

He is one of those outside big business men that the motion picture industry has been needing. He is a daring, imaginative producer-manufacturer. He understands the great American public intelligence. He has the feeling of an artist. He is sensitive, temperamental—and nervy. He piles on the costs to do the big things but, by the Eternal, he produces results.

His name is Benjamin B. Hampton. He knows the studio, the camera, the screen. He has deserted big business interests because he believes the motion picture to be the greatest thing in the world. He proved three years ago that he knew what you call "box office" by bringing, in association with Rex Beach, the powerful stories, "The Barrier" and "The Auction Block" leaping through your Powers and Simplex machines to turn in profits.

The biggest production advance made in the past two years is the inauguration of the

Benjamin B. Hampton Productions of Great Authors' Pictures Inc.

leading off with one of the greatest of all American stories by an author whose following runs into millions

The WESTERNERS

The photoplay of the novel by

STEWART EDWARD WHITE

Dynamically directed by EDWARD SLOMAN

and with an all-star cast of world-known screen favorites comprising ROY STEWART, MILDRED MANNING, ROBERT McKIM, WILFRED LUCAS, MARY JANE IRVING, GRAHAM PETTIE

Unless you keep "open time" in late June and early July for this production in your theatre, some outside daring showman will step in with "The Westerners" and sweep the town off its feet. Make your summer motto read: "Get every outside dollar inside the box-office."

Benjamin B. Hampton Productions are released under the stable, quality name and reputation of W. W. Hodkinson.

What 10 Great Newspapers Say About "AS A MAN THINKS"

New York Tribune:

"As a Man Thinks" goes to the very heart of the problem of human morals and shows how a frivolous wife, without guilt, makes her child's father doubt its paternity.

New York Sun:

A remarkable drama dealing with the single standard of morality; the story of a good woman in bad company.

Chicago American:

Augustus Thomas' "As a Man Thinks" shows the impossibility of a single sex standard unless the standard demands that men be as good as their wives.

Chicago Examiner:

Augustus Thomas has outdone himself in "As a Man Thinks." A story that thrills and grips the imagination.

Cincinnati Enquirer:

Augustus Thomas justifies his great reputation in "As a Man Thinks" . . . . Challengingly dramatic from its first gripping title to its climax.

New York Journal:

Augustus Thomas' best play is "As a Man Thinks." A vivid, human drama moving with intense interest and analyzing one of life's great problems as only a master can do it.

Philadelphia Ledger:

Here we have a tremendous sex problem treated with the hand of a master in portraying human emotion.

Chicago Journal:

"As a Man Thinks" tells one of the realest problems in life. The story shows how a good woman can cast doubt on the paternity of her child.

Minneapolis Journal:

The majority of America's so-called successful playwrights would give their souls to have written this great drama.

Indianapolis News:

A remarkable woman is the heroine of "As a Man Thinks." Everyone will want to see the story of Elinor Clayton.

Revolution!

The things that were and the things that are, are good only to build upon. When present conditions become intolerable we must either throw them off or sink under their weight.

For years the motion picture industry has been bound by traditions and customs, by practices and methods that have not only outlived their usefulness but that have fostered the growth of many burdensome evils. These we are casting from us, and are embarking on an era of progress and prosperity that demands full freedom of action.

In protest against the antiquated and obsolete methods of distribution which hindered their giving of the best in their power, Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D.W. Griffith, admittedly the four greatest individual producers of motion pictures, have cast off these shackles of yesterday and have organized to distribute their product on a basis that means absolute and complete independence for the exhibitor.

At Last—REAL Open Booking

United Artists Corporation, for the first time in the history of the industry, makes possible the booking of the supreme box-office attractions of the screen by the individual picture only.

Gone is the program, that relic of filmdom's dark ages, and its modern substitute, the star series. In their stead is the only sound basis on which an exhibitor can run his theatre—the booking of individual pictures on a standard of pure merit.

United Artists Corporation will deal with exhibitors by the single picture only. The booking of each release of each of the four producing units will constitute a separate and distinct transaction, so that at no time will there be any obligation that will prevent an exhibitor from running his own affairs in his own way, free from the dictates of those whose sole business it should be to serve him.

This is revolution—yes; but we are striking the blow for the exhibitor, not at him. We are tearing down a forest of dead wood and are planting in its place a new, live growth whose fruit will be greater profits for the exhibitor and the full liberty in which to benefit by those profits.

OSCAR A. PRICE, President
HIRAM ABRAMS, General Manager

MARY PICKFORD CHARLIE CHAPLIN

The Magic and Wonder of Their Art Have Made Them Supreme

Inspired artists, all, by every test and trial. They have no rivals; there are none to challenge the high places they hold; even imitation dares not aspire here. Each in a distinct field, bringing ever fresh creations, their permanent hold on that most fickle of all things, popularity, is the best evidence, were any needed, of the superlative quality of their art. They are what they are through sheer merit, set on the heights by the millions in whose esteem they will always stand unmatched.

Their Independence Gives Them Production Opportunities Undreamed of

That new and hitherto undreamed-of heights of production will be attained by these artists is assured. Each will produce but four pictures a year, taking time to realize so much that they have heretofore been unable to accomplish. Under their new arrangement, from script to screen their productions will have every resource and aid available, months for work where they had weeks before, and absolute freedom for the full expression of their own personality. The motion picture of today scarcely offers a standard by which the forthcoming productions, made under such conditions, can be judged.

·UNITED·ARTISTS·

Their Combined Following Is the Life Blood of Your Box-Office

How different might have been the story of the motion picture had it been denied the ineffable charm of Mary Pickford, the joyous adventurings of Chaplin, the breezy, lovable, two-fisted manhood of Fairbanks, or the searching study, the deep understanding, the inspiration of Griffith. Concentrated in the personalities of these artists are the elements that have made the motion picture the giant that it is. They are the very heart of the appeal that the screen makes to the masses. Their followers are the motion picture audiences of today.

Better Pictures Than Ever and Genuine Open Booking

All of this advance in production is to be backed by a selling policy equally progressive and far-reaching in its departure from time-worn, oppressive methods. Genuine open booking is here—the day in which the exhibitor may buy a single picture without any entangling agreements, conditions, obligations or penalties. It is the day of sound business, the application of common sense to motion picture rental, freedom for the producer and the exhibitor alike. United Artists Corporation opens wide its doors and discloses this new era in film commerce.

TRAVEL PICTURES: Pictures that people travel to see.

"They come blocks to see them" (Outing-Chester Pictures)—Hugh Andrews, The Lagoon, Minneapolis.

FROM SCALES TO ANTLERS–Three men go up into far northern Quebec, through a wild and beautiful mountain country, encountering fighting trout, friendly squirrels, inquisitive birds, timid deer and big lumbering Bull Moose. A picture that realizes the outdoor dream of every man, woman and child. Release No. 1.

TEDDY BIRDS—A glimpse of our former President, Theodore Roosevelt, among the bird life he loved, and then many absorbing minutes among bird families, close-up, with a typical American boy as the hero of this astonishing and appealing story of feathered Americans. Release No. 2.

BALLAHOOING ON THE ANARIKA—A journey into the mysterious back country of British Guiana, far up the Potaro, up the Essequibo, and then away up Anarika Creek, and many fascinating adventures along the way. Release No. 3.

MAIDS, MORE MAIDS AND MERMAIDS–Real American girls at their camp in the Maine woods, where they perform a hundred outdoor wonders each day. Slim, yet sturdy, they flash through the water in long dives, bend to the mutual drive of the canoe, dash over the plains on the backs of wiry ponies. An eye-opener for mere man! Release No. 4.

GUIDED AND MISS GUIDED—A young tourist lady bought a sweet mountaineering costume, hired two Swiss guides, and then invited us to go along. It must be admitted that the young tourist lady did not always perform as she had planned—in fact, at one time she may be seen attaining a mountain top by being dragged up ignominously like a sack of meal. But the picture is a masterpiece—to any one except the tourist lady. Release No. 5.

A WASWANIPAE WEEK END—Among the Indian trappers of the Hudson Bay region, who set their wits against the savagery and wile of panther, lynx, bear and wolf. From such woodsmen as these the world's fur trade obtains much of its enormous supply of pelts. Release No. 6.

UP IN THE AIR AFTER ALLIGATORS—Two daring young sportsmen get the hare-brained notion of hunting alligators in the Florida Everglades by aeroplane; so up like a hawk from Miami, over the land and down in the center of the dark and mysterious swamp wilderness. After a fierce struggle in the black waters, they fly off with a monster 'gator trussed up in the cockpit. Release No. 7.

MR. OUTING FLOATS A DREAM–Down on the warm bosom of the sleepy Amazon, where everything is like a dream, and life realizes the old foolish imaginings we all have had of the romantic traffic on the great river highway, the quaint people, and thronging animal life. Release No. 8.

CAMERARING THROUGH AFRICA, Thrill One—Charles Cottar, famous big game hunter, starts out in British East Africa on one of his astounding wild animal hunts. Several lions charge the camera, but never quite succeed in reaching it. One springs from cover at Cottar himself, and is downed by him with his head almost at the hunter's feet. These are close-up pictures, and in the opinion of everyone who has seen them, by far the most sensational that have ever come out of Africa. Release No. 9.

CAMERARING THROUGH AFRICA, Thrill Two—Cottar continues his hunt, filming hippopotami by the herd, crocodiles, and many other features of African game life, including, at the end, a large number of belligerent rhinoceroses that charge straight at the camera, but are unfailingly stopped just before they reach the tripod. Release No. 10.

ITASCA MAKES HER BOW—The Mississippi River has its source in Lake Itasca, where it begins as a tiny streamlet which any boy can jump over. Many interesting forms of animal life are encountered on our trip, and a great forest fire puts a beautiful and impressive end to it. Release No. 11.

OUT-COLUMBUSING COLUMBUS—We admit that Columbus discovered quite a bit, but the camera man proves that he overlooked many highly interesting things—even on the West Indian Island where he encountered his first land in the Western Hemisphere. Release No. 12.

GETTING GAY WITH NEPTUNE—It takes a bevy of girls to get gay with the old fellow, and they do it to the satisfaction of everyone, cutting up all sorts of capers in his private ocean, completely shattering his dignity and that of the audience. A "girl" picture of a new sort. Release No. 13.

WHERE THE SCREEN TREE GROWS—The story of an earnest search for the land of the heron—the classic heron we always see painted on Japanese screens. And at last the discovery of the very bird, in the queer country where Men-o'-war perch up on trees! Release No. 14.

WRANGLING DUDES—You've heard of a "Dude ranch"—one of those super-wild and excessively wooly Montana ranches where they do a rushing business "taking in" Eastern tenderfeet. Of course they have to stage daily "hold-ups" and "murders" and things or the "dudes" will want their money refunded. Release No. 15.

HERE COMES THE GROOM—Among the Zulus the bride doesn't amount to much—a few cows paid her father and he is content. But the groom leads a busy life. He has to pursue his intended over the prickly stubble fields. He has to fight off rivals. He dresses all up in a necklace and sweats around, cutting up a lot of necessary foolishness he'll cut out soon as they're spliced. A great picture for your women patrons. Release No. 16.

PIKING AFTER PIZARRO—Pizarro got more gold from the billionaire Incas of Peru than all the other "discoverers" put together, and thinking this over fired us with an ambition to go down there and repeat the performance. We were pikers, perhaps, in that we would have taken much less—and gosh! what a lot less we got! Release No. 17.

MR. OUTING CLIMBS ABROAD—Down at the great Victoria Falls the enormous number of temperance drinks going to waste makes us think suddenly of prohibition, so we let the cataract roar and journey hopefully across the desert to the home of that staunch dry champion, the camel. Here we learn a lot and witness many undreamed of things. Release No. 18.

"JUST SQUAW"—ROBERTSON-COLE

Beatriz Michelena Returns to the Screen in Western Melodrama

THE outstanding feature of this new Robertson-Cole offering is found in the return of Beatriz Michelena to the screen after a long absence. It cannot be denied that the silent drama lost one of its best delineators of Western stories during her retirement and by consenting to grace the silver sheet again she will undoubtedly renew her popularity that was established in such plays of calibre as "Salomy Jane," "The Unwritten Law," and "Salvation Nell."

In "Just Squaw" the star is called upon to impersonate one of the well remembered characters of yesterday—a white girl who is supposed to have a strain of Indian blood in her and which erects a racial barrier against a solution of love and a communion of spirit until her true ancestry is established in the final scene.

Really an old-fashioned idea, but one which has been developed with enough novelty in plot and characterization as to make it seem quite up to date. The pulse of the story throbs with melodramatic beats and its elemental character suffices to make it active to the finish. The figures in the drama are equally divided in the path that separates virtue from villainy and those that follow the upright standards are triumphant eventually. Be it said that some good old rousing action takes place which is indicated in desperate fights and stage-coach robberies. This ingredient running neck and neck with that of romance saturates the picture with suspensive interest and heart appeal.

The Western scenery which has been chosen for backgrounds is appropriate and picturesque, and the action is so set against it that the spirit of primeval, inanimate nature and the spirit of the wild drama seem to blend. What more could be asked?—Length, 5 reels.—Distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual.—Laurence Reid.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW Says—

Just Squaw

By HELEN ROCKWELL

In this release Beatriz Michelena returns to the screen after quite an absence. The feature is a stirringly melodramatic one. Its scenes are laid in the Bad Land of the West, its characters are superlatively rich in virtues or black in crimes, as the case may be, and its action embraces fights, stage coach robberies, chases on horse-back and all the other western requisites from six-shooters to half-breed Indians. It is a picture that will appeal because of its virility, and because the villains get their just deserts, and everything turns out right for the hero and the heroine, who are molested through so many feet of film. It is entertainment that is thoroughly alive and enlivening. The author and director have done a thorough job in keeping the story consistently wild and woolly.

There is an appeal about the feature which will make itself felt with fans who crave excitement, thrills and carefully laid suspense. There is a fight scene in the last few minutes of the film that will make the gallery boys stand up and whistle!

Beatriz Michelena is seen as a half-breed Indian girl who discovers she is "white" in time to accept the hero's offer of marriage. She is a lovely and picturesque figure in her Indian robes, and plays with spirit and feeling. As the half-breed brother, Albert Morrison acts the part though he doesn't look it, and Andrew Robson as Snake LeGal—there's a villainous name for you—is sufficiently convincing in a wicked role. Lovely western locations add tremendously in making the feature appeal to the vision as well as to the emotions. Exhibitors will find that this is a western feature likely to hit the popular fancy.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD Says—

"Just Squaw"

Beatriz Michelena Sustains Reputation for Skillful Interpretation in Production for Exhibitor's Mutual.

Reviewed by Margaret I MacDonald.

THE performance of Beatriz Michelena, the well-known stage star, in "Just Squaw" a five-part Western Melodrama appearing on the Exhibitors Mutual Schedule is but a repetition of the colorful work which has characterized her former screen efforts. The production is wholesome and entertaining, and will appeal to the average audience, particularly because of the work of the star, who gives a notably graceful portrayal of the role of an Indian-reared white girl. The story is set in the beautiful hill country of the West, and its traditional bad men are convincingly impersonated. Andrew Robson heads the list as Snake LeGal. The role of the half-breed is well interpreted by Albert Morrison.

PROOF!

A PROGRESSIVE advertising manager of one of the leading distributors has recently completed an exhaustive questionnaire of the organization's branch managers on the circulation and value of the motion picture trade papers.

The methods followed were careful and deliberate; the results are convincing beyond all question or doubt.

The questionnaire places MOTION PICTURE NEWS far ahead of the field in circulation, in reading matter, and in influence. The answers place MOTION PICTURE NEWS far at the top as the choice of these branch managers, should this corporation decide to confine its advertising to one paper.

The results prove conclusively that it is the opinion of the men in the field that the manufacturers could secure far greater results by the use of larger space in a few publications rather than by the thin spreading of advertising to cover all mediums soliciting picture advertising.

There is real meat and immense value to every manufacturer and advertising manager in the figures tabulated on the opposite page. In itself, this questionnaire points the way to a more efficient use of every advertising dollar spent; to a saving of many dollars.

The questionnaire points also to a method by which You can test the value of the mediums in the field. And when your test proves that MOTION PICTURE NEWS " Dominates the Field "—back up your test by concentrating your advertising in—MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

[For obvious reasons it has been necessary to withhold the name of the distributor in the following report, and to delete the names of other publications. A copy of the report is on file in MOTION PICTURE NEWS office, however.]

Mr. ————.

I have just finished compilation of reports from the branch managers on the motion picture trade papers, and I am submitting these figures for your information.

In sending out a questionnaire on the subject of motion picture trade papers the branch managers were asked to confer with their sales force and to submit completely unprejudiced reports in a general way as to their opinion on the value of the various publications in the field as advertising medium. For the purpose of the questionnaire they were asked to consider nine publications.

They were asked to list the three papers which were most widely circulated in their territory in one, two order, and they reported as follows:

FIRST

Motion Picture News	15
Other Publications	5 4 2 1

SECOND

Motion Picture News	10
Other Publications	9 8

This would indicate very clearly so far as circulation is concerned the News easily runs first.

It is often the experience of space buyers that a publication may have circulation and still lack readers. For that purpose I asked the branch managers to report on what publications they believed the exhibitor read, the reports being as follows:

FIRST

Motion Picture News	13
Other Publications	8 4 1 1

SECOND

Motion Picture News	12
Other Publications	8 16 1

Then for purposes of determining prestige I asked them to report what publication they felt carried the most influence with the exhibitor in the territory and the reports were:

Motion Picture News	11
Other Publications	8 6 2

I asked the branch managers to express an opinion, if they were limited to one publication, which one they would select. This question, I believe, the most important in the questionnaire in that it pinned the branch manager down to a definite statement of opinion on which publication he felt would be of most use to him if we were to concentrate our advertising in one paper. They reported as follows:

Motion Picture News	17
Other Publications	7 4

The branch managers reported 23 to 4 in favor of a larger amount of space in a small list of publications as more valuable to sales effort.

These reports were submitted from 28 of the 29 branches. The original replies to questionnaire are on file and are available to you any time that you may ask for them.

Respectfully submitted,

————————,

Director of Publicity.

The Question of Stories

CHARLES PATHE visits the United States only too seldom. Further, the industry sees too little of him when he is in this country. Mr. Pathe brings a viewpoint broadened by a perspective that it is possible for none of us on these shores to secure. We are too close to the daily grind.

On the occasion of each visit, however, Mr. Pathe usually consents to issue a single statement concerning his observations of conditions in the industry on this side of the water.

Our memories of these statements go back to the days when Pathe was releasing through General Film and we journeyed to the famous address, "1 Congress Street, Jersey City," to meet the distinguished film pioneer. And on each occasion we have been struck with the clear insight and broad vision that has characterized Mr. Pathe's observations.

The statement issued this week is no exception. On one point in particular it strikes us as pointing the way to a solution of one of the industry's pressing problems.

A Royalty Basis for Authors

MR. PATHE'S observations on the impossibility of effecting monopoly in the picture industry are interesting and true; his praise of Mr. Brunet will be echoed by all of us. But the broadest possibilities are unfolded in his declaration that:

"A lack of specialization in scenarios is our most evident weakness. It seems to me that the greatest possibilities of the screen will not be secured until the authors creating for the screen and the directors are rewarded on a royalty basis, just as playwrights and novelists are now rewarded in proportion to the success of their efforts."

There is a thought here that is big in potentialities. Many signs have pointed toward a development of the royalty idea in picture production. The prominent authors releasing through W. W. Hodkinson are vitally interested in the success of their product; directors are numerous who have arrangements akin to royalties.

But Mr. Pathe's words hint at a broader application of the principle. They point to a hastening of the day when the screen will no longer merely adapt from the stage, magazine and book, but will encourage the creative brains of the country to prepare its wares directly and originally for the motion picture.

Check Off the Date—June 18th

EVERY energy that MOTION PICTURE NEWS can bend to the purpose is gladly placed at the disposal of the committee planning a testimonial dinner to Sydney Cohen, Samuel I. Berman and Charles L. O'Reilly.

The stated purpose of the testimonial to these three gentlemen is, "In recognition of their untiring efforts to legalize the exhibition of motion pictures on Sunday in New York state."

But the real purpose, it strikes us, is deeper than that. The dinner is a testimonial, in our opinion, to three men who have shown that 100 per cent exhibitor organization, free from internal politics, can accomplish miracles in securing justice from legislators.

The dinner, it strikes us, is to three men who have shown that 100 per cent exhibitor organization is possible—to three men who have given the industry an inspiration.

Striking a different level, it might be said that the dinner is only part payment on a debt of gratitude owed to three sincere, unselfish workers by every producer, distributor and exhibitor in New York State.

But at any rate, if you want to give impetus to film organization in every section of the country—mark the date on your calendar now. It is June 18th—the place, the Waldorf-Astoria.

Warming Up for Fall

FILM men have never seen a year in the industry's history more feverish in its preparations for the fall season. New theatres are planned on all sides; more elaborate production plans seem to be under way in every studio.

Of interest, therefore, is the initial announcement this week of the "Big Four," bringing the news that their first subject will be ready September 1st.

It may be expected that Hiram Abrams' announcement that each picture of the organization will be booked singly will meet with a hearty reception from exhibitors. Mr. Abrams' experience has brought him in touch with every angle of the industry; in recent months he has had unusual opportunity to observe conditions throughout the country.

The decision in favor of a wide open market seems, therefore, another bit of evidence, added to the cumulative events of the past few months pointing to a lively, spirited and healthy fall season for the industry.

Dealing in Personalities

If one more picture organization will only stage a convention now and invite out of town exhibitors we will be able to meet every showman in the country without stepping out of Times Square. Sam Rothapfel and Frank Hall did the trick for us last week and when we arrived in the Astor lobby at Friday noon we found exhibitors on all sides. It isn't a bad idea in a business way, either, if we can believe the reports we heard regarding the contracts for the Unit Programme signed after the showing at the Rialto.

Ran into Harry Crandall first of all and congratulated him on his new publicity man, Nelson Bell. Harry made some pertinent observations:

"Bigger and better theatres are coming in every section; productions are getting more elaborate and costly. We are in a boom reconstruction era and the answer seems to me that the exhibitor must devote more attention than ever to his publicity and advertising. Comparatively speaking publicity has been neglected by most in the past; but the exhibitor who neglects it in the future will be lost in the shuffle."

Then a few days later we met B. F. Fineman, who has left the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to embark on some ambitious state rights plans. And learned that Bernie has some ideas along the line of special and individual exploitation for exhibitors on his features.

Just because we heard that the Big Four was going to make its announcement this week the Big Five—Blaisdell, Mason, Dannenburg, Jim Beecroft and Yours Truly—got busy last Friday and entertained once more. J. D. Williams and Harry Schwalbe were this time the guests of honor. Following the "get acquainted luncheon," the party adjourned to First National's projection room and witnessed a one-reel comedy masterpiece. But we have been sworn to secrecy—until the ad department gets ready to break the news.

J. A. Quinn, the Los Angeles exhibitor who stirred up things around these parts with some articles in Motion Picture News, is in town.

Mr. Quinn has some ambitious plans. A cooperative studio is one, while another is a modest plan for a sort of Motion Picture Board of Trade that would uplift production methods and results and trample on a few of the many abuses in the game.

Results of Mr. Quinn's talks with the manufacturers in New York will be watched with interest.

As we go to press all is mystery regarding the results of the Famous Players-Lasky convention. But prophets are many who will volunteer their own opinion regarding the news that should break next week. The most frequent guess heard is that Famous Players-Lasky will declare for the open market and a curtailment of the number of releases. All of which, as we have said so often before, should help along the gayety of nations.

H. J. Reynolds, of Renco Film, Chicago, was a visitor to our fair city during the week just past.

Another Chicagoan whom we met during the week is Fred L. Wilke, president of Continental Pictures. Mr. Wilke is making the Jess Willard picture.

We hear that Will Rogers will again become a Goldwyn star at the close of his present Ziegfeld Follies season.

Willard Patterson, manager of the Criterion at Atlanta, is still in our midst.

From Kansas City comes news that Frank Newman's big new house will open on June 1. It will be known as the Newman Theatre, with M. H. Feld the manager in charge. From all reports the house will be a beauty. It will seat two thousand.

Our recent query, "Who Started This Open Market, Anyway?" brings this reply from Bre'er A. F. Dittmann, of Brownsville, Texas: "Who cares? Is it a Patent? What good is it, anyway?" Golly, Mister Dittmann, you shock us. If we were releasing pictures ourselves we'd have to pound the typewriter for several pages to get the shock out of our system. But since we are not releasing we will merely put the query up to those who are. And the blame be on your head, Mr. Dittmann, if we are buried 'neath 'steen columns of publicity.

Arthur Levey, film exporter and importer, sails for England on the Mauretania this Saturday.

H. B. Wright, former salesman in the Seattle territory, is now associated with James Q. Clemmer, of the Clemmer Theatre, that city.

Film men who attended the Boston exhibitors' convention will probably remember meeting Bill Wright's nephew, Sergeant Ralph H. Rowe, then preparing to sail for France. Here's a story they will enjoy reading:

A helmet that once adorned the head of a member of the Prussian Guards will find a resting place for the years to come on the library wall of the Mountain Lakes, N. J., home of Bill Wright, of Vitagraph, formerly secretary and treasurer of the Kalem Company.

The helmet is a present from Bill's young cousin, Sergeant Ralph H. Rowe, recently returned from France, and with it goes an interesting and humorous tale of how he got it. Some time before the armistice a squad in charge of Sergeant Rowe captured a German patrol in the Argonne. Rowe spied the good looking dress helmet on one of the prisoners and remembering suddenly Mr. Wright's last admonition to bring back a German helmet, he demanded it of the Boche.

The latter refused and showed fight. A ring was cleared and with another Yank acting as referee they went at it. Young Rowe polished off the Hun in quick time and took the helmet.

From the coast comes a crisp news budget. It is topped with the announcement that Thomas Ince has signed Douglas MacLean and Doris Lee May as co-stars to Paramount releases beginning in August. Six stories have already been purchased for the pair, at a cost of $67,000.

Then we hear that Mary Pickford has purchased a hundred thousand dollars' worth of Victory Bonds. That the total purchased by the industry in Los Angeles was nine hundred thousand, while an equal amount was sold to the public by the picture folk.

Our next times tells that Geraldine Farrar and Lou Tellegen arrived in Los Angeles on Wednesday, prepared to start on their first Goldwyn production as co-workers.

Follows a statement that Rollin Sturgeon has signed a one year contract to produce for Universal.

Then a bit of real news in the declaration that Chester Conklin has been engaged for Fox Sunshine Comedies by Hampton Del Ruth.

A hot last minute rumor says that Sid Chaplin has signed with Paramount at $200,000 per negative.
Take it or leave it—suit yourself.

"Single Picture" Policy For the "Big 4"

In First Official Announcement Regarding Booking Plans Declaration Is Made for Wide Open Market—September Will Bring Fairbanks in Initial Release

SIXTEEN pictures a year, all booked on an individual basis, with the first release scheduled for September 1, sums up the first official announcement of the United Artists Association issued this week. The long awaited declaration of policy is emphatic for open market booking of the productions made by the "Big Four"—Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charles Chaplin and David Griffith.

"The product of the United Artists Association will be released and rented solely by the individual picture," is the flat statement made in the announcement. Four pictures a year will be released for each of the members of the "Big Four," with Fairbanks leading the way in September. There will be no attempt at series booking, either by single stars or other combinations.

"No Strings to It"

The initial statement bears the signatures of Oscar A. Price, president, and Hiram Abrams, general manager. It declares:

"United Artists Corporation will deal with exhibitors by the single picture only. The booking of each release of each of the four producing units will constitute a separate and distinct transaction, so that at no time will there be any obligation that will prevent an exhibitor from running his own affairs in his own way, free from the dictates of those whose sole business it should be to serve him."

In a supplementary statement Hiram Abrams emphasized the fact that while open booking has been talked about for years and so-called open booking plans have been tried and tried again, genuine open booking had not been attempted on a broad scale heretofore because producers and distributors lacked confidence in their product.

"During the last year and a half," said Mr. Abrams, "I have personally made five trips that have carried me over the entire country for the purpose of sounding out exhibitors on every phase of film rental. To everyone with whom I have discussed the matter, it is so obvious that the program system and the star series system are for the sole purpose of protecting the 'weak sisters' on release lists, that I marvel that producers and distributors persist in these practices when the entire trade knows why they exist.

"It is unsound business to force weaker attractions on to an exhibitor's program as a premium on the rental of a good attraction. Exhibitors should not be obliged to play inferior shows as part of the price of getting superior films, nor should big stars be penalized by making them carry the load of lesser attractions.

"We intend to market the pictures of the United Artists individually, picture for picture, each production on its own merits. We will not contract for more than one picture at a time, and no exhibitor will be obligated to run one set of pictures in order to procure the releases of another artist.

"I cannot emphasize too strongly the fact that we will deal in single pictures only. We will not sell in any other way.

"Hundreds of exhibitors, of all classes, have assured us that our plan is what they have been waiting for these many months. We believe that the exhibitors of the country are business men first, and we are going to deal with them on a sound business basis. They will be able to come to us as independent buyers, take what they want, and pass up what they do not want.

Hiram Abrams

"It will be our task to make every production so superlatively good that each will find its ready market. If we do not make pictures of the highest quality, we will suffer the loss, not the exhibitors, who, under the program or star series systems, are obliged to take the poor with the good, to their own loss.

"Right here let me point out the wholesome influence our system will have over the entire picture business, from production to exhibition. Miss Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and Mr. Griffith know that each of their offerings must be marketed individually and that each and every picture must therefore be the very best their art makes possible. In realization of this, the United Artists have surrounded themselves with conditions that make for perfect production. They will have ample time in the making of each picture and they will produce with their whole heart in the work. Thus is every production guaranteed to be as good as the artist can make it. If the entire industry produced on such a basis, programs and star series systems would be unnecessary.

"And there is the further thought that this system of production and our system of releasing would soon kill off the overproduction that is sapping the industry's energies and resources. It would be solely 'the survival of the fittest' and not the everlasting supporting of the weak and the self-appointed.

"We are coming into the field, then, one hundred per cent equipped for real business. From this day forward, the Pickford pictures, the Chaplin pictures, the Fairbanks pictures and the Griffith pictures that we will release, supreme attractions of the screen, will be produced and distributed so that, picture for picture, they will give to every exhibitor the greatest possible volume of profits. Truly, a new era in the motion picture industry has begun."

Executive offices have been opened at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, in the former General Film quarters, and already bookings on the Fairbanks subject are being recorded.

Percy L. Waters Elected President of Triangle

Before the directors of the Triangle Film Corporation met last week, Percy L. Waters was vice-president and general manager.

After the directors of that organization met and the distributing branch also went into session, Percy L. Waters became president and general manager of both the Triangle Film Corporation and the Triangle Distributing Corporation.

Mr. Waters has been a film man for nearly twenty-five years. He has maintained the Triangle connection since a year ago. He was active in organizing the General Film Company when motion pictures was an infant and was affiliated with General for about five years.

No radical or immediate changes in Triangle operations are announced. The present plan of one feature a week will be maintained. There are twenty-five Triangle exchanges throughout the country.

Picture Officials Attend Ottawa Meeting

The twenty-third annual meeting of the National Fire Protection Association was held in Ottawa, Canada, May 6th-8th, when representatives of the motion picture industry were in attendance and actively participated in the deliberations.

The convention was of special interest to the motion picture industry owing to the proposal for adopting scientific rules for the storage and handling of motion picture films.

The rules promulgated by the association are said to be accepted generally by the underwriting interests throughout the country as standards upon which their rates are based.

Plan Dinner to Sunday Show Workers

WITH William Fox as the energetic chairman, a committee representative of the entire industry is rapidly being organized to arrange a testimonial banquet to Sydney L. Cohen, Charles L. O'Reilly and Samuel I. Berman, the three New York exhibitors, for their untiring efforts to legalize the exhibition of motion pictures on Sunday in this state.

The Grand Ball room of the Waldorf-Astoria is the place selected; the date, June 18th.

Mark it off on your calendar now!

For William Fox is guarantee for the fact that the dinner will be the most elaborate ever held in the motion picture industry. Every producer and distributor will be represented on the committee staging the affair; every section of the state will have its exhibitor representation. An attendance of one thousand is conservatively estimated.

At a meeting on Wednesday of the temporary committee, William Fox was named chairman; Charles Haring, secretary, and Louis Blumenthal, treasurer. Headquarters will be at Mr. Haring's office, 1587 Broadway. John Zanft, of the Fox organization, will be associated with Mr. Fox in the active handling of the affair. Lee Kugel, of the World Company, has been named publicity director. William Brandt, the Brooklyn exhibitor, previously named chairman of a dinner planned by the New York City exhibitors, generously stepped aside to allow Mr. Fox to handle a dinner that would be state-wide and representative of all the industry.

It is expected that a complete committee will be named in time for publication in next week's issues of the trade publications.

Many distinguished state and city officials will be in attendance, while the committee is working on surprise features that will make the dinner a unique one in film annals, and one in every way commensurate with the achievements on behalf of the industry of the three guests of honor.

The price of the dinner has been set at ten dollars a plate. Many ladies will be in attendance at the banquet, while the seats in the Astor Gallery, overlooking the banquet tables, will also be available to those members of the fair sex who do not care to attend the dinner. These seats will be sold at $2.50 each.

Canadian Meet Proves Success

First Annual Gathering at Toronto Sees Many Things of Interest Occur—Banquet Ends Two-Days' Convention

THE convention of Canadian exhibitors held at Toronto, Ontario, on Monday and Tuesday, May 5 and 6, was an unqualified success. It was the first annual gathering for moving picture theatre men from all parts of Canada and it was called at the instance of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario, presumably the largest and strongest of the exhibitor organizations in Canada. The attendance of one hundred and ninety-four exhibitors and other representatives was recorded during the two days, a great number visiting the city from Ontario points. The membership role of the Ontario association totals a few more than two hundred and only a few of the active members of the organization were not present.

The announcement was made during the session that more than half of the capital stock of the new Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange Company, Limited, the co-operative distributing company formed by the Ontario exhibitors' association, had been subscribed. The total capitalization of the company is $100,000 and more than $50,000 has been "covered."

On the second day of the convention, which was held in the Sons of England Hall, the permanent directors for the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange were elected by the share holders by a secret ballot, the vote resulting in the selection of the following: J. C. Brady of Toronto, president of the Ontario association; H. Alexander, Toronto; Thomas Scott, Toronto; Dr. R. J. Richardson, Toronto; A. A. Cooper, Huntsville; H. P. Redway, J. S. Smart, Port Hope, and L. Ludwig, a Toronto barrister. The scrutineers were Messrs. Brady and Ludwig.

One of the prominent visitors at the convention was Mr. Y. M. Franklin of Halifax, representing the Maritime Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association. Mr. Franklin announced that his association had adopted a resolution to the effect that none of its members would book films from exchange companies which operated their own theatres in opposition to those controlled by the independent exhibitors. The members of the Maritime association also have refused to book films under a contract which does not contain a thirty-day cancellation clause.

Letters were read from various Government officials and others in which appreciation was expressed over the assistance extended by the exhibitors for various war and charity campaigns and movements. The Federal Government had been petitioned to repeal the fifteen cent reel tax but the step had not yet been taken by Parliament. Mention was also made of various concessions secured from the Ontario Government, including a new law which permits the admission of unaccompanied children to theatres on certain days. These had been secured mainly through the co-operative effort of the exhibitors' association of Ontario.

A big banquet was held at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, on the Monday evening, when over one hundred exhibitors and guests occupied places at the tables. Two orchestras of six pieces each were in attendance and the artists included some of the best vocalists in Canada. The evening concluded with dancing. Among the dinner speakers were Chairman J. C. Brady, Y. M. Franklin of Halifx, Dr. R. J. Richardson of Toronto and Mr. Ludwig, the legal adviser of the exhibitors' association.

Stern on Trip

Abe Stern, secretary and treasurer of the L-Ko Motion Picture Kompany, made a hurried trip to the West Coast studios of the company at Los Angeles last week. The trip was a suddenly planned and executed affair, and therefore smacks of something interesting.

Managers Form Association in South

The Southeastern Managers association was recently organized at a convention held in Atlanta, Ga., and officers were elected as follows: President, Willard C. Patterson, of Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga., Vice-President, Percy Wells, Wilmington, N. C., Secretary, Ben Lee Smith, Tudor theatre, Atlanta, Ga., Treasurer, H. L. Cardoza, representative of the Wells interests in Atlanta.

Executive committee: E. A. Schiller, representative of Loew's interests, chairman; Frank Miller, Augusta, Ga.; Walter Brockin, Bambridge, Ga.; Joe Burton, Toccoa, Ga.; E. L. Stringer, Marietta, Ga.; W. S. Mudd, Birmington, Ala.; and George Warner, Columbia, S. C.

There were representatives of the leading movie houses present from Georgia, Florida, Alabama, and the two Carolinas. Many matters of interest to the exhibitors were discussed. The purpose of the association is to work for the betterment of the industry and for mutual protection of the exhibitors' interests. The meeting was an executive one.

Declares "Fit to Win" Is Highly Educational

In refutation of charges made by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry that the film "Fit to Win" is unfit to see, Surgeon General Rupert Blue of the United States Public Health Service has sent a telegram to the Censorship committee of the Association, declaring the picture to be highly educational, and screened with the fullest authority and endorsement of the Federal Government.

General Blue agrees to confer with the National Association on its offer to exhibit "Fit to Win" free of charge, provided such exhibition is made at the usual hours that moving picture theatres are open and that the association also provides all necessary advertising accessories.

Charles Pathe Sees No Film Monopoly

Noted Frenchman Says Monopoly Is Impossible in Business Because There Can Be No Monopoly of Creative Force—Lack of Scenario Specialization the Great Menace

IN an interview given to a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Mr. Pathe, who is one of the real pioneers of the industry since its inception and has seen it grow from a toy to a great instrument of education and amusement, declares, that he has seen individuals, one after another, endeavor to secure a monopoly of the business and has always refused to be a party to their attempts. The scenario, says Mr. Pathe, is a very important factor in the production of pictures, but the independent producer who has a good story, adapted to the screen and who produces it adequately, and there will always be such, he says, will have no difficulty in finding a distributor for his film. Mr. Pathe also observes with interest the success with which Pathe Exchange has distributed pictures under the open booking plan during the last twelve months and states that it has given most excellent results.

One Cannot Control

"No individual, no organization, can hope to control the motion picture business," said Mr. Pathe when seen at his office by a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS a short time after his arrival to this country. "Creative skill is not given to one person or a few. The history of the business proves that exhibitors desire to present good pictures to their patrons without regard to the trademarks which they bear. Good films do not depend so much upon their stars as they do upon the stories which they depict, and their directors. There can be no monopoly of the imagination which creates the story or that which realizes it before the motion picture camera.

"The independent producer who has a good story, adaptable to the screen, and who produces it adequately (and there will always be such producers) will have no difficulty in finding a distributor for his film. Monopoly in our industry would have the effect of impeding its progress; there would be no encouragement toward constant improvement in quality. Competition inevitably insures progress. We may all hope for better pictures and a satisfactory growth in business as long as the door is open to individual effort and I fail to see how it can be closed.

Serious Menace to Business

"The most serious menace to the motion picture business is the lack of specialization in the making of scenarios. At the time of my last visit to this country I noticed that this branch of the industry did not receive the attention which it deserved; that the most important factor in a film of the first quality is a story of the first quality, and that the story must take precedence of the star in the production of pictures. It would seem that the main defect in the lack of quality in pictures being known, it should be easy to find a remedy, and having found it to apply it; but unfortunately such is not the case. Future dividends depend upon those who write, or will write, for the screen. Our writers do not sufficiently develop their ideas. Their desire, and this is natural under the conditions, seems to be to turn out as many stories which are marketable as possible. This tendency should be curbed. The production of negatives would be immediately reduced (and everyone will admit that this is desirable) if each producer understood the vital importance of studying with the greatest possible care each of the hundreds of scenes which compose a five or six reel feature. Were this done many stories which are insufficiently developed and are lacking in the essentials, but which under present conditions are put into pictures, would never be produced and this would be to the good of all; of the stars who through such pictures lose their popularity; of the producers and distributors who through such pictures lose money and prestige. Furthermore such action would result in a very definite improvement in quality in the pictures which were produced, and therefore would be to the financial betterment of all connected with the industry. No producer should accept a story unless he is convinced of its future success as a picture. Even if he were to err in his judgment the picture at any rate would not be a triviality. In confining the production of pictures to stories which meet with the real appreciation of those competent to judge, the returns from each negative would naturally be increased, and that to a pronounced degree.

Charles Pathe, of the Pathe organization

High Prices Paid for Stories

"The high prices which are paid for stories of good quality, either books or stage successes, illustrate the demand which exists for really good material. It would seem that in view of these high prices the screen should possess authors which are as capable as their colleagues of the printed book. That the number of good screen authors is as small as it is, is sufficient proof that our present methods of paying for their services are bad, either in whole or in part.

"I have observed with interest during the last twelve months the success with which Pathe Exchange, Inc. has distributed pictures under the so-called Open Booking Plan, a policy which, it seems, is now receiving the serious attention of every important American distributor. It has given us most excellent results, with the inevitable result that there has been a reduction in the number of pictures which we have released, and a corresponding increase in the average quality. I had occasion to remark the last time that I was here, upon the serious error which is committeed in making good productions stand the losses upon negatives of little or no value. Open booking tends to eliminate, or at least mitigate, this trouble, since each film is booked upon its individual merits. In this way the tendency is to produce well, instead of producing much, which, as Shakespeare says, is a consummation devoutly to be wished."

Southeastern Exhibitors to Meet on June 15 in Atlanta

Five hundred exhibitors from the southeastern states are expected it is stated in Atlanta on Sunday, June 15th to attend the meeting of the Southeastern Theatre Managers Association, which will be held at an Atlanta hotel.

The Southeastern Theatre Managers association was formed at a meeting held April 13, with 151 theatres represented. The purpose of the organization is to better motion picture conditions generally in the southeast.

It is announced that many matters of vital importance to the members of the association will be taken up at the meeting. The membership now includes motion picture exhibitors from big and little towns throughout the southeastern territory, and all members of the association are being urged to attend.

The officers of the association, all well-known motion picture men, are as follows: Willard C. Patterson, Atlanta, president; Percy W. Wells, vice-president; Hugh L. Cardoza, Atlanta treasurer; B. Lee Smith, Atlanta, secretary. The members of the executive board are E. A. Schiller, Atlanta, chairman; George C. Warner, Columbia, S. C., Walter Bracken, Bainbridge, Ga.; Joe Burton, Toccoa, Ga.; W. S. Mudd, Birmingham, Ala.; Frank J. Miller, Augusta, Ga., and E. L. Stringer, Marietta, Ga.

Famous Players Meeting Opens

District Managers and Special Representatives Gather in New York—Change in Distributing Policy Is Expected

THE Convention of the out-of-town District Managers and Special Representatives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's Distribution Department was opened May 12 at eleven o'clock by Walter E. Greene, Vice President of the organization in charge of that department.

After the opening address by Mr. Greene, in which he welcomed the visiting exchange men and spoke most enthusiastically of the past achievements of these men and of the prospects of the future, Al Lichtman, General Manager of the Distribution Department, opened the discussion concerning the policy of the company in handling its 1919-20 product. Although the details of the meetings held thus far are not available at this time, it is understood that the organization is contemplating a radical change in system of distribution for the coming year. The present season will draw to a close on August 31 and with the beginning of the new season on September 1, it is felt that exhibitors will be able to avail themselves of a new method of booking Paramount and Artcraft pictures which will be a great improvement over present methods.

"We are not in a position to give the details at this time," said Mr. Greene, speaking in connection with the meetings held since Monday. "Our entire new plan is still in a tentative state and it would be premature to make a detailed announcement now."

The out-of-town managers began to arrive in New York May 9 and every part of the country is represented. Service to the exhibitor will occupy a great part of the time of these meetings in that it is the ambition of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to assist the exhibitor in putting over his pictures during the coming year, in a manner never before attempted in the business.

The men attending the daily meetings in the New York headquarters of the company on Fifth Avenue, are: Walter E. Greene, Al. Lichtman, Charles C. Burr, S. R. Kent, John C. Flinn, Fred Gage, Eugene Zukor, A. G. Whyte, Harry Asher, W. E. Smith, F. V. Chamberlin, C. E. Holcomb, Dan Michalove, J. W. Allen, M. H. Lewis, H. H. Buxbaum, Louis Marcus, Herman Wobber, Mr. Jones of Australia, Louis Loeb, J. W. Toone, B. P. Fineman, J. K. Burger, L. F. Guimond, A. O. Dillenbeck, Jerome Beatty, G. N. Shorey, W. A. Bach.

Officials and salesmen of the New York Exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to the number of about twenty-five, partook of a beefsteak dinner at Castle Cave May 6. Messrs. Wit and Humor were also among those present, while Old Man Business, an uninvited guest, vainly sought admittance.

Present as guests of honor were President Adolph Zukor, First Vice-President Jesse L. Lasky, Al Lichtman, General Manager of Distribution, and C. C. Burr, Assistant General Manager. At the request of Exchange Manager Arthur Whyte, Mr. Lichtman assumed the management of the distribution of wisdom and nonsense, and by reason of his intimate acquaintance with the individual merits, weaknesses and foibles of those present, measured, as usual, fully up to the requirements of the occasion.

Those present were Mr. Zukor, Mr. Lasky, Mr. Lichtman, Mr. Burr, Arthur Whyte, Eugene Zukor, Harry Danto, John McNevin, Ben Roman, Charles Goetz, Nat Bier, Jos. Lee, M. Striemer, W. G. Roosevelt, R. Gledhill, N. Goosman, R. Flothow, L. Rosenwasher, A. M. Weinberg, J. J. Marks, M. Helborne and H. R. Davis.

John McNevin was in charge of the arrangements and a good time was had by all.

Montreal Theatre Changes Hands

The Tivoli Theatre, Bleury and St. Catherine streets, Montreal, has passed into the control of Sam Louis and Harry Pomeroy, the latter assuming the management of the theatre. The Tivoli, which is one of the best known moving picture theatres in Montreal and is located on a prominent downtown corner, was closed on May 14 for four days during which time it was entirely redecorated and refitted. One of the new features is a Symphony orchestra under the direction of Joseph Hudson, formerly of the Holman Theatre, Montreal.

Pomeroy has been manager of the Holman Theatre, Montreal, for the past year or more and was previously the manager of the Globe Theatre, Toronto. The Holman is controlled by the Canadian Universal company.

Incidentally, the Holman had a repeat run of "The Heart of Humanity" during the four days starting Sunday, May 11, when the feature again drew large crowds.

Ohio Scores Temporary Sunday Victory

Ohio reformers are happy, as they have scored a temporary victory on the Sunday picture show question. This comes as a result of the action of the lower house of the Ohio Legislature to postpone indefinitely action upon the Banker bill, which sought to make Sunday shows legal. Under the Banker bill communities were to be given the right, through local option elections, to decide whether or not they favored shows on Sundays.

Just before the decision to postpone action on the Banker bill, the House considered an amendment to make shows legal on Sundays between 1 p. m. and 7 p. m. This, of course, also goes into the discard.

The action of the Ohio lawmakers was due to the unwillingness of rural members to give the cities the right to settle this question for themselves.

Representative Blauser, of Fairfield County, offered an amendment, eliminating the hours 7 to 9 p. m. This was carried. As this would virtually deprive the motion picture houses of their most profitable hours on Sunday, the sponsors for the bill voted for an indefinite postponment of action.

Victory Loan Reports Still Come In

The motion picture industry went over the top with such force in the fifth and final Liberty, or Victory, Loan campaign that reports of the excellent work done by members of the profession are still coming in from all sides.

The Comedy Theatre in Brooklyn, the smallest William Fox theatre, made an exceptional record. Manager D. Schaefer was the only speaker at the house, and through his efforts the patrons subscribed for over $50,000 in Victory notes.

Norma Talmadge conducted a consistent campaign at Fiftieth street and Broadway, New York, throughout the drive. Her propaganda film was called "We'll Show Them," and helped the star dispose of many thousands of dollars in bonds.

Famous Players-Lasky held sway during the drive in Forty-second street, using various attractions with which to draw attention to their stars who were selling Victory bonds.

Moves Organ to Make Room for Seats

A new idea is being tried out in the New Colonial theatre, Cincinnati, where the organ has been transferred to the rear of the second floor balcony. This allows the placing of seats on the first floor in the space formerly used for the orchestra pit. This feature was worked out when it was decided to build two theatres on the site of the old Colonial theatre, on "Motion Picture Square," West Fifth street. With a wall between them, the fans have their choice of two theatres, the Ohio, managed by Thomas A. Reilly, and the New Colonial, under the management of Julius Frankel.

Franklin Urges Unity In Fight

Thinks Albany Victory for Sunday Shows Is More Than a State Triumph—Commends Those Who Worked for It

"We want now above all things," said Harold B. Franklin, of Buffalo, N. Y., this week, "to turn our energy against all adverse legislation of every description."

Thus spoke Mr. Franklin following a statement in which he declared that the Albany victory in regard to Sunday motion pictures also belongs to the people and other states.

Mr. Franklin said "The great victory of the people and the exhibitors in regard to the Sunday motion picture bill at Albany is more than a New York State triumph. The result should be of interest to every state in the union. It is the opening wedge in breaking down the wall of narrow prejudice and bigotry that has surrounded legislation in connection with the motion picture industry. The passing of the bill shows conclusively that the people of the empire state recognize the screen as a factor in their daily lives and their interest in having the measure passed is a material tribute to the motion picture.

"Without outside aid, several exhibitors led by Sydney Cohen, Sam Berman and Charles O'Reilly, at their own expense spent considerable time gathering about them several hundred exhibitors from every part of New York State. These exhibitors, representing every grade in the theatre, joined hands and completed the organization of the New York State Exhibitors' League at Syracuse a few months ago. Without flare of trumpets, the men of the league sunk their differences and personality, and worked zealously as a unit to awaken the public interest in the Sunday opening legislation. A plan carefully worked out that reached every nook and corner of the State. Every step was carefully analyzed. No medium was overlooked in order to reach the people and point out the necessity of passing this bill. The screen, the local newspapers, petitions, labor organizations, and various chambers of commerce all joined hands in this work.

"This victory belongs to the people, for it is their voice that penetrated through walls of the capitol.

"About 200,000 petitions were secured in Buffalo alone. These were assorted into their various districts, carefully bound, and addressed to the respective Senator and Assemblyman of each district.

"Over 80,000 petitions came from Rochester, and other localities, laid down a petition barrage in similar proportion. A prominent official of the Senate chamber made the statement that during the past 25 years, no set of petitions were as effective as those that came through on the Sunday opening bill.

"Some exhibitors may now be inclined to lay down satisfied on account of the successful passage of the bill. No greater mistake could be made at this time. The success of the Exhibitors League should be an incentive "to carry on," and strengthen the organization so that the future of the motion picture bill be preserved.

"Exhibitors should not forget those Senators and Assemblymen that voted for the bill. They should be made to realize that your screen is theirs for the asking. The same spirit that prompted them to do the right thing by the people in spite of powerful opposition should prompt the Exhibitor to show their appreciation.

"We want now above all things to turn our energy against all adverse legislation of every description, and remove any barrier that stands in the way of progress of the motion picture industry. Let every exhibitor, large or small, therefore determine to build up an organization that will be a recognized power, which will go a great way toward making our triumph permanent."

Memphis Expects to Get New Theatre

Memphis, Tenn.—(Special to Motion Picture News) Memphis is to have a new motion picture theatre within a few months, a deal having been closed whereby C. H. Pantage of Seattle, Wash., will include Memphis in his theatrical circuit.

The site is the Holst building on Main street, just south of Monroe, occupied for many years by the A. V. N. Vleet-Mansfield Drug Co. Work on tearing down the old structure is to start right away and it is hoped to have the building ready in time for the new season.

C. D. Pantage of Birmingham, Ala., has already leased part of the first floor for a confectionary store.

Kearse Takes Over Burlew Theatre Property

T. L. Kearse of Charleston, W. Va., announces that he has taken over the Burlew theatre property in that city, which came into effect May 1st. Mr. Kearse states that he is now engaged in redecorating and remodeling the theatre with an object to make it the equal, if not the peer of any of the legitimate houses in the south.

This theatre will be devoted to high class photoplays and the legitimate drama. The seating capacity of the Burlew which is 1600 will be increased it is said to 2000 and carry an orchestra of sixteen pieces.

Cincinnati Lyric Begins Picture Season

The Lyric theatre, Cincinnati, closing its regular season of road shows, has been leased for the summer season by Isaac Libson. Starting with Sunday, May 11, with "Oh, You Women!" Mr. Libson will show first-class films. The regular Lyric theatre orchestra, of which Theodore Hahn is conductor, will continue business at the same old stand during the summer season. The summer picture season will start at the Grand Opera House on Sunday, May 18.

Brenner Asks Question That Many Minds Are Puzzled Over at Present Time

Motion Picture News:

What will become of the small town Exhibitor?

This is the thing that is coming up in my mind every day, and it is really of some concern, and deserves some discussion, and I wish I were able to go into it with some degree of intelligence.

We are facing a proposition in that of advance of prices, that will eventually put us out of business. When a salesman calls on me with these so-called better pictures, and tells me he has something better than the average run of pictures, in most cases this is true, but can we go on and on charging higher prices, every time we give our patrons a good picture? No we can not and I find that I have come to the place where I must put my prices at a reasonable figure and make the price staple, and for continued success the pictures must also be staple. Why must our prices be the same? There are a great many reasons for this, but the important reason here in this little city is my patrons are not what you would call high salaried people and they are not able to spend large amounts of money for their entertainment, on the other hand they are of the highest type of intelligence and demand the best in pictures.

The producer is making pictures today for the larger places, and it is hard for the small exhibitor to get through and make a success, under present conditions, and if the producer does not have some consideration for us in the future, we are doomed for defeat.

It will give me pleasure to hear from small town Exhibitors, giving me their opinion as to feeding these so-called high grade and also high priced pictures to their patrons.

I say we should be getting good pictures most all the time and at a price we won't be compelled to hold our patrons up every time they come to a show.

Sincerely yours,
W. H. BRENNER,

Is Exhibitor "Goat" to Exchange? Melton Phelos Declares Such Is Case

Motion Picture News:

In my past fourteen years' experience in the Motion Picture Industry, I never can remember the day when the Exhibitor was the "Goat" to the Film Exchanges, as much as he is today.

It doesn't matter what happens in the Motion Picture Industry, the Exhibitor is always the "Goat." For instance: Some time ago, the Exchanges in Cleveland and throughout the country, put their heads together and passed Rules among themselves, that each and every picture booked would require one picture deposit. Which, if the Exhibitor had three or four theatres, he would have to invest $3,000.00 or $4,000.00 among the different Exchanges, without receiving a penny interest.

Later, they made another Rule, which required that the Exhibitor pay all Films in advance of date played, if not they would ship the Film C. O. D.

That was all good enough, said and done. The Exhibitor had to like it.

Now, in the past three or four weeks, the Exchanges, in Cleveland, Ohio, got their heads together and they passed a Rule that: NOT ONLY REQUIRES A DEPOSIT FOR PICTURES BOOKED FROM THEM; NOT ONLY ASKING YOU TO PAY THEM IN ADVANCE FOR PICTURES BOOKED FOR YOUR THEATRES; but they passed a Rule that: "IF THE CHECK IS NOT IN THE OFFICE PRIOR TO THE DATE PLAYED, THEY WILL NOT SHIP ANY FILMS OUT C. O. D." (Because perhaps through the Exhibitor's error or the Exchange's error, some Exhibitor refused to lift the C. O. D.). Now, if by mistake an Exhibitor failed to send a check previous to the day shown, he will have to close up his theatre until the Exchange is absolutely guaranteed of his money.

That looks like a good way of doing business, but, for the Benefit of the Exchanges only, not the Exhibitors.

What guarantee and what damages are the Exchange willing to pay to the Exhibitors when, a Film booked for a certain day, is paid in advance and through the error of the Booker or Express, the Exhibitor will not receive the picture, having spent money in advertising in newspapers, bill posting, etc.

If you call up the Exchange and ask them why they didn't send the Film their answer will be, "Very sorry, but it was the Booker's fault or someone else, but will send it to you later."

Melton Phelos, of the Elyria Theatres Co., Inc., Elyria, Ohio

Did the Exchange stop and think what this disappointment meant, not only to the Exhibitor alone, but to the Public in general? Did the Exchange stop and think how much money the Exhibitor lost that day? But why should the Exchange Manager worry? For, he has a Deposit, Pictures paid in Advance, and if the picture failed to show up at the Theatre, he is sorry, but it was a mistake.

Time will come, My Dear Editor, and its coming fast, when the Exhibitor will realize and open his eyes to the fact that "HE IS BEING THE GOAT." all the time.

What chance has a Small Exhibitor to run decent picture, without investing all his Capital for Deposits? What chance has a Small Exhibitor to exist in the Motion Picture Industry, if sometime through his error or sickness, he fails to send his check in to the Exchange, for the picture and after he has heavily advertised not only does he disappoint his patrons but he loses his bread and butter as well.

I hope the time is coming when the Exchanges will realize that the Exhibitors' bread and butter is just as good as the Exchange Men's bread and butter.

Hoping you will give this your careful consideration, with my full authority for publication.

Yours respectfully,
MELTON PHELOS,
Of the Elyria Theatres Company,
Elyria, Ohio.

Will High Prices Drive Us Back to the Vaudeville Theatre?

Motion Picture News:

Note in a recent issue of Motion Picture News an article on pictures and vaudeville, and what you say is true, as the vaudeville houses with a special feature on the bill makes it a double attraction, and we know that is what crowds vaudeville houses, especially the large ones in the cities.

The high rentals of pictures will eventually drive some of the motion Picture houses into vaudeville. You will remember I wrote a long article for your paper on the same matter about a year ago.

The Moving Pictures Theatre Managers must keep pace with the vaudeville houses. To show you, this week we are playing William A. Brady's "Stolen Orders," and enclosed you will find ads. That will explain to you just why we have crowded houses all this week, as we're turning them away on this picture. You see we are running it after the Shubert Theatre which ran it last summer at $2.00 prices. We take advantage of the advertising of that Theatre.

A little later I will write a longer article on the matter.

Verv truly yours.

Calls on Virginia Exhibitors to Get Active in Politics

The time has come when exhibitors and theatre managers must make a fight for their rights. Just as long as we sit still and fail to interest ourselves to the extent of seeing that men are selected for the legislative halls who are disposed towards us we are going to have censorship, high licenses, restrictions against Sunday operating, etc.

Who are the leaders of censorship? It is none other than this same reform element who have apparently succeeded in putting the country dry without submitting the question to the people. That these people are well organized and never cease to work is a question beyond dispute. What are the results in Virginia? We would have had censorship in Virginia today had our last session of the legislature lasted one or two days longer, and unless more liberal representatives are elected this fall we are going to have censorship just as certain as the Lord made little apples. The writer was the lone exhibitor of Virginia present during the closing hours of the last legislature and succeeded in getting the license reduction bill through, therefore, knows whereof he speaks.

The patrons of the censorship bill, Dr. Cannon, is the president of the Anti-Saloon League of Virginia and one of the leading prohibition workers in America. He in conjunction with the State Moral Commissioner, the Rev. J. Sydney Peters, have been busily engaged for the past weeks paving the way for the election of men who will vote them more power, more money that they may enjoy a $10,000 salary per year to enforce prohibition and carry out censorship and other so-called "moral reform" laws. This they will do unless we exhibitors get busy immediately and pick men who believe in equal rights and who will promise us to go forth and represent the people without their hands tied by Dr. Cannon and Rev. Peters.

Some exhibitors are kidding themselves into believing that conditions are better during dry times. This is all wrong. The wave of prosperity that we are just going through has absolutely nothing to do with the liquor question. As a matter of fact I contend that business would have been better if we had saloons here under proper regulations. Paying as high now as $12.00 per quart of liquor naturally does not leave as much money in men's pockets to spend for amusement as it would if they paid $1.00 a quart for same. And further, we will all agree that when a fellow has a drink or two on the best seat in the house is none too good for him. My attendance has decreased with men. They frequent the restaurants, pool rooms, bowling alleys and poker games more now than during saloon times. But this is getting away from the question, as the whiskey question seems settled, or at least until the question is settled by a nation-wide vote.

We cannot afford to sit still and trust our fate into the hands of men who are tied by the Anti-Prohibition party. We have got to select our own men who will stand by us, and unless they are willing to give us this promise we don't want them. We should put it square up to these candidates before the August primaries. August will soon be here, so let every man who has his own interest at stake GET BUSY NOW. Primaries will be held in Virginia in August when candidates for the Legislature and Senate will be selected. Cannon and his forces have their men slated. What are we going to do? Let's all get busy now and persuade some fellow to run who will stand by us.

There never was a better time to elect our men than now. The feeling is against this reform element stronger now that what it was two years ago when Governor Davis was given more votes than his two dry opponents combined. It will be easy sailing for men who will announce themselves along the same line as Governor Davis did. It took a good many dissatisfied dry voters to change to elect Davis when you stop to think that Virginia went State Wide by nearly thirty thousand votes, but they did not favor such stringent laws and if given a vote today it is the general opinion of all that the State would go overwhelmingly wet. Davis was a straight out wet candidate and defied the dry forces, which would verify this opinion.

Whether we are wet or dry let's forget this and get busy now to hunt out men who will at least stand by us in opposing censorship in our next Legislature. If exhibitors and theatre men in other states will take similar action there is no telling what can be accomplished.

At the recent censorship hearings in Chicago a university professor placed the motion picture before the church in the development of the child today. The home was first, school second, motion picture third and church fourth. Let's hold that third place.

Yours for improvement of conditions instead of sitting still and allowing them to be made worse.

J. HENKEL HENRY,
Empire Theatre, Winchester, Va.

Independents Close Open Market Talk

THE discussion as to "Who Started This Open Market" draws to a close this week. Two independent distributors have the final say in the matter, and both turn to a study of history to make their cases.

Jesse L. Goldburg, now with the Frohman Amusement Corporation, turns the pages of history back to the Life Photo Corporation which he and Edward Roskam organized in 1913 to produce open market pictures. Other students of film history may make up a similar case by recalling that at that time Adolph Zukor had already presented "Queen Elizabeth" and other productions on something akin to the "Open Market," while the names of Harry Raver's All Star and other organizations come to mind.

The Last Word

But the close of the controversy makes as interesting reading as the installments that have gone before, and if you enjoy peppery word-slinging don't miss this week's contributions.

Mr. Goldburg's letter follows:

Mr. William A. Johnston, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR MR. JOHNSTON: I have never, since my connection with the motion picture industry, rushed into print to contradict the observations of any other person, but the communications of your three correspondents published in the last issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS under the heading, "New Angles on the Open Market," prompts me to "throw my pen in the ink pot."

Marshall Neilan's observations contain a logical discussion of the fairness of the theory of open market distribution, but my versatile friend Reichenbach merely proves his intimacy with the early history of some of those whose names now occasionally adorn pages of motion picture publications. Neither Lewis J. Selznick, Harry Reichenbach nor any other person excepting your exceedingly humble servant, and those who were associated with him in the days of the Life Photo Film Corporation are entitled to any credit for establishing the open market.

If motion picture history concerning this question is of any consequence allow me to recite the situation that existed even before you became connected with MOTION PICTURE NEWS. The Life Photo Film Corporation, of which I was secretary and general manager, was the first and only consistent producer of state right productions in the year 1913. At the time we were making pictures and camouflaging our camera in deadly fear lest "vidoques" of the patents company would discover that in the camera box there was an intermittant movement. We were discovered and promptly sued, but we nevertheless continued producing such attractions as "The Banker's Daughter," "Northern Lights," "The Greyhound," "Captain Swift" and twenty-four other features, which are even now being reissued under substitute titles. We were the only concern to whom an independent or state right exchange could look for a supply of any regularity, and theatres when they booked "open" booked only Life Photo Film productions, because there was no competition. We advertised the open market. We solicited the open market, in fact we created the open market.

At that time Brother Zukor didn't know what a motion picture was. Brother Brady looked askance at anything excepting the legitimate stage. Walter Irwin was practicing law. Frank Hall wasn't even buying rights on films in Jersey, and if my information is correct Lewis J. Selznick was either in the jewelry business in Pittsburgh or was clerking for Carl Laemmle. Paramount had not been born, but I do distinctly recall that Jesse Lasky, who was then producing vaudeville acts, called to interview the undersigned with the then Samuel Goldfish, and suggested that he would like to become part and parcel of the Life Photo Film Corporation.

The productions which Mr. Reichenbach exploited such as "The Hypocrites" had never been transfered to celluloid, and I beleieve that "The Hypocrites" which marked the advent of Harry's originality had not see nthe light of day for two years after the Life Photo Film Corporation had blazed the trail. Maurice Tourneur and Leonce Perret had not set sail from France and Edgar Lewis was working for me as a director. Ivan Abramson was connected with Jewish drama on the East Side; W. E. Shallenberger was practicing medicine someewhere in the Middle West; Harry Sherman had not been born as far as motion pictures were concerned, and even at that time Harry Reichenbach—well, what's the use.

I could go on indefinitely and from that time, 1913, until today, midst the rise and fall of my own little craft, I have nevet even for a moment been associated with or supported any policy other than open booking.

I seek no ecomiums, but when film history is written I do feel that the few convolutions in the lilliputian deposits resting under my cranium should receive the credit properly its due.

Yours very truly,
JESSE J. GOLDBURG.

It's a Natural Evolution

From P. B. Dana of the Arrow Film Corporation comes the following "sideline" observation on the "open market" controversy:

DEAR SIR: I have been reading with amusement, from the side lines, as it were, the present controversy over the momentous question "who is responsible for the open book market?" As there seems to be developing a real serious problem in the minds of the "trade," and for fear this question may be causing untold suffering especially among the publicity men, of whom I happen to be one, I will settle the question forthwith, finally, definitely and absolutely, to wit—

The open booking market is the natural evolution or development of the business. Just as the four-cylinder automobile was the natural development of the old-time one-lunger, and the six and twin sixes is a further development, so is the open booking market the natural development of the booking system. It had to come, it was bound to come, because it is the one sure way of raising the motion picture business to the plane that the industry deserves.

While the open booking market is the natural development of the business the man who fostered this movement for many years, the man who has talked it incessantly, has written reams of matter about it and published it in his house organ (The Arrow Bulletin) and talked to hundreds of exchange men from every part of the world, and who has probably been more directly responsible for the rapid growth of the idea than any other man, is W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation.

Sincerely yours,
P. B. DANA,
Director of Advertising and Publicity.

CURBS THE SALES

Pennsylvania Bill Would Limit Tickets to Number of Seats

HARRISBURG, Pa. — Motion picture and other theatres in Pennsylvania will no longer be permitted to sell tickets in excess of the number of seats in the house, if a bill introduced on May 6 in the House of Representatives, by Assemblyman Bucher, is enacted into law. The measure has been referred to the Law and Order Committee.

It provides that no place of amusement to which the public is admitted upon the payment of an admission charge, shall offer for sale any tickets or tokens evidencing the right of the admission to such theatre for any performance, greater in number than the seating capacity.

Any theatre manager or owner who allows ticket purchasers to stand in the aisles during the whole or any part of a performance or who shall violate any other provision of the act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined not less than $25 or more than $100 or undergo imprisonment of from one to three months or be both fined and imprisoned, in the discretion of the court.

Be Fair to the Picture Industry,
Says Nate Erber of Indiana

I picked up our morning's paper recently and my eyes beheld this caption: "CRUSADE AGAINST IMMORAL PICTURES," in New York City, ordered by Mrs. Ellen A. O'Grady, Deputy Police Commissioner of that city. I, of course, do not know Mrs. O'Grady, but my mind suggests that she must be a fine, broad-minded American woman of high ideals to have become honored with that lofty position; but why the publicity of the immoral pictures? Is everything immoral mentioned in this article? Is it fair because there is one bad boy to say that all boys are bad? Is it fair that because there is one bad girl to say that all girls are bad? If one hotel has the stain of immorality, does that make them all unclean? Because one theatre reeks of everything unclean, does that make all the beautiful palatial monuments for the picture industry unclean? Because there are some producers of pictures that work with foul methods, does that make the industry unclean? WAKE UP, PICTURE INDUSTRY; FOR GOD'S SAKE, WAKE UP! Are Paramount, Metro, Select and all producers rotten, because there are rotten ones? Is Zukor, Hodkinson and the rest of the clean picture men different than Schwab of steel fame, or Hershey of chocolate fame, or Woolworth or any other big business men? Are they assailed every day? Surely some of Schwab's big industry turns out a faulty product unintentionally; some of Hershey's chocolate might, by error, leave that magnificent institution faulty, and likewise any other big business; but the ideals of these big men are clean human ideals, and their greatness has imbued ideals in them. Are we picture beings to live our lives through with the finger of scorn pointed at us? Don't we live as other citizens? Don't we love our families, our communities, as other people? Don't we want our girls and our boys to become clean, moral and useful children? Bosh! you picture reformers, do you advertise the good in pictures when you see the scum of the gutter made a man or a woman of on the screen? Do you advertise the good in pictures when the weak and the feeble, at a picture show, can get the very source of education that you have failed to give them? Do you reformers tell of the great big broad education our little ones, you and I, get when we travel with Burtcn Holmes to the Andes or the Alps, with Chester to the Amazon, with Johnson to the South Seas, with Pathe News, Hearst's or Universal Weeklies around the world? Do they speak of us in praise for the great big unselfish good that was performed in that terrible war? Are we worthy of their honest criticism? If we are LET US GO OUT AND GET IT, LET US TAKE ISSUE WITH REFORMERS AND SETTLE THIS QUESTION NOW. Are not some of the literary brains of the past and the present utilized in the production of better pictures? Are there not a great number of the scenarios for pictures adapted from the very magazines that lay on your library table, open to your boys and girls; must they be unclean, immoral, because there are some of that class? There were pirates on the high seas and so there are in pictures. I love clean pictures, and so does the editor of this magazine, and so does every clean man connected with the picture industry. Here are two extracts copied from the article published in our morning paper, which, of course, was a New York dispatch. A sample: "Say, kid! Let's vamp that guy." Another sample: Two foreign girls were heard to say, who had been to the picture show: "We want to be American girls, like in the moving pictures, have a good time, automobiles and nice clothes." I really do not know where to place that reflection, as it reflects in the article on all our American girls, or all of our pictures; but I would like to state that we are proud of all of our good American girls, and we trust that their lives shall be filled with the good things that a good American girl craves, and reformers, take notice, you can't poison public opinion by such petty extracts against all the good American girls or all the pictures. I am associated with a man who has always served clean pictures to his public, and I am proud of my record in three cities of having done the same. There are bad apples in every basket, and faded roses in every bush, but there is the sweet juicy apple and the beautiful fragrant rose, and I make a fair comparison of apples and roses to all that is good and clean in pictures. The salvation of all advertising has and will come about with clean and truthful advertising; that salvation was worked out by the big broad men in that business who cared only to be identified with clean and truthful advertising. Politics or reformers dared not interfere with their salvation; pictures will work their salvation along identically the same lines. I stand on this platform for freedom of all clean literature and for freedom of all clean pictures. Of one thing I am certain, that there are sufficient broad, big, clean men identified with the picture industry to work out a profitable industry minus anything in that industry that would in any manner, shape or form tend to corrupt the morals of any community. Politics has never entered into the advertising clubs of the world, as I understand it, and why should it as long as they stand for that which is clean, and why should politics interfere with the picture industry as long as those identified with it, that is, the big broad clean men, who ultimately will make up the industry, can operate their own business of other industries are operated? I would suggest to the editor of this magazine that the exhibitors of this country form an organization, immediately, not to fight about prices, production, or anything but this one big vital question: ARE WE GOING TO BE ALLOWED TO LIVE, OR SHALL WE GO BACK, BACK, BACK, SO FAR THAT IT WOULD TAKE A GENERATION TO GET BACK TO WHERE WE WERE BEFORE CENSORSHIP AND OPPOSITION TO PICTURES BEGAN? An organization of the clean part of the business to go out a "flying squadron," as it were, to tell the truth to any community as to what the intentions of those who have their dollars and their business integrity is. When there are a dozen different mouths pealing forth the untruth about pictures, let there be a dozen mouths on the ground to enlighten that same public as to the truth. I trust that you will make any corrections, if need be, in this article before offering same to the trade.

NATE ERBER,
Mgr., Strand Theatre,
Fort Wayne, Ind.

Says Distinctive Marks Would Help
Identify Parts of Features

One of the greatest detriments today to both the exhibitor and Exchange is the lack of distinctive marks on the parts of features so as to enable exhibitors or inspectors to immediately identify each part of the aforesaid features.

Of course it would not be best to go back to the old method of marking each subtitle throughout the reel as part one, two, three, etc., due to the fact that frequently the exhibitor prefers that the patrons not know the exact number of reels they are seeing, but I believe that each or a great many of the subtitles could be easily marked in one of the corners with a small number (which would indicate the part) and thereby enable the picture industry to quickly recognize each part.

We have all heard of the exhibitor who showed part three before part one, etc., so why not take the proper precaution to avoid such an embarrassing predicament.

Censor Law Proposes Higher Rate

HARRISBURG, PA.—Persons or corporations submitting films for examination and approval of the Pennsylvania Board of Motion Picture Censors will have to pay double the present fees for examination if a proposed amendment to the censorship law, offered in the House of Representatives last week by Assemblyman Baldi, is enacted into law.

The bill provides that the fee shall be two dollars instead of one dollar, as now, for the examination of each film, reel or set of views of 1,200 lineal feet or less, and two dollars instead of one "for each duplicate or print thereof which must be applied for at the same time and by the same person." The bill was referred to the Committee on Judiciary General.

The week just past was designated in the House as the last in which new bills may be offered during the present session of the Legislature unless by anunimous consent. Bills, however, may still be offered in the Upper branch of the Legislature.

World Pictures to Build in Pittsburgh

World Pictures announnces that contracts have been let for the construction of a five-story building in Pittsburgh which will be used by this company as its exchange in that city. This is following the policy of the company to own its own buildings in the different cities in the United States where branch offices are maintained.

Five of the popular Christie players are Boston and Philadelphia are already represented by buildings belonging to the World Film Corporation. It is expected that within the next four weeks a piece of property will be purchased in Seattle on which will be constructed a building for the use of the Seattle Exchange. Thus, World Pictures again demonstrates that it is a distributing organization of permanency.

New Christie Comedies

presented in three of the latest comedies, two of which have just been produced by William Beaudine and one by Al E. Christie.

Bobby Vernon and Patricia Palmer will be seen in "Sea Sirens," a summer story by the sea.

Dorothy DeVore with Harry Ham are presented in "Too Many Wives," a story in which a full sized harem (the Christie girls) almost disrupt a happy romance between Dorothy DeVore and Harry Ham.

The third of the new comedies which will be released in May, was called "A Rustic Romeo" and features Bobby Vernon and Patricia Palmer and Bill Beaudine's "Cootie" automobile.

PUTTING IT OVER

A Story Without Names—But Its's True Everywhere

WE are not mentioning any names in this item for obvious reasons, but we can direct anyone who wants to know to the proper parties.

Recently an exhibitor with one of the houses on the main street decided that he wouldn't advertise a certain picture. He thought that it was mediocre and that he would take his chances on it. He had it on for a week's run, but the second day he took it off. He blamed the picture, not his failure to advertise.

But the exchange man was shrewd. He went to the exhibitor who had the picture for one day of the following week and induced him to increase the run to three days and advertise heavily. The second house was eight blocks away and far from as attractive as the first run. But the advertising was attractive and for the three days it was mighty hrad to get even standing room.

Now the first run man is worrying about his judgment of pictures. Don't you think that he had better worry about his exploitation judgment?

Exhibitor Service Bureau

Service That Means Sales For You

IN April 13, 1918, there appeared in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS the first Special Service Section that was ever carried in any trade paper on any motion picture. At that time it was a distinct novelty, but since then they have become frequent until now two or more of them appear with each issue.

These special sections are in addition to the regular departments. There is no attempt made here to pass on the merits of the pictures. Their one object is to aid the exhibitor to get the most out of offerings that he has already booked. They are real exploitation talks to the exhibitor which he can in turn use in telling his patrons about the offering.

This matter is not guess work, theory stuff. In the first place the picture is actually viewed under the best possible conditions and studied carefully from every angle of showmanship before a line of matter is written. Exploitation by the company and the press material is ignored unless they fit in with practical exhibition ideas. These sections are of especial value to the exhibitor who is unable to see the picture before he shows it and this is the case with probably nine-tenths of them—especially those in the smaller cities.

In brief it is a case of the exhibitors having the pictures looked at in their behalf by a man who looks at them from their angle and who takes the same care in making suggestions for the method of exploitation as in passing on ideas for the Exhibitors Service Bureau.

NATURALLY one who has the opportunity of seeing the presentations at the larger theatres is able to keep in touch with idea and music suggestions for pictures because of that contact. It is very very often that the methods that have been used in the exhibition and exploitation of one picture apply just as well to another offering of similar character, and on many occasions ideas that have been proven successful at the larger houses have been included among the suggestions made in the Special Service Sections.

It will be interesting to exhibitors generally to note cases where New York theaters show these same pictures later and how the same spirit is followed. It is not meant to indicate that these theatres are following the trail of the Special Service Section, but because long familiarity and weekly attendance at these houses has instilled in the writer a knowledge of just what these theatres—with the practical showmanship of their managements—will do with most pictures.

And the point that we seek to make clear is that these are not the work of an arm chair exhibitor, but the suggestions for the presentation and the advertising is studied with even more care than if the writer were showing the picture at his own theatre. That is necessary so that the suggestions can be made to apply as far as possible to all sections of the country and to varying conditions.

Even aside from the help that these give, the greatest thing is that they make the exhibitor THINK. Possibly he will disagree with all the ideas advanced on a particular picture and use none of them, but it is a pretty safe bet that he will start in to PLAN FOR HIMSELF AND TO GIVE FAR MORE THOUGHT than he would give if the offering came to him in the ordinary course of eevnts.

SO many recent cases have been called to our attention of cases where exhibitors have used ideas in Special Service Sections that were published months ago and so many requests have come for the dates on which specific offerings have been covered that we are printing here a complete list, with the date of issue:

"Cool" Pictures and Bathing Suit Ads, Stop Hot Weather Slump in San Antonio

THIS might be turned into an ideal scenario called "The Curse of the Carnival Corsairs," or a song writer might see in it the possibilities for a big ballad hit to be titled "I'll Make You Turn to Me Again," but it's really the story of how W. J. Lytle, manager of some seven theatres in San Antonio, Texas, including the Empire, that city's leading cinema house, brought back to the home fold a patronage which strayed and for the time being seemed to have become lost.

San Antonio is a city where the summer starts early and lets everyone know it is there, and though the Empire has an ideal cooling plant that makes it several degrees cooler than the outside in the summer, Manager Lytle is inclined to hold the advertising of this in the reserve until the real hot weather settles in. A spell of hot weather early in the season naturally works havoc with the theatre's patronage as all those who have cars take to the wide and open road. However, it was not hot weather alone that started the slump in theatre business in San Antonio that Manager Lytle staved off at the Empire through a clever trick of showmanship.

Every year San Antonio holds what is known as "Fiesta Week," a celebration some seven days in duration, which is marked by daily parades and much funmaking on the streets. However though, such a week would to many appear a show bananza, it isn't because of the fact that the plazas and streets of the Texan city are lined with carnival tent shows and it is one week that San Antonio's cannot and will not attend a show indoors. One week of poor busiess is accepted by San Antonio theatre managers as a matter of course, but this year it looked as though the patronage which had swerved away from the regular shows to answer the seductive siren of the carnival had gone for good. Then came a spell of hot weather.

Manager Lytle knew that the people who were not patronizing his house and all the others in the city were keeping away because they felt it was too warm to go to the theatre. His problem was to make them think they would be cool even when attending a theatre without resorting to exploiting the "cooling system." Here's where Manager Lytle assumes the role of a psychologist.

MAGAZINE & PROGRAM
A Hotel Maid by Day—A Princess by Night

Program cover did advance work with the picture of Miss Stewart a week ahead

"I am going to book a couple of pictures with cool written all over them," he told W. H. Branch, director of publicity for the Empire. "And I want you to spread on them big, but forget the cooling system."

The two pictures Manager Lytle booked were "The Brand," Rex Beach's story of Alaska, with enough "snow stuff" in it to make the man who works in Booth's Fisheries' refrigerator think he is living in the tropics, and "A Midnght Romance," Anita Stewart photoplay of summer hotel life and the surf.

Having come to San Antonio from St. Paul, Minnesota, Branch was not handicapped in not knowing what snow was like, and to talk about snow was like second nature to him, and in looking at his ads on Rex Beach's Alaskan picture a lot of persons must have thought he was a "snow" fiend (couldn't pass the opportunity up) or that the heat had distracted him. However, either a lot of persons in San Antonio had never seen snow or there were a lot of northerners in the city who were lonesome for the sight of it—because the Empire played to capacity houses, when the other San Antonio theatres were playing to only half ones.

"Virtuous Wives" broke the Empire house record for the year on New Year's Day, and no one thought that any other Anita Stewart picture could anywhere near rival record made by her first First National release. However when the end of the run of "A Midnight Romance" was reached it was found that it had played to a slightly larger gross than the first Stewart picture, and that the attendance was larger the last day of the picture's run than the first day.

In putting over "A Midnight Romance," Branch started earlier by firing an opening gun in the magazine published by the Empire-Princess and Royal theater management. Anita Stewart's picture was on the front cover with a little reading matter dealing with the witchery of bathing suits and sea beaches. Inside was another picture and a story about the picture. The next week another front cover picture of the star and more about bathing-suits and beach flirtations, and another story, but not once was the word "cool" mentioned, that's where the psychology came in. On Sunday previous to the picture's run, which began on Wednesday, an ad dealing with the mystery side of the picture with no mention of bathing-suits and beach was run. That was to get those who love mystery stories interested and to prevent the public from thinking of the photoplay as just a sweet, sugary romance.

A chance for free advertising presented itself to Branch in the shape of Miss Stewart's bathing suit. So the Empire publicity ~~man~~ immediately went to the office of the leading afternoon newspaper and explained the plan by which the merchants of the city could dispose of a supply of bathing suits and the Empire theater and "A Midnight Romance" secure a full page of advertising at the cost of a few passes. The result was a full page ad devoted to bathing suits and swimming pools and all centering around the photoplay in the newspaper.

Another stunt was the following letter:

> Do you sell bathing suits? I don't, but I believe in reciprocity, and that's why I am writing you. Anita Stewart, the famous motion picture star, appears in a bathing suit in a number of scenes in "A Midnight Romance," the photoplay which comes to the Empire for four days, starting Wednesday. Anita only wore a few stunning evening gowns last time she appeared at the Empire and the house records were smashed. What will happen when she appears in a bathing suit, we don't dare to prophesy—but it will attract attention, you may be sure.

Just this—anyone who sees how attractive she and Jack Holt, her leading man, are in bathing suits, is going to turn around and buy one too. Advertising Leaders and the Way They Look at Film Exploitation

Hitting 'Em A Smash

SINCE W. S. McLaren, managing director of the Majestic and Colonial theatres, Jackson, Mich., was in New York this week and gave us some of his ideas on advertising we are taking the liberty of writing this story about him and his work here, instead of the customary signed article.

Mr. McLaren's creed is to hit hard when you are hitting and to drive your theatre just a little ahead of the other fellow's. He is not afraid to play the big pictures and then to put the volume of advertising behind them that is needed to impress their bigness on the whole territory.

Most of you are familiar with his work through the numerous reproductions that have appeared in these columns. He used big space and generally follows black type so as to make his displays stand out in the papers. He puts just enough matter in these to carry the full message of the picture that he is showing—and then stops.

His policy in advertising the big pictures is shown in his recent campaigns on "The Heart of Humanity" and "The Unpardonable Sin." On both of these he went to full pages and he found, as he already knew from experiment, that this pays mighty well when you have the goods to deliver. And the result is that he is able to show pictures like these for five days in a city that has a census population of 35,000.

On "The Unpardonable Sin" Mr. McLaren used 700 inches in each of the two daily papers and practically the same on "The Heart of Humanity." We have illustrated one of the full pages on the latter picture in which a greater portion is devoted to the straight display matter and the rest to reading matter about the picture and cuts. The only other thing appearing there is the announcement of the Colonial theatre. You will note the small amount of matter in the largest display. The single column at the left is devoted to a talk about the prices, fifty cents for the best seats, and the statement that the Majesic would be justified in charging as much for the picture as for "The Birth of a Nation."

This is just about the record for the fewest possible words on a page

On the Wednesday before the Tuesday opening of the run on "The Unpardonable Sin" the big advertising campaign was started and we have reproduced here one of the three column, fifteen inch displays that he used. We call your attention to this as a splendid example of the way to use space. Here the essential things are told and an attractive cut of Miss Sweet used. Now this picture had attracted so much attention during the Detroit run and the Detroit papers circulate so largely in Jackson that the main thing that Mr. McLaren had to do was to remind the public that this was the same picture and he did this cleverly in his price reference in the box at the lower left.

Here McLaren took a full page and combined reading matter and display advertising

Then comes along the page display that was used on Sunday. Certainly this is striking and it comes very near to beating the record for the fewest number of words in an advertisement of that sort. The name of the theatre, the date, the star, the title, the author, the prices—and then you are done. Half pages were carried on the opening day and during the run of the picture and these went more into details concerning the production, though still refraining from a large amount of printed matter.

In addition to this heavy advertising Mr. McLaren put up a thousand sheets for his billboard displays and used window cards all over the city and covered the town with small hangers carrying the name of the picture on both sides. Then he had a lobby display that attracted attention.

It's a Sin to lie!
It's a Sin to steal!
It's a Sin to covet thy neighbor's wife!

This was three columns, fifteen inches, and gets in the Detroit angle, coupling up with the publicity there

"I believe in studying my pictures in advance and when I find that I have the goods I believe in going out and spending the money to let others know it," says Mr. McLaren. It certainly pays to do liberal advertising and all the time that you devote to preparing the matter is well invested in the patronage that you receive. When I get something worth while I believe in hitting it a real smash. I have put over some big campaigns, and I am going to put over a lot more of them in the future—in fact every time the opportunity presents itself."

In his regular advertising day after day he uses large space and has attractive displays. We haven't the material at hand just now to illustrate these, and, any way, this is not Mr. McLaren's own article. A little later we are going to have one signed by him which will more fully give his ideas about advertising and the policies that he follows in exploiting his two houses.

But remember the lesson that is taught here: Hit 'em a smash! When you know that you have a picture that will stand up go out and spend the money.

Your Idea and Ours

THIS is a good display for the more sensational type of pictures, twelve inches, four columns, from the Colonial theatre, Toledo, O. Here full advantage has been taken of the title, "Pitfalls of a Big City" and that is certain to attract attention. It is backed up by the black and white outline of the skyscrapers and then the figure of Gladys Brockwell with her hands up as shrinking from some danger.

"WELL I'LL BE---!"

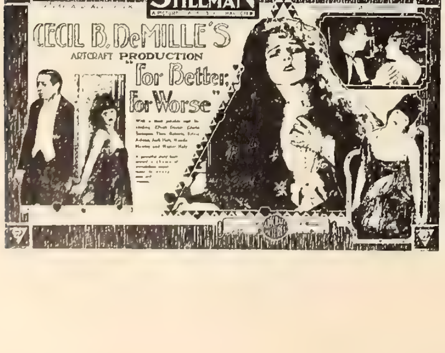
In the display which the Colonial used in another paper it improved this display by playing up in a boxed effect the two sentences, "More thrilling than a slumming party," and "A story of every city's underworld." We believe that these brief lines are more convincing than the selling argument which is used here and which says:

> A startling and powerful story of a woman of the underworld who battles against temptation and forsakes her life of crime. No more appealing play has ever been shown on the screen. A pretty romance is woven into the story. It's the greatest production in which Gladys Brockwell has ever appeared. You cannot afford to miss it.

Now that has the sound of "old stuff." The two shorter lines that we have already mentioned put the punch over immediately and spare one the sordid details, as it were.

It's not only the dime that the patron leaves in your box-office, but the delight that he takes away with him that figures in your profit.

REDUCTION that is necessary here caused this half-page display to lose the greater part of its punch, but there is enough left to illustrate the point that we wish to make. Here is a case where Loew's Stillman, Cleveland, O., has put this over as a DeMille production, the proper thing to do.



LOEW'S STILLMAN
CECIL B. DeMILLE'S
ARTCRAFT PRODUCTION
"For Better, For Worse"

Mr. Kuhn knows that with DeMille productions one associates beautiful women, stunning gowns, and at least unusual emotional expressions. So there are four striking halftones used, but even then the personality of Gloria Swanson is not the only one featured, for the striking picture of Wanda Hawley permitted an even more appealing picture and this was made the center "punch," with the other three scenes showing Miss Swanson and two of them Elliott Dexter.

There is the simplest possible selling lines, with the names of the players, and then a single sentence which tells us that this is "a powerful story built around a theme of tremendous importance to every man and woman." Care has been taken to avoid the war idea that might mislead as to the true character of the picture.

He who argues with his patrons is always lost.

WE take from the same page of the Winnipeg, Manitoba, Tribune, two of the best advance and near-teaser advertisements that we have seen. These appeared in the Thursday issue and both referred to attractions that were to be seen the following week. They were entirely separate and apart from the current offerings at the two houses and so could not have the effect of weakening the "now" bill as might have been the case had they simply been made additions to the current announcements.

In the case of "A Midnight Romance" the Province theatre made this appeal straight to the women and did it in the fewest possible words in a space five inches, double column. With the heading, "Three Women Did It" there follow the names of the star, director and author and then the sentence: "If you think that woman's creative genius is not equal to man's, prepare to change your mind after seeing 'A Midnight Romance.'"

Simple and effective. It will get the immediate attention of the women and you can be mighty sure that they will bring the men of the family along to see a tribute paid to their success.

Now did you ever see such a glorious verdict? Can anybody on earth say a word more after these gentlemen of your own Winnipeg press have spoken?

Come Early - DOMINION - Next Week

Dominion theatre used nine inches, three columns for "The Unpardonable Sin" and took a very different angle. This picture was shown in private review in advance of the opening and the manager of the Dominion got the newspaper men to see it and then to write in their respective papers what they thought of the production.

With the caption, "Here's the Jury," and the name of the production in the smallest type there are pictures of two of the critics printed. Now these pictures of newspaper men that the people know are sure to attract attention and then follow the extracts from their criticisms. Then the theatre adds the caution, "See! It's unanimous. Now did you ever see such a glorious verdict? Can anybody say a word more after these gentlemen of your own Winnipeg press have spoken?"

It's certainly good, convincing stuff and both of the displays are splendid interest-arousers in a coming production without, as we have already said, lessening the interest in the current offerings.

Proof of the picture is often in its presentation.

TIME wasn't so very long ago that when we wanted to illustrate particularly bad advertising we could generally find some of the specimens that we wanted by picking up a Cincinnati paper. Today these same papers are ones in which to find some mighty good display work and as evidence of this we are taking two from a single issue of the Times-Star—displays which were written by the same man for theatres under the same ownership.

Walnut theatre uses eleven inches across four columns in advertising "A Midnight Romance." This display is something on the order of the McCormick exploitation of the picture, but at the same time different. The idea of "silk at night" and "drudgery and gingham by day" which is such good stuff has been used in the upper left and the lower right corners with good effect. For values, arrangement, white space and proper setting of the selling arguments we consider this another one of the cases where the hundred per cent mark has been reached.

At the start there is a verse. It wouldn't take any medals as poetry, but it gets into the spirit of the picture and that is what you want. This is the way that it rambles along:

Anita in a bathing suit is something to remember,
For she is like unto the Morn the artist called "September."
And when she doffs the maid's attire because the wild waves call her—
Why, who could blame the millionaire for thing he should foller?

Let's be frivolous, and romantic! Forget wild melodrama—nobody's murdered or thrown off a cliff in this picture. But there IS moonlight, and mystery, and pretty girls, and manly heroes. You'll wonder about the heroine, the "girl from Nowhere" who toils as hotel maid by day, but at night is beautiful in silks—and makes the "catch" of the season!

Drudgery and Gingham by Day

ANITA STEWART made "Virtuous Wives" a delight. She has done the same for "A Midnight Romance."

JACK HOLT is the handsome hero—so nearly the victim of "Blondie Maxie," the blackmail-lady of amazing lingerie. Pretty JUANITA HANSEN plays the dazzling "Maxie."

And LOIS WEBER, peer of women directors, put in all the frills that have made her famous.

Then under the title there is further selling talk, somewhat repetition, but only to the extent of bringing home the charm in the picture's appeal:

> Let's be frivolous and romantic! Forget wild melodrama—nobody's murdered or thrown off a cliff in this picture. But there IS moonlight, and mystery and pretty girls and manly heroes. You'll wonder about the heroine—the "girl from Nowhere who toils as a hotel maid by day, but at night is beautiful in silks—and makes the "catch" of the season.

Then attention is called to the star's work in "Virtuous Wives," the fact that Jack Holt and Juanita Hansen appear in the picture and to the direction of Lois Weber.

Without using the exact language the designer of the twelve inch triple for the Strand got right into the spirit that we suggested in our Special Service Section on "Three Men and a Girl." The illustration is especially good because it brings out the figure of Miss Clark in wedding costume and then has the silhouettes of the three men in a manner that leaves the reader curious and then forces him to read the selling talk above.

There is a good catch line too in the question and answer at the top: "Do you take this man ——?" "I do——NOT."

Because there are these two different eye-catchers employed the designer did the right thing in using the name of the theatre at both the top and bottom of the display Typing and spacing are unusually good.

Fellow who thinks motion picture exhibition consists only in turning the crank will probably be turning one for some other exhibitor tomorrow.

WE have commented before on the fact that with "Captain Kidd, Jr." the point to be brought out is that it is Mary Pickford's first appearance on the screen after seven months, but it has remained for the Imperial theatre, San Francisco, to do this just a little better than anyone else—according to the evidence that has been before us.

This occupies twelve inches across three columns and the well drawn picture of Miss Pickford gets immediate attention and then the eye travels directly to the statement in handwriting at the left. (And this reminds us to say to you that any telling point that you try to make in the advertising should be on the "face" side of the illustration just as it has been done here.)

For some months J. A. Partington has been following the plan of addressing his appeals to "Mr. and Mrs. Public." In this case he has signed the matter with Mary Pickford's name. Incidentally, we are mighty glad to see that Mr. Partington has not said that this is her best picture, but there is a clever reference to the fact that W. D. Taylor directed her best pictures and there is but one conclusion to be drawn. The appeal is there without making any promise for some one to question.

PERSONAL APPEARANCE OF THE WHOZIT ?????

Some folks confuse "hard luck" with that lazy feeling.

THIS page display of the Empress theatre, Edmonton, Alberta, is a splendid announcement of coming attractions at the theatre, but it is very poor so far as the exploitation of the current attraction, "The Heart of Humanity." It is a mighty fine example of the fact that you cannot put two punches over at once.

Of course the display on the current picture stands out the strongest and gets the first attention, but start in to try to read this and you will find that your eye constantly meets the temptation of wandering off to get the matter surrounding the smaller cuts. That point is not made so strong in the reproduction because the type in the matter at the sides is so small in the reproduction here as to leave it with the effect of being little more than a border.

This display is headed "A promise fulfilled" and then goes on to say:

> Starting with the new year the Empress management made a promise to its patrons that the house would maintain its high standard during the coming year and even go beyond it in securing the biggest and best in stars and productions that the motion picture world had to offer. It is a well-known fact that there are only a limited number of recognized stars making motion pictures today and if after glancing down the outside columns of this advertisement you find that I have overlooked any good bet, please write me a letter.

It would have been much better to have referred in this statement to the fact that the Empire has promised its public the biggest and best attraction and then to have centered the whole display on the fact that it has made the promise good by bringing "the greatest of them all"—and

We Do, However, Say That "The Turn in the Road" Is the Most Human Picture You Have Seen in Many a Day. It is a Story That Now and Then Brings a Tear to the Eye, That Alternates With a Thrill and a Laugh and That Teems in the Wonderful Philosophy of Right Over Wrong and Good Over Evil. We Use No Adjectives or Superlatives Here—But We Promise You Utter and Complete Satisfaction.

RIALTO

But really how unusual was the exploitation of this picture is best shown by a glance at the advertisement that had made its appearance the preceeding Sunday. The large type was given over to informing the public that Madge Kennedy was to be seen at the Rialto in "Daughter of Mine," but to our mind the most convincing part of the display was contained in the small type matter boxed off at the left. It read:

> "Henry, see that the puppies have a good warm bed, and, remember, Henry, that they can't sleep well on empty stomachs." That's how the bald old steel magnet treated Ben Alexander's puppies after Ben had shown him how it was to be human. "The Turn in the Road" coming to the Rialto Sunday, May 4, will reveal the most human, sympathetic story ever filmed.

That certainly is the sort of stuff that will have the population of every town watching and waiting for a picture. It is a case, and an excellent one, of selling anticipation without hurting the pulling power of the current attraction.

RIALTO

There are a good many people who will question the propriety of letting the second Sunday announcement get by without mentioning the names of the cast and also dwelling a little more on the humanness of the offering, but we endorse this plan as a splendid one to use very occasionally—and when you have a picture that will back up your statements. Constant repetition of this stunt would of course kill its selling power.

Another value of this plan is the creation of word of mouth advertising. We haven't the slightest doubt that first advertisement drew hundreds of queries from regular patrons and that they were watching the papers carefully for further announcements.

IN some ways this is an excellent display. The Tudor theatre has been able to get good printing of this 17½ inch advertisement across four columns and the pictures of such attractive stars as Priscilla Dean and Mae Murray is bound to attract.

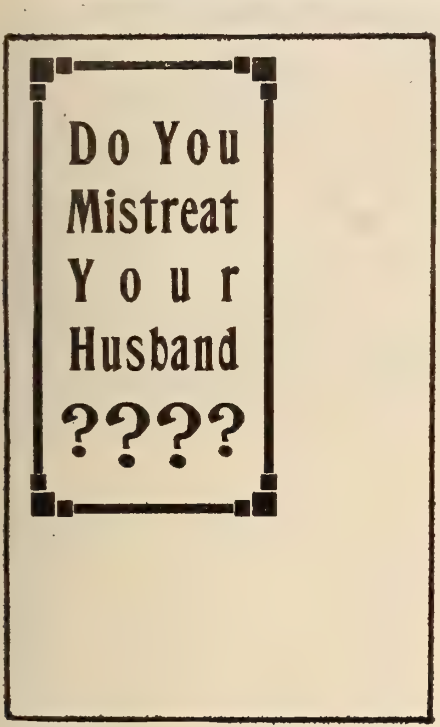
There are two distinct faults that we have to find with this. First, we are violently opposed to advertising two different attractions to be shown on different dates equally. We believe that the picture to sell is the TODAY picture. Using the same space that the Priscilla Dean announcement occupies it would have attracted just as much attention in the Sunday issue and certainly to have reserved the Mae Murray half of it to the Wednesday afternoon and Thursday morning issues when the theatres usually carry only "card" announcements would have brought much more attention.

Then it has been left to the appeal of the star alone to draw the people to see these offerings. There isn't the lightest bit of a selling argument and we doubt very much whether the names of the men presenting the attractions and the directors mean very much to the Atlanta audience. It is true that the cuts carry out an idea of the appeal of the picture, but to our minds it should be put over straight and a demand created for each picture on the "meat in it."

"Try" generally brings the grunt of satisfaction.—TRY—UMPH.

HERE is a clever little idea that has just been used by Tally's Broadway theatre, Los Angeles, during the second week of the showing of Norma Talmadge in "The Probation Wife." From the "Southwestern Blue Book" which contains the names of the wealthiest people in southern California, the publicity department of Tally's took the names of 10,000 women and to each one of these was mailed a four-page folder, 3¼ by 4¾ inches, which bore on the front page the

From 100 Per Cent to Zero



Do You
Mistreat
Your Husband

question, "Do you mistreat your husband?" The address was carried in the space below the question so that no one could possibly miss it while the one-cent postage stamp held the folder together until the stamp was broken.

This is the way the matter on the second page read:

> Many a wife knows how to treat a husband, but very few know how to mistreat one.
>
> Nothing in all the world will make a vagrant husband more jealous than to find his wife having as good a time as he thinks he is having.
> No, this is not a sermon. Read on.

And then the third page carried these lines:

> The "Eternal Triangle" would cease to exist if husbands would pay as much attention to their wives as they do to business—and other things.
>
> A woman's love is deeper than the ocean, and she never shares it—except when hubby becomes neglectful.
> Men, did you ever try putting your wives on probation?
>
> Women, this probation stuff works both ways.
> Turn over—not you—the page.

And then on the final page is the announcement of the picture, date and theatre. The publicity department reports that this increased the sale of the higher price seats 100 per cent and has been convincing evidence of the value of personal appeal. It's mighty good work.

No use to be on the band wagon unless you can blow your horn.

HERE are two pages from the Jacksonville, Fla., Times-Union, but they require a little explanation. These cuts were made a couple of weeks ago and at that time we saw signs that the Jacksonville theatres has decided to change their style of advertising and to get the real punch over. However, the issues that we have seen since that time make us doubt whether the reform is to be permanent, for there have been serious indications of backsliding.

When we first reviewed the general newspaper-motion picture situation in Jacksonville, we told you that it seemed to be the habit to advertise the bills for the entire week in the Sunday paper and to give as much attention to the offer for the following Saturday as to the Monday picture. Here it is shown by the advertisement of the Casino theatre, but that house has gone further and has advertised the attraction for Sunday and Monday in separate space.

Arcade theatre, in announcing its opening attraction, unquestionably had the best advertising on either of the pages. Here the picture of Nazimova stood out strong, and there was enough of the selling argument on "Out of the Fog" to convince the reader that here was a picture worth seeing.

EVER note that when exhibitors are convinced that their picture is a big picture better advertising results? We do not mean simply more space, but that the quality of the matter used is superior. If they would make up their minds to treat every production as a big one so far as hundred per cent exploitation is concerned we are sure that there would be more money in their box offices.

Which is introductory to say that these five full columns of the Gaiety theatre, Winnipeg, Man., represent one hundred per cent efficiency. It appeared in two colors, with the hearts and the title in red, but it would have been striking in black and white. Of course, this is handled from the Canadian angle and possibly its appeal is even stronger in the land of the maple leaf than in this country. You will note that this display does not go into the details of the picture, but slams out some striking sentences. The Randall cut is particularly striking and here, under the heading: "The Canadian mother and her five wonderful sons, is one of the best selling arguments that we have seen. It is in small type, but it will be read. We reprint it:

> —will stir in every human breast that feeling of compassion and pity that makes the whole world kin. In this wondrous story of love that passeth all understanding, no human being on earth but will shed tears of joy and happiness over the great sacrifices of this wonderful mother and her brave boys, like unto thousands of Canadian mothers and sons who suffered that freedom and justice might live. And this is but one of the themes of the magnificent production surpassingly supreme over anything that you've yet witnessed on the screen.

Clouds don't hang around very long when the breeze of advertising starts to work.

Of course, you can balance yourself on one leg, but it is a whole lot safer to stand solidly on both feet.

Scene during stage spectacle at Fox theatre, Aurora

Aurora Theatre Gives Dance in "Garden of Eden" During "Woman" Showing

THAT the plane of the picture industry is constantly rising is proved in no better way than by the elaborate presentation of big pictures being made by theatres in towns which the old time theatre manager considered not large enough for metropolitan presentation.

Credit goes to Mr. Burford and Mr. Rubens of the Fox Theatre of Aurora, Illinois, for a presentation of Maurice Tourneur's production "Woman" in a manner which invites comparison with the efforts of the largest theatre in the country.

A mammoth stage setting depicting the Garden of Eden was arranged, and with the special lighting effects realized a scene of beauty which received great applause at every performance. A dancer was also employed in a very clever manner.

In the picture Eve is shown reaching for the forbidden apple, and as this scene flashed on the screen the lights were dimmed and the curtain rose on the dancer standing in the same pose. After her dance, which was supplemented by special music, the picture was resumed and the beauty and novelty of the performance proved by the box office that such efforts do pay the exhibitor in the smaller towns.

Procession of Dogs Advertises "A Dog's Life"

Recently the whole population of Stanley, Wis., was aroused to what seemed to be a parade of every dog in the universe down the main street. Some of them concluded that the Pied Piper had come to town and was making his appeal canine. But others remembered that Tom Foster, manager of the Star theatre, had advertised for everybody to bring his dog to the theatre that morning and had then adorned them with signs reading "I'm On My Way to the Star theatre to see Charlie Chaplin in 'A Dog's Life.'" Of course the processions got lots of attention in themselves and there were impromptu dog fights galore that added to the interest. Mr. Foster reports the stunt brought him business.

Attractive Photos in Windows Bring This Exhibitor Crowds

Fred W. Hermann, manager of the Savoy theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., believes in making the appeal to women every time he gets a chance, and he saw the opportunity when he witnessed the screening of Anita Stewart in "A Midnight Romance." He decided that there should be a display in every store in the city that made an appeal to women.

But at the same time he realized that he had to keep those displays on the same high plane as the shops he used. So he selected a score or more of pictures of Miss Stewart and had these mounted like the regular cabinet-size photographs and then a corner clip-over bearing the words: "Savoy. Charming Anita Stewart in "A Midnight Romance," and the dates of showing. The type for all but the name of Miss Stewart was very small.

Not only did all the merchants requested allow the pictures in their windows, but many who had not been requested themselves called up the theatre asking for such displays. Mr. Hermann says of the pictures: "They were beautiful things and were attractive to the women, just the people I wanted to reach, and seventy per cent of my patrons, by the way—and to bring them to associate Miss Stewart's name with 'A Midnight Romance.' In this I was successful. It is a simple thing, but satisfactory."

Mark Gates Scores Big Hit with His Anniversary Bill at the Dayton Theatre

LAST week the Dayton theatre, Dayton, O., and one of the finest houses in the country, observed its birthday. The Dayton owes a large share of the success to Mark Gates, the managing director and the man who is responsible for the construction of the splendid theatre. Mr. Gates was also instrumental in the construction of the Circle, Indianapolis, now under the direction of S. Barret McCormick. The Dayton has a seating capacity of 2500, making it the largest motion picture theatre in Ohio, though Dayton is the fifth city of the State.

Policy at the Dayton is to show the big features immediately on their release and many productions have been seen there before they have been shown in New York. Mr. Gates is one of the strongest believers in advertising and has set a new mark in that city. Much of his advertising has been reproduced in these pages. Music is another of the features and special scores are prepared for all the features with overtures and vocal numbers used.

Nazimova in "The Red Lantern" was the anniversary week attraction and a big advertising campaign was used to put it over in the best possible manner. A distinctive Chinese atmosphere was given the theatre and the lobby was a bower of flowers with cherry blossoms predominating, while red lanterns and Chinese parasols carried out the effect. Girls in the box office and the ushers were attired in Chinese costumes.

Mr. Gates received congratulations from many producers and exchange men on his anniversary bill.

Atmosphere All Over Theatre as Franklin Presents "The Red Lantern" in Buffalo

HAROLD B. Franklin, managing editor of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, last week succeeded in surrounding his presentation of "The Red Lantern" with a delightfully inviting atmosphere through the origination of several novelties, which though unusual were still of a dignified character thoroughly in keeping with the character of this big house. Frequently the dignity of advertising is imposed upon in the use of novelties, yet here were several distinctive ones that stood out and attracted much attention.

For a week previous to the actual showing of the picture a special trailer was used depicting some of the big scenes in "The Red Lantern." This in itself would not be a novelty, were it not for the fact that Mr. Franklin unveiled two characteristic settings in the side panels at the same time that the trailer was screened. Illustration "A" shows these settings, the center panel, which is a reproduction of the famous painting "The Sheperd" was replaced by the trailer itself. The sets were illuminated in red and soft orange effects, the subjects being of a Far East character, and the music accompaniment being characteristically Chinese.

THE RED LANTERN

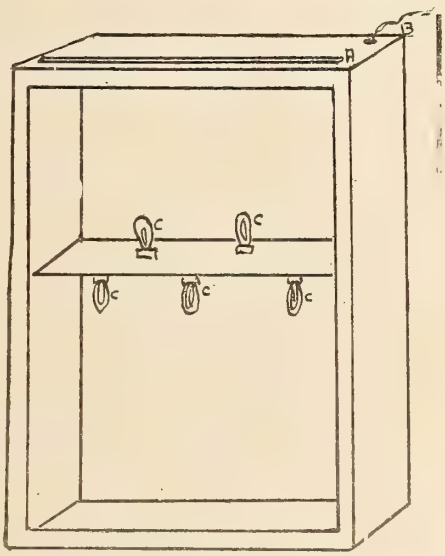
Striking life-sized cut-out that was used for lobby display



How Franklin arranged illuminated announcements. "A" indicates slide for card, "B" lamp cord, and "C" electric lights

In connection with the advance announcement, Mr. Franklin also conceived what is probably the newest idea in displaying posters. He prepared a special frame, attractively finished in mahogany to harmonize with the regular frames. In these frames were placed cut outs from posters obtained from the exchange and illuminated from behind as shown in illustration "B." This photo shows two of these frames, several of which were placed along the lobby. While the striking effect is lost in the photograph, it was indeed startling to see a clear blue sky with its reflection in the waters below, as shown in garden scene from the production in the first panel, and the name Nazimova and the lantern lighted in the second panel in brilliant red.

Photo "C" shows a life size cutout prepared from material obtainable at the exchange, the red lantern in the upper corner being lighted with red incadescent bulbs. The figure of Nazimova was brought out in natural color with a background of black, red and gold.

For the presentation itself, huge Chinese lanterns were hung on each side of the screen which dimmed up into a brilliant red at the prelude played to the opening of the picture, which with Chinese gongs and insense burning from huge jardinieres gave the desired atmosphere and distinguished the picture from the commonplace. During the opening of the picture two new side settings were also unveiled again, depicting scenes of an Oriental flavor.

The illustrations show the large 12-inch ad used on the Saturday and Sunday dramatic Effective use of announcement cards. Diagram above shows the light plan

Mighty seldom that the exchanges break into this department, but Manager C. E. Smith of the Chicago Metro office fitted up such a wonderful display in his exchange that it conveys many hints to exhibitors. Chinese effects are used everywhere, and these suggest displays that showmen may use in their lobbies and in show windows. The cut-out in the center panel is particularly attractive, and is sure to get business for any theatre pages, and the small three-inch ad used on Monday, both of which through the well arranged reading matter and illustrations, showed up wonderfully well and were given predominating position in the makeup. The Monday ad, while small, stood out like a house afire because of its "unusualness."

The production was screened several times by Mr. Franklin and Alfred Moulton, musical director, and an excellent original musical setting arranged. While the Chinese motif was maintained, it was not allowed to dominate. This on the theory that a seven-reel production would become monotonous with an entire setting of Oriental melody. In the Hippodrome score there was plenty of light and shade.

During the showing of the picture huge Chinese lanterns were suspended in the lobbies from the large clusters and large bamboo poles with lanterns atop placed here and there about the big stage.

The supplementary films of the program were in contrast with the program feature. The comedy was Mack Sennett's latest with the orchestra played a "jazz" accompaniment. The Hippodrome Magazine and The Topics of the Day completing the program. The stage setting was a reproduction of the "Fishing Boat of Dieppe," by Flaeming. The overture was "Stradella," by von Flotow.

Rural Stage Settings Accompany Features at the New Garricks in the Twin Cities

MANAGER JULIUS JOHNSON has just completed a successful week's showing of "The Turn in the Road" during which he had a special setting to get just the right atmosphere in the New Garrick theatre, Minneapolis.

Mr. Johnson is his own organist—in fact, that is the way that he entered the motion picture business, and plays his own overtures. With this picture he used "William Tell" on the pipe organ. Pathe News with views of a local aeroplane accident added followed and two vocal selections by the Minneapolis Ladies Quartette, which goes to France within a fortnight preceded the screening of the feature. A Billy Parsons' comedy completed the program.

For the stage setting for "The Turn in the Road," Mr. Johnson used a left-hand panel drop, showing a quiet country farmhouse centered among a cluster of big trees with a whitened road turning as it came from behind a distant hill and into the foreground. On the right side of the stage a wooded scene and a red barn on a green hillside made up the second harmonious panel. Red, yellow, blue and green lights faded in and out of these panels, as Mr. Johnson began "William Tell," and as the tempo of the piece became more agitato the stage was darkened, and lightning, thunder and rain effects added to the setting.

The ladies quartette sang its selections from the central panel where the screen was raised. A grand piano, the ladies in white evening costumes were flooded with soft amber and red light, the latter coming from a high stand lamp which stood beside the piano, and from a border strip atop the opening. As the last song was completed the purple velvet curtains closed over the setting to allow for the dropping of the picture sheet and the feature started off on the plush gradually creeping on the screen as the curtains were withdrawn.

It was a rather strange coincidence at the New Garrick, in the other twin city, St. Paul, there was also a rural setting arranged by Manager Theo. L. Hays. The attraction was "The Romance of Happy Valley." The program there opened with the setting showing a farmer boy leaning on the handle of a pitchfork and looking toward a distant mountain on which various lights effects played. As the setting was darkened and clouds began to pass before the pale moon, which gradually rose and reflected in a stream which ran alongside of the hill, the boy turned toward the audience, laid aside his fork and sang a popular song with full orchestral accompaniment, and as an encore with clarinet, violin and harp. As the encore was completed the stage was darkened, and the velvet curtains drawn across the setting as the singer bowed his way to the left. As soon as the curtains touched they parted again, and the Pathe Weekly was flashed on the screen. This reel was followed by local pictures showing the Liberty parade.

D. W. Griffith's most recent war story, "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," was the feature film at the New Garrick theatre the following week.

During the overture, "Raymond," the stage drops parted, and disclosed a distant hill at sunset with the sun's rays streaking through slowly moving clouds and other rays playing upon the stream that worked through the bed of the valley.

How New York Stages the Show

PROBABLY the most popular three women stars in motion pictures are at the three leading New York photoplay houses this week, Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark and Norma Talmadge. Two of them are seen in comedy and the third in a very tense Russian drama. And in another way there is a coincidence, for there is not a scenic on the bill at any of the houses, something that we have never known before.

Strand has Mary Pickford in the first of her First National subjects and the feature is so long that there have to be cuts made in other portions of the program. This has led to a combination of the overture with a solo that is very effective. One other vocal number, the Strand Topical and the latest Sennett comedy, "When Love Is Blind" completes the bill.

Norma Talmadge is at the Rivoli in "The New Moon," a story of Bolshevik Russia and to relieve the tenseness, there is a Mutt and Jeff used very early in the magazine and the usual comedy at the end. The Rivoli is also showing "When Love Is Blind." There is a particularly effective arrangement of the second orchestra selection, "A Forge in the Forest" with a special setting.

This is another all-comedy week at the Rialto, with Marguerite Clark in "Come Out of the Kitchen" as the feature, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew in "Harold, the Last of the Saxons" and one of the Charles Chaplin revivals, "The Cure." The element of humor is carried even into the overture and there is a dance of three girls before a special setting that is in keeping with the theme for the week.

Rialto Theatre

DR. RIESENFELD is putting on another one of his all-comedy bills at the Rialto this week and keeps his audience laughing throughout the show. Everything on the program, including the music, has a touch of comedy to it.

It is mighty seldom that we have occasion to find fault with anything that is done at the Riesenfeld theatres, but there is to us a distinctly jarring note in the introduction of an announcer this week. This man wearing a full dress and a silk hat appears at the edge of the stage before each number and tells what is to come next. In our opinion it serves to chop the program to pieces instead of allowing it to remain a symphonic whole. And neither did we think very highly of the gentleman's brand of humor.

But with that out of our systems, let us go into the good parts of the very excellent bill, made all the more pleasing by the music and effects. "The Merry Wives of Windsor" is the overture this week and this highly tuneful selection is played with the lights all in red, coming up to gold at the end.

Rialto Magazine opens with Pathe pictures of the allies taking charge of the Austrian naval base at Cattaro and her fleet seized. There is applause for the scenes of the French sailors presenting arms to the Serbian garrison and for a French cruiser and submarine that had been captured by the Austrians and now released. "To the Nation's Honor" is played here. Then come the "Topplitsky Sayinks" which have become a regular Rialto feature and here "My Desert Fantasy" is played.

Gaumont presents some interesting pictures of the Prince of Wales flying over England and here "Sons of Britain" is used with the orchestra fading down for effects as the flight scenes are shown. Pathe has views of the parade in Chinatown in honor of the Chinese who served in the American army and of one who had a D. S. C. medal. Pictures of the Oriental-Americans buying Victory Bonds are included and "Chinese Serenade" is used. Kinograms illustrated the way to remove a stone house in ten minutes with the use of dynamite. Here a dramatic allegro is used with tympany and organ rumble for the explosion scene. From the same source comes the climax to the magazine with pictures of Paris honoring the British heroes of Zeebrugge. The marching men and Admiral Beatty get a large amount of applause and the brilliant rendition of "March Lorraine" adds a considerable part to the enthusiasm.

Emauel List then renders "Down in the Well" and then comes the latest of the Sidney Drew comedies, "Harold the Saxon." There was a touch of sadness here, for lots of us at least imagined that we could see on the late comedian's face evidence of the illness that was to take him away shortly after this picture was made. It is a story of amateur theatricals and gets lots of laughs.

"First Love" is played at the screening and then when Polly is pleading with him to take part in the play we have "Cuckoo" used without the introduction and then with the title "the next evening" there is a change to "Babillage" and with the introduction of "Boadicea" we have "Lohengrin" cleverly employed, with "Babillage" following through. Then when the bartender enters there is "Mamma's Blues" played on the brasses and cymbals only with "Sinbad" taking the place at the title "endless drilling." As the bartender crosses the stage "Re di Lahore" is played and at the point where he falls down there is a drum roll with the orchestra tacit a moment and then "Sinbad" played again.

Later that evening with the Drews at their home we have "I Love You" used. With the arrival of the big night there is a change to "Dixiana' and as the curtain rises the music goes into "Shakespeare Songs." Then with the announcement that King Harold comes there is a trumpet call and tympany rumble and then with his arrival on the stage there is "Hugenots" changing to "Zoo Step" with the title "The play went on" and then with the second rising of the curtain "Navarraise" was used as especially arranged. When the fight starts there is a change to "Honky" and as the woman comes on the stage to ask Henry to appear in her play "Inquisitive Woman" is used with "Aida" at the end as he points his finger for her to get out. The picture gets a good hand at the end.

Still further carrying out the comedy idea we now have "The Jester's Dance," staged by Adolf Bolm of the Metropolitan and with a beautiful stage setting designed by John Wenger. The curtains at either side of the stage part with the first of the music revealing beautiful Venetian water scenes with the lights all down to blue. Then we have the dance with two girls in costume and the third girl attired as a Jester. It is splendidly done and wins the heartiest of applause.

Then comes the feature, Marguerite Clark in "Come Out of the Kitchen." This deals with a poor but proud Southern family and therefore Dr. Riesenfeld has aptly used much Southern music in his score. At the screening we have "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny" used and then with the title "Another old Southern family' there is a change to "Down South" and then "Uncle Remus" with the introduction of Charles, while "Tulips" is played on the appearance of Randolph Weeks. For the scene where the auto drives up to the home "After Vespers" is used as arranged, changing to "Gems from Stephen Foster" for the arrival of Crane. "I'll Pray for You" gets a laugh as it is used for Mrs. Faulkner, the haughty society woman and then "Molly Dear" as Claudia introduces herself as the Irish cook, and then with the scene showing Claudia trying to do the cooking "Cousin Jasper" is employed.

After that selection the organ takes up the music and plays the greater portion of the picture coming back with the title "Determined to stick together," and playing "Love's Melody" with a change to a minuet for the sleeping youth and then to "Clematis" as the girl runs upstairs. The theme Friml's "Adieu" is used for the first time with the title "Then you will serve" and with the serving of the dinner "Picking Peaches" is played. Then when she gets the letter saying that the operation on her father is a complete success "Sunny South Overture" is used. "Yesterthoughts" is played where Crane enters the kitchen and then as he turns to the brother and says "With your permission" before asking Claudia to "come out of the kitchen" the theme comes in and is used to the end.

Then comes more and more comedy with a revival of Charlie Chaplin's "The Cure." It is because probably that we never heard such music played with this picture when it was fresh that we enjoyed it all the more at the Rialto Sunday, but we have impressed upon you before the earnest attention that Dr. Riesenfeld gives the comedies. "He's a Jolly Good Fellow" is used at the screening and with the title "To be cured of drinking" there is a change to "Chaplin Feet." Then for the scene when Chaplin and the other man get caught in the revolving doors "He Walked Right In and Turned Around and Walked Right Out Again" is played with laugh provoking results changing to "Buster" as the door is jammed. With the title "His wardrobe" "Steve" is used with a change to "Minnie, Shimmee for Me' as Charlie is invited to come and take the water, and to "Chaplin Feet" as he runs away.

When the villain is seen flirting with the girl "Limbo Land" is played and as Chaplin goes to the bath "Slippery Hank." Here we have all sorts of imitations as the comedian shunts from one place to another and then as Chaplin is seen posing the ballet from "Faust" is used, with a chord for each pose. Then for the massaging scenes "Won't You Help Me" is used and when Chaplin is told that he is next "Kangaroo Hop" is played with "Clouds" coming in with the title "The next morning" and being played to the end.

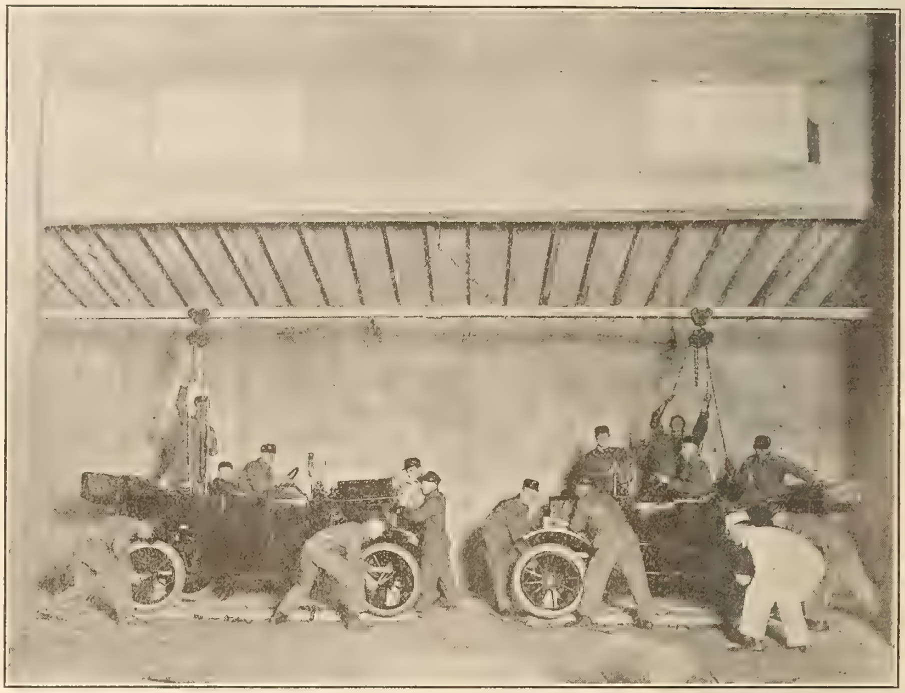
Merkel's "Album Leaf in E" is the organ solo.

Strand Theatre

WITH the feature unusually long Managing Director Jos. L. Plunkett has had to cut down from his usual program this week, and he has both saved time of the performance and supplied a happy effect by combining a song with the overture, and a special setting.

There is an unusual musical setting for the feature, too, that exhibitors will do well to study, because this picture is particularly subject to musical treatment and proper playing will get a great deal more out of it. Mr. Plunkett has a wide selection in his arrangement.

Selections from "The Red Mill" from the overture and several of the airs are played with the lights in gold and then at the start of "Moonbeams" the lights go down to purple and the curtains part revealing a landscape with reclining sheep and a lake in the background and in the foreground a moving windmill with a light in the window and the moon shining above. Miss Ann Rutledge in Dutch costume stands at the right of the stage and then sings "Moonbeams" in that charming way of hers that has made her one of the greatest favorites with Strand patrons. It makes a pronounced hit.



Scene on the stage during the Ford assembling contest which attracted so much attention at Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles. An account of this was printed here last week. It won much newspaper publicity

Strand Topical opens with Pathe pictures of more American soldiers going from Hoboken to Germany. These are volunteers for the Army of Occupation and they get a big hand. "We're All Going Calling on the Kaiser" is the most appropriate music. Pathe also shows the start of the three navy flyers from Rockaway Beach. There are some fine shots including some striking close-ups of the motor and then pictures taken from another airship, one of which shows one of the big flyers coming straight at the camera "America First" is played here. Then with the pictures of the ruins of Trinidad "Evening Reverie" is used and the Pathe analysis of motion picture brings "Reconciliation." The final punch at the end comes with Pathe pictures of American soldiers posting Victory Loan posters at Porta Nigra, Germany, and the astonished Huns looking on and then International Views of Secretary Daniels reviewing the "Devil Dogs." There is a fine shot of the color bearers with the American flag and the Marine standard marching right toward the camera and the men passing in review before it. "Sons of Uncle Sam" is used for both of these pictures.

Immediately following the Topical comes the feature, Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs." "Ecstasy" is used at the screening and then with the title "Baby Souls" there is a change to the first selection of "Suite Enfantine." With the title "The late John Grier" brings us "A Fanciful Vision" and with the christening of the rich child "Camelia." With the introduction of Judy (Mary Pickford) "Sunbeams" is played.

Comedy is helped along at the scene where the matrons hear the noise when the "Lump of Sugar" is played heavily accented, and then at the point where the orphans see the matrons there is a sudden pause followed by "The Snow is Dancing," played to action. When we see the man stealing there is a dramatic agitato used and with the view of Judy and the kid on the hunger strike "Bleeding Hearts" is used. When Judy swings to the trapeze we have "Elfenreigen" and then for the scene of the drunken dog "Essence Grotesque."

When Judy tells the children to take all the jam they want we have "Garden Dance" until the title of "Whispering Chorus" when there is "Bluette" changing again to the "Dance of the Clowns" as the jam-eaters are discovered. With the title "Judy calls the monthly visits of the board" the organ takes up the music for 22 minutes. It comes back with Mary leaving on the train with the engine bell effects and "Evening Rambles." Where we have the homesick girls "Love Fancies" is played once and then follows through "Conte Amusante."

Where we see the headquarters of Dan Cupid "Arlequin and Colombine" is played and then with Judy's first literary effort we have "Romeo and Juliet" and then where the screen gives the effect of the curtain rising on the outdoor performance with Judy as "Juliet" the love scene from "Romeo" is played, and then with the curtain coming down there is a change to "Butterflies" with the introduction to

Music Hints For Entire Programs

Lock Willow farm "The Bee and the Flowers" becomes the accompaniment, changing to "Cherry Blossoms" at the title "Why Judy put up her hair" and to "Moon Glow" as Jimmy greets Judy.

Then with the title "Moon magic" and the scenes between Judy and Jarvis Pendleton "Think Love of Me," which becomes the theme, is used for the first time, and as the auto drives away with Jarvis it is carried for a short time on the organ. When Judy asks what's the use of graduation if you have no one that loves you around "March Nuptiale" is used. Now time passes and we have Judy as a successful author received by society and here "Bluette" is played and with the cops chasing Jimmy "Wedding Blues" is used without the introduction. The theme comes back again as Judy and Jarvis are seen sitting at the window and then with the title "The big moment of Judy's life" there is a change to "Woodland Echoes." With Judy making her decision to go to see Daddy Longlegs there is "Dream Flowers," the theme returning to the end where Jarvis says that he wasn't permitted to open his mail. There is a big laugh with the kicking girl at the end that almost drowns out the music.

Redferne Hollinshead, a splendid tenor then sings "Like Stars Above" and "You'll Find a Shamrock Blooming in Every Irish Heart."

There was lots and lots of comedy in the feature and there is still more of it the Mack Sennett comedy that winds up the bill, "When Love is Blind." This is full of chase stuff with the slick crook who gets the crowds into all sorts of jambs and the result is an almost constant roar of laughter. Ben Turpin and Charles Lynn have the role of the rivals while Marvel Rea, Phillis Haver and Marie Prevost add the pretty girl element. And Mack doesn't hide the sort of hosiery that they wear. The croquet scene is one of the funniest that has been put into pictures.

At the Strand "You'll Have to Put Him to Sleep" is played at the screening and is then followed through with "Jazz Baby" until the girl declares "I love brave men" and there the organ takes it up continuing until the appearance of the bear when "Le Taquin" is used. Then with the warning that the house is full of crooks there is a mysterioso until the scene at the end with the two girls when "Can You Tame Wild Women" is played.

Selections from "Rigoletto" form the organ solo.

A. J. Moeller arranged this attractive display in the lobby for the showing of "A Romance of Happy Valley" at the Theatre De Luxe, Detroit. The lobby is very large and so a portion of the floor space could well be spared

Rivoli Theatre

BECAUSE there is not a laugh in the feature there has been comedy placed in the Rivoli Magazine this week and it also follows in its customary place on the bill at the end. Wonderful music, both in the screening of the feature and for the musical numbers help a great deal to clear away the tenseness.

Liszt's "Thirteenth Rhapsody" is the overture and it is played with all the lights in red. The music at the start is in the minors and is carried on flute, 'cellos, piccolos and minor horn effects. About half way through there is a czimbalon solo, then the flute and light strings come in and finally into the full orchestra with the brasses. Then there is a xylophone playing with the czimbalon and then a drum roll and a martial strain, going back to the strings and a brilliant burst at the end. It is a selection that is little played, but it makes a big hit at the Rivoli.

Rivoli Magazine opens with Kimogram pictures of the naval flyers making their start for Newfoundland for their "hop" across. There are some fine views here many of them being taken from an accompanying machine. "Hands Across the Sea" is the music, but the orchestra becomes tacit as Production Manager Jos. LaRose gets in his realistic effects of the speeding motors.

Now we start to laughing with Mutt and Jeff in "Left at the Post." Here we are shown Mutt eating hay and as we have the orchestra playing "Snookum Hollow" there are wails of a human voice from the orchestra pit that get more laughs. Then we also have imitations of the weeping as the girl is seen crying and as Mutt and Jeff join her in tears. With the title "Where's your husband" there is a change of the music to "You'll Do It All Over Again." With the appearance of the villain "The Plunger" is played and then as we have the wild horse kicking the stablemen out one by one we have the whistle effects with the auto horns for the chase and then the race effects for the horses running, with whistles again when Mutt and Jeff are seen waiting. At the title "Five hours later" "All Night" is played to the end of the cartoon.

Kinograms shows us how the W. S. S. are made at Washington to the music of "Midsummer" and from the same source we have view of clearing Fox Lake, Ill., of Hun fish—carp—and "Bees" is used. Then come International Pictures of the funeral of Archbishop Hayes with the organ carrying the music and Gaumont furnishes a comic relief with a negro baptism at Lake Charles, La. Here "A Cyclone In Darktown" is played.

Now comes the punch at the end. First we have International views of the doughboy doughnuts gathering money for the Victory Loan with the Salvation Army lassies at work and here "Monstratvia" is played. Then come the International pictures of the Marije review in Germany and here "Semper Fidelis" is played with the full orchestra.

Here we have the only vocal number on the bill, the trio from "La Gioconda" rendered by Ann Rosner, Mlle. Pascova and Martin Brefel. For this there is a special setting with a square window at the rear, an evergreen on either side of the window and a hanging candelabra in the center.

"The New Moon" with Norma Talmadge as the star is the feature. This is based on the present situation in Russia with the Bolshevik decree as to women as

WATCHING CLOCK

Your People Don't Come to the Theatre for That

JUST happened to pick up a copy of a newspaper and find there an article advocating that a certain theatre put in a clock for the benefit of the patrons. We hope that this is only a stray request.

We don't have to go back very far to the time when houses had a clock to the left or right of the screen. It was generally such an eyesore that it spoiled half of the enjoyment of the picture.

It's well enough to provide a clock somewhere in the rear of the house for the convenience of those who want to know the time, but to keep it out of the picture vision. It is a strange sort of a theatre these days where people come to either voluntarily or against their will watch the clock.

Make their enjoyment so keen that they WON'T CARE what the time may be.

New York's Way

the underlying strain. It is a very tense drama with considerable of tragedy. The musical interpretation at the Rivoli is splendid but most of the selections used are the numbered ones from the great musical library of the two houses.

At the screening "Moussorgskyana" is played going into a numbered selection with the introduction of Kosloff and a tympany rumble with the title "The spreading of the flame." For the scene of the ball at the palace the polonaise from "Eugen Onegin" is played followed by a tympany rumble for the scene at the Bolshevik meeting. With the arrival of Michael at the ball the waltz from "Eugen Onegin" is used.

Numbered selections then follow until the title "Wherefore we love them not" and here "In the Silence of the Night" is used followed by "Danse Russe" for the scene in Volsk. With the pictures of the anarchist club "Siege of Kazan" is played and then the organ until the title where Sonia sees Michael and then we have the theme introduced, "Russian Romance." Again numbered selections follow until almost the end and then with the scene at the Saratoff border "A Russian Pansy" is played with the theme coming back with the title "The New Moon."

There is a pretty effect with the second orchestra selection, "A Forge in the Forest." The house lights are all in blue here the selection is started and we have the songs of the birds in the forest and beautiful effects. Then the stage curtains part revealing a scene in the forest with the mountains rising at either side and just a little of red light upon it. Then we have the anvil effects from the orchestra and the electrical arrangements so that they get the flash with each stroke.

Mack Sennett's "When Love is Blind" is also shown at the Rivoli this week. At the screening "Mr. Jazz Himself" is used and then with the title "Borrowing an umbrella" "Have a Smile" is played. At the start of the croquet game there is a change to "Geraldine" and as the cat appears "Me-ow." With the title "Hotel thieves active" "Limbo Land" comes in and when the man with the cane is seen "Good Scout." With the appearance of the diving girl the music becomes "The Spinning Wheel" and with the title "I might be lonesome" there is used "Trombone Ball" twice through with all the jazz effects and the trombone dominant. Then "Frivolity" follows through to the end. Of course there are all the effects with which the Rivoli orchestra is so proficient.

Selections from "Faust" make up the organ solo.

To give it all a boost, the Express will run a picture of the window display which is selected as the best and the Empire management will give $10 worth of tickets to the decorator who designs the display.

All that's necessary to get in on the free publicity and a chance at the tickets is to make mention somewhere in the display which should be in the window by Wednesday, that "Anita Stewart in 'A Midnight Romance' is at the Empire." Just give this to your window man and don't bother to thank me.

The result was nine full window displays in the best stores of the city, and they were all window displays that people would stop and look at (Don't ask why, just think a moment)—and big business for the Empire.

Rothapfel Shows Dream as an Accomplished Fact

By the Creator of “Seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel”

NEARLY two years ago the exhibitors of the country were for the first time literally taken behind the scenes with Samuel L. Rothapfel and shown in detail week after week by Motion Picture News how he made his presentations and why he did the different things. This continued as a weekly feature until the opening of the Rivoli, and later was succeeded by the present heading.

All of which is purely introductory, for one of the first things that Mr. Rothapfel confided to the writer was that he wanted to produce pictures. He always showed his willingness to do anything possible to aid other exhibitors, and devoted hours of his time to articles and answering questions through the Motion Picturé News. But he was not content with that, for he wanted to help elevate the motion picture business throughout the country not by mere advice and not by simply telling what he was doing, but by giving them the concrete product.

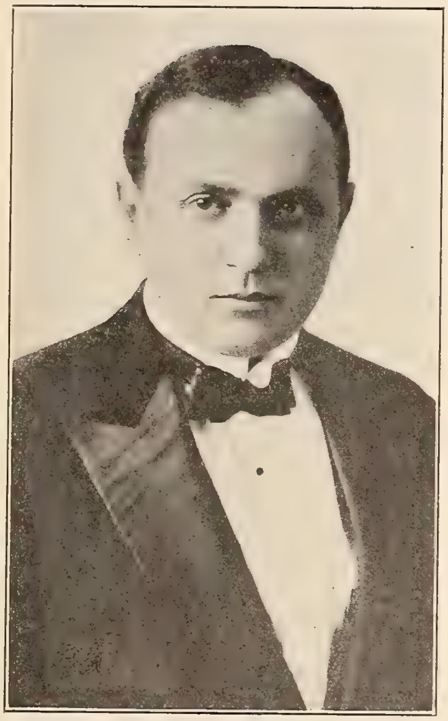
On the ninth of May—for nine is Rothapfel's lucky number—count the letters in his name—he showed his art to the biggest crowd that ever attended an invitation premiere in New York—a crowd that filled every seat in the house—so much so that we could change when we found ourselves wedged between two fat ladies who were considerably too wide for their chairs. And for enthusiasm and appreciation of the work of Mr. Rothapfel, it was evidenced again and again.

TO most of those who have been familiar with the way that he put on shows at the Rialto and the Rivoli, the presentation was a disappointment—the sort of a disappointment that means a whole lot of the exhibitors. Most of the wiseacres expected that the first Rothapfel Unit Program would be invested in a bunch of scenic settings and elaborately staged musical numbers. As soon as the announcement of his plans had been made there were the question: “How are the smaller exhibitors going to afford all of those scenic settings? Is he going to ship them around the country? Pooh, it can't be done.

And so they were disappointed because there is not a scenic setting in the program as shown at the Rialto. For Mr. Rothapfel has gone further than a mere setting or series and sets, and has gathered together all of the elements of a program in a symphonic whole. There is distinctly a theme—that of the pursuit of happiness running through the series of pictures, and they are blended so perfectly that the effect on the average spectator after the program is completed is that of artistic delight.

There is ample opportunity to elaborate and put in the scenic settings that the individual exhibitors may desire, but the point is that they are not necessary and that the enjoyment of this program can be just as keen in the smaller house as in the biggest provided the exhibitor will follow carefully the very simple directions that go with the unit program.

SO the first thing that the exhibitor wants to know is what he is going to get besides the pictures. He gets the complete musical score with the various selections bound together, the signs and the cuts all properly made so that any one who can read and play music can get every note in at exactly the proper place. These complete musical scores are to be shipped with the pictures themselves, and will cover all sorts of musical conditions even down to the theatre that uses nothing more than a piano.



Samuel L. Rothapfel

There are also instructions for the lighting effects, and these are very simple, and it is suggested to the individual exhibitor that he can probably best work out those most fitted to his house. And then there are general suggestions to the leader of the orchestra—all of these very simple and very brief, because the arrangement of the program is such that there is nothing to puzzle.

This musical score has been prepared by Mr. Rothapfel and Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, who was musical director of the Rialto and Rivoli, while Mr. Rothapfel was managing director, and who has now taken the latter's place. Hours and hours have been spent in working this out, and it includes a wide range of numbers including several original selections.

NOW, let us look at the presentation as it was given at the Rialto to the exhibitors and members of the industry. There were some little touches added here because of this being a premiere that are not needed in the regular theatre showing. For instance, the presentation was opened with the playing of “The Star Spangled Banner,” and during the overture and the Marine picture, there was a detachment of marines on either side of the theatre.

The overture as especially arranged by Mr. Rothapfel and Dr. Riesenfield is a brilliant composition, full of light and life with a military note at times coming in “First Unit Programme, 1919,” is the title of it. Then there is a film announcement of the program and a statement from Mr. Rothapfel as to why he has gone into the producing end of the business, and what the program seeks to accomplish. It is an announcement that is made purely for the understanding of the exhibitor. There is a clever little touch added here with the playing of “The Anvil Chorus” during the screening.

Now the first picture, “The Woods of Fair Water,” is an immortalization of the famous achievement of the “Devil Dogs” at “Belleau Wood,” and is intended as the climax, or the final punch of the news weekly. Mr. Rothapfel is really the originator of making his own arrangements of news pictures, and he realizes their value too keenly to offer a program that would omit these. So he suggests that the exhibitor make those selections for himself, and then add the Fair Water Picture at the end. Lighting here is down in blue.

SCENIC element is furnished by views of the shell-marked wood, and there are some clever effects with the fading into the scene of the marching marines that will bring out the greatest applause with a few strains of “Marseillaise” brought in, and then “Marine Hymn,” with “Taps,” sounded at an indicated place and then a militant finish. During the showing at the Rialto the Rialto Male Quartette sang the “Marine Hymn,” and this is a splendid idea for exhibitors who can get the singers. They should be stationed where they cannot be seen.

The next picture can best be called a prelude to the deayure. It is based on Massenets “Elegie.” This music is brought in twice and “Angelus” is all used twice. “The Last Hour” is the title and it features J. H. Gilmore, telling the story of an old man who has devoted all his life to gathering money and his dreams of the things that might have been now that his time has come. As presented at the Rialto there was a song rendered at the title, “And now his time has come to die.”

“False Gods” is the feature that follows immediately. This is a screen version of E. Lloyd Sheldon's famous drama and

Representative exhibitors of the United States gathered in New York for the Rothapfel showing and the dinner tendered him at the Astor. His venture was voted a big success the cast includes Grace Darling, Hugh Thompson, Florence Billings, Harry Meystayed, Ida Darling, Alfred Hickman and Leo Delaney. It is the story of man and wife who are happy in each other's love until they are thrown into society and compelled to sacrifice their own desires to the custom of the "set," to trade personality on business, resulting in entanglements of the husband with a young widow and the wife with two "men of the world." It is essentially a gripping drama, but one with a happy ending.

Huerter's "Melodie" is the theme used, but we are not going into the discussion of the music here, for it is all supplied to the exhibitors who are going to show this and useless to those who are not.

NOW comes just one of those little bits that gives your audiences a chuckle without tiring. It is entitled "A Thought of Equity," and in cartoon form with just three pictures and three sentences: "The duck eats the worm. The man eats the duck. The worm eats the man."

Now there has been fantasy in the marine picture and in the prelude to the feature and there is more of it in the comedy, "Wild Flowers," by George V. Hobart. The program calls it a new idea comedy and it certainly is. We would advise exhibitors in their advance notices to tell no more about this than the fact that it is written by the noted lyricist. Here is something that is going to create you a world of word of mouth advertising and you do not want to take the edge off it by trying to tell the story. It comes at the end of the bill so let it advertise the Unit Program for you to those who have not seen it.

FOR the benefit of exhibitors it is the story of the adventures of two young New York girls of the "chicken" class. It is satirical and extremely funny and it never borders on the vulgar. There are additional laughs added with the animated subtitles in which two cartoon characters go through a merry chase. Now there is an original composition supplied that is played with each of the sub-titles, a bit that is carried largely on the horns in a large orchestra and one that will help the laughs along a lot. By all means it should be made just as indicated. Other selections used in the comedy, in the order that they are played, are MacMillen's "Causerie" ("Prairie Flower") "I'm Always Chasing Rainbows," "Palmetto Hop," "Eyes That Say I Love You," "Lily of the Valley" and "Shim-Me-Sha-Wabble."

AS we have said, the exhibitor who has booked this program needn't worry any about trouble that he is going to have in showing it. The art of Mr. Rothapfel as an exhibitor and his knowledge of all classes of theatres from the little room behind the saloon in the Pennsylvania mining town to the Rivoli as the background for his ability as a producer has enabled him to take care of all of these things .

Then what about the exploitation?

Now in the first place we would not worry about this program being too high a class for the ordinary motion picture fan, because in our opinion the average person who enjoys any good show will be delighted with this one. The people that you want to reach are those that you rarely get to your theatre and we would advise you to go after everyone of these with the most intensive campaign that you have ever used. All of the exploitation should be dignified, but particularly the letters that you send to your mailing list. And as we have indicated, we would not confine this merely to the regular list, but it should go to every one.

You should tell your patrons briefly whom Rothhapfel is. Remember that we in the industry come to know all about the leaders, but the general public should be informed.

In the first place, we believe that your newspaper will be glad to carry just the sort of matter that you want, telling his career, and that the man who has been called the world's premier exhibitor has now become a producer, so that he may give his own ideas to the whole world instead of confining them to New York City.

You only have to explain the high class of this program to get the hearty co-operation of the newspapers, if they are really interested in the upbuilding of the city.

YOUR letter should be along the same lines. Tell them who he is and then his reasons for becoming a producer. Cite to them that his dreams of the best in motion pictures are represented by this work, and that you are able to present with the program exactly the same musical score that is used in New York.

Don't use cheap paper for this. Spend a little extra money and it will pay.

We would go to every woman's club in the city, and, if possible, deliver a little speech in advance of the showing, telling about the program and assure the people that you are trying to aid in the general movement for better things, and that you are presenting this program as the acme in development of motion pictures and music.

Your newspaper advertisements should call attention to the fact that you have brought New York's best to your own theatre—that your policy is always to keep in the forefront, and that when this latest development in the art came you were quick to appreciate what it meant for your patrons. Make this first general announcement at least a week before the opening of the engagement, and then a few days before the start you can tell about the individual picture.

Hit this a smash. It is a big development, and you should go after business along big lines.

Make your lobby displays look impressive. Don't ever let a hint of the "stunt" get in any of your exploitation. And that doesn't mean that the appeal should be "high brow"—but HUMAN.

Live News from the Producers

Photoplay Has Many Stars in Coming Issues

Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, announces the names of a few of the stars who will be seen in coming issues of the "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement."

Clara Kimball Young, Anita Stewart, Mary Pickford, Ethel Clayton, Mable Normand, Dorothy Dalton, Pauline Frederick and Dorothy Phillips are the feminine contingent, while Marshall Nielan, Charles Ray, Lewis Cody, Charles Chaplin and D. W. Griffith are included in the group of male stars.

In addition to the "singles" listed above, there will also be a few "teams" and "family turns" as for instance, Bert Lytell and Alice Lake, and a very impressive little "drammer," "The Troubles of a Film President" with Richard Rowland, of the Metro Pictures Corporation, supported by May Allison and Viola Dana, of the Metro players.

The fifth issue of "The Supplement" will be ready for release on June first.

Four More Prizmas

Prizma announces that it has added to its list of subjects for immediate release through World Pictures, the following four natural color films: "Hawaii," "Glacier Park," "Old Faithful," "The Apache Trail."

So far Prizma has fourteen subjects covering a wide range that affords nature lovers splendid entertainment. The four last subjects are regarded by the Prizma officials as the best offerings that have been made by this concern.

Fox and Sheehan Arrive Home

Many Achievements Accomplished Abroad—With Exception of Germany and Austria, Fox Offices Are Said to Cover World

Gladys Brockwell is presented by Wm. Fox in "The Divorce Trap"

WINFIELD R. SHEEHAN, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, returned from Europe on the Mauretania on Saturday night, May 10, after a business trip of several months abroad. William Fox, with whom Mr. Sheehan left New York, arrived home more than a week ago unannounced.

An achievement of the visit abroad is the establishment of a dozen additional exchanges, it is said, either opened or arranged to be opened. In Paris, which will serve as the continental European center of distribution, Abraham Carlos was put in charge. Offices in Lyons, Marseilles, Bordeaux and Lille were opened, and are in operation. Branches in Italy, it is said, will be Milan, Turin and Naples, with headquarters in Rome. Other branches will be Brussels, for Belgium; Amsterdam, for Holland, and Geneva, for Switzerland. With the exception of Germany and Austria, Fox offices now cover the world.

The Fox Film Corporation has been well represented in Great Britain, Australia, South America, Canada, France, Italy, Spain, Denmark, Russia, Norway, India, Java, China, Japan and Philippine Islands in the past, but will be better represented in the future, since the company, unlike many other film concerns, prefers to market its own wares. Sydney Abel is abroad now, carrying out the work recently begun by Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan.

Mr. Sheehan on arrival emphasized the point that about 5,000 new theatres are to be built in Europe now that restrictions on building materials have been removed. A country of 48,000,000 inhabitants, England has only 4,200 picture houses. The government realizes the value of the screen for propaganda and is doing everything possible to help build new theatres. For five years not a theatre has been built; and now that so many thousands of men are being released from the army there will be plenty of labor available.

France in this matter is in a condition similar to that of England. There are only 1,200 theatres there now. Some cities of 50,000 have no motion picture theatre. Within the coming year there will be twice as many as now exist. Italy has 1,000 and this number will be doubled. The Fox Film Corporation, according to the Exhibitors' Service Bureau, is leaving no stone unturned to supply a large share of the picture demand which the new theatres will create.

Universal City Reports Production Activity

FROM the West Coast comes the news that Universal City is teeming with cinematic activity at the present time and more than a dozen companies are "shooting" daily. Several of the directors are working on stories for the stars with a view of starting immediate production.

The cast for the newest Harry Carey picture, "A Man of Peace," written by Frederick Jackson, has been completed and Peggy Pearce, former Triangle Star, has been chosen to support Carey in the feminine lead.

Others who will support the star are: Joe Harris, Duke Lee, Jack Walters, Vesta Pegg, William Cartwright, Howard Enstedt and little Zoe Rae. Jack Ford is directing from the script prepared by George Hively and H. Tipton Steck, Universal staff authors.

"The Weaker Vessel," in which Mary MacLaren is starring, has been about completed by Director Paul Powell, who collaborated the story with Elmer Ellsworth, the well-known screen writer. Thurston Hall is the leading man in support of Miss MacLaren.

Eddie Polo has just finished the two-reel Western melodrama, "Cyclone Smith's Pardner." The picture was made under the direction of Jack Jaccard and is said to be one of the best of the Cyclone series. Beatrice Burnham is cast as Carey's feminine lead.

Clara Kimball Young is as good with the reel and line as she is in the reel upon the screen. The camera caught her experiencing a rest, between pictures

C. F. Zittel Makes Plan Statement

Announces Plans Made and Work Accomplished in Connection with New Series of International Cartoon Comedies

IN a statement this week General Manager C. F. Zittel, of the International Films Service, announces the plans that have been made, and the work accomplished, in connection with the new series of International cartoon comedies, now being released through the Educational Films Corporation of America.

The difficulty of turning out a five-hundred foot cartoon subject is little appreciated by the average exhibitor. The International studio staff is under the direction of Gregory La Cava, and consists of thirty artists. Finding just the right sort of people for this exacting work is not the least of the difficulties connected with cartoon making. They must be able to appreciate a funny situation from a description, and to bring out all the laughs in their finished drawings. In cartoon work, every line in the sketch, and every second of running time, is a vital part of the finished comedy, and must have the very best attention.

One man may work days on a few feet of film, and therefore an organization very nearly 100 per cent perfect must be employed to maintain a schedule of one five hundred-foot subject every week. The old International staff, that produced the original series of twenty-two releases, was thoroughly demoralized by the influenza and the demands for military service last fall, and production had to be stopped. Now, after months of effort, the staff has been built up again to a point where the quality is assured.

The exclusive International process of double animation is another detail that goes to make the finished cartoon so thoroughly enjoyable in the theatres. This process has been so perfected that the action is as smooth and natural as it would be with living characters, the only noticeable difference being that the comic folk can do stunts that are quite impossible and therefore funny. The director takes his work most seriously, almost living up to the reputation of the real humorist, who is never known to smile. He writes his scenarios, chooses his casts and directs the scenes exactly as if the comic folk were real.

The distribution of the comedies through the sixteen exchanges of the Educational Films Corporation of America has resulted in an almost complete circulation to the better theatres of this country. Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational, has not been satisfied with this distribution alone, but has accomplished a very complete sale of the foreign rights as well. The cartoons are being shipped regularly to every foreign sales territory on a contract basis that insures the international circulation of every release.

New bookings are being received daily since the inauguration of the new series in March. Mr. Zittel is planning at this time a "spring drive" to find out directly from the exhibitor just how the new product is received, and to trace down every suggestion that could result in a better comedy. Mr. Zittel intends to hold the International comedies in the first rank of cartoon releases—a position which they have earned by past performances.

One little detail of the production at the present moment is worth especial attention. The director tries to work each comic reel up to one funny climax that will be remembered. A comic line or idea that an audience will make a mental note of—to repeat to their friends. Each cartoon is presented as a part of a varied photoplay program, and it is Mr. Zittel's purpose to make each release so thoroughly enjoyable that the average spectator will go out with a remembrance of the comedy rather than the other features.

Starts "Phil for Short"

When the cast was assembled at the World Studio at Fort Lee to begin work on "Phil for Short," the new picture which Oscar Apfel is to direct with Evelyn Greeley as a star, James A. Furey and Henry Hallam, two actors with historic careers, were among those engaged.

This engagement is the first in thirty-two years that these two players had in which they are to play together. When "Erminie" was produced thirty-three years ago at the Casino theatre, New York, both Mr. Hallam and Mr. Furey were in the original production, Furey playing the Marquis de Ponvert while Hallam was cast as Eugene Marcel.

One a Week Release for "Ham and Bud"

While Jans Productions, Inc., of 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, announced that it had secured fifty-two single reel comedies from the Kalem output of 1914 featuring Ham and Bud, the Company is actually in possession of ninety-two of the Ham and Bud's, according to later reports.

F. E. Backer, general sales manager, states that out of the entire purchase of Ham and Bud comedies his concern carefully examined them and selected fifty-two of the best subjects for release through state rights exchanges one a week for a year.

"Fifteen exhibitors to every state right buyer is the proportion of inquiries received anent these re-issues," declared Mr. Backer. "This proves conclusively that the exhibitors themselves are more familiar with the entertaining powers and comedy qualities of Ham and Bud and are looking forward to the opportunity of playing them."

World Conducts Houdini Trade Showings in Many Cities

Before any of its exchanges release the picture, World Film Corporation announces that a private trade showing of the first five episodes of "The Master Mastery," the super serial starring Houdini, will be held in each of the territories it has taken over as distributing agent for Octagon Films, Inc., controlling this B. A. Rolfe production.

Arrangements for this showing have already been made and invitations mailed to exhibitors.

The territory taken over by World Film Corporation for distribution of "The Master Mystery" is embraced on the states of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Arizona, Montana and Northern Idaho.

Prominent Screen Players Support Clark

A number of well-known motion picture actors will be seen in support of Marguerite Clark when her new Paramount picture, "Come Out of the Kitchen," is released March 11. This is the photoplay based upon the famous story by Alice Duer Miller. Clara Beranger did the continuity.

The cast includes Eugene O'Brien, Craufurd Kent, Frederick Esmelton, Frances Kaye, May Kitson, Bradley Barker, Albert M. Hackett, Augusta Anderson, Rita Spear, George Stevens, Frances Grant and her ebony offspring, George Washington, who appear respectively as Mammy Jackson and "Snowball."

It is understood that Clara S. Beranger will do additional stories and continuities for Marguerite Clark.

B. P. Fineman is to Distribute

Resigns from Famous Players-Lasky and Takes Offices on Broadway—Recently Finished Tour of Exchanges

B. P. FINEMAN announced this week that he had resigned from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to enter the field as a distributor of motion pictures through the states rights exchanges. Offices have been opened at the Fitzgerald Building, and an organization is being formed to market features that are of sufficient merit to warrant their being exploited as special productions.

Immediately prior to his resignation, Mr. Fineman had made a highly successful tour of the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges in the interests of the sales department of that organization. During this trip, he paid considerable attention to the methods used by the most successful exhibitors in the exploitation of their attractions.

Mr. Fineman stated

"I am in the market for big pictures. The throwing open of the industry by the almost unanimous adoption of the open booking policy by the big distributing concerns, due to the demand of the exhibitors, has created an entirely new field for the independent producer and distributor. The big theatres will no longer be compelled to tie up all of their time, and will be able to avail themselves of the exceptional picture that is produced every once in a while by the independndt producr. That is the type of production that I am going to distribute, and I am in a position financially to handle the most elaborate productions. As a matter of fact, that is the only type of picture I am interested in—the big special production.

"Exploitation for the exhibitor of the pictures I will distribute will be a feature of my business. I believe that there are almost limitless possibilities along these lines, and I am going to see that the fullest advantage is taken of them in all pictures I will handle."

Mr. Fineman recently returned to New York after active service in the U. S. Army, as an officer in the Tank Corps. Before his entering the service, he had been a member of the Famous Players-Lasky organization. He was immediately re-engaged on his arrival by that company, and had received an important promotion just prior to his determination to go into business for himself.

"Love or Fame" Stars Elaine Hammerstein

SELZNICK Pictures Corporation announces that "Love or Fame?" is the title of the first production in which Elaine Hammerstein will be featured. The scenario is from an original story by S. Jay Kaufman, and is of unusually strong plot interest. It concerns a young girl who aspires to become a great opera star, and who is called upon to decide between a big career or the man she loves.

Can a woman succeed in a professional career, and retain her honor, without paying the price. This is the question raised in "Love or Fame?" The heroine is informed that the feat is impossible, yet she is determined to try it. Her trials and temptations form the action for an absorbing drama that should make one of the most powerful and absorbing plays yet seen on the screen, it is declared.

In the role of the ambitious singer who is determined to have both love and fame, Elaine Hammerstein has a part ideally suited to her and one that should bring out all her charms and ability. Miss Hammerstein's career in the silent drama has been one of remarkable success and distinction, and it is predicted by many shrewd showmen that she will develop into one of the screen's biggest box office stars. Selznick intends that every one of Miss Hammerstein's forthcoming productions shall be something big, something unusual that will lend itself to special exploitation. The company is weighing every story from the exhibitor angle as well as the star angle before deciding upon it. Announcement of release date will soon be made.

Lloyd Willis Returns From Tour

Feels Enthusiastic About Conditions in Industry and Sees Great Era of Prosperity Dawning in Picture Business

"THE greatest era of prosperity in the motion picture industry seems dawning. On every hand the indications are that during the next five years investors in the amusement industry will reap the greatest profits that the industry has ever yielded."

Such, at least, is the opinion of Lloyd Willis, assistant to President J. A. Berst, of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc. Mr. Willis has just returned from a visit to United's Eastern Exchanges, where he met many exhibitors and sounded their views upon the immediate future of the picture business.

During his trip, Mr. Willis visited Cleveland, Akron, Pittsburg, Huntington, W. Va., and Washington.

"In nearly every city of importance in the country, new theatres are building," said Mr. Willis, in discussing his trip. "This is true in Cleveland; it is true in Toledo, where Mr. E. Zorn, of the Temple Theatre, is now arranging to tear down his present first-run house and materially enlarge his seating capacity. It is true also of Huntington. It is true of Pittsburgh. I am informed that twenty-one motion picture theatres are now under course of construction in New York City. Reports from the West and South indicate that the same is true in those sections of the country.

"It is particularly gratifying to Mr. Berst and every other United official to note the enthusiasm which pervades the army of United exhibitors. Our first four releases have been met with an acclaim such as seldom is accorded the initial releases of a maiden film company. Perhaps this is due in part to the fact that those theatres which play United pictures are full parners in United Picture Theatres of America. Perhaps it is due in part also to the production standard which United has set for itself. Certainly, the telegrams and letters from United exhibitors, telling of broken house-records with United productions, seem to bear out this latter belief.

"United has just completed its second Kitty Gordon release, "Playthings Of Passion." This picture—the fifth United release since January 6th—is perhaps better than any of the preceding four—better in story, action and theme; better in dramatic values and better in direction. At least, it is up to United's standard.

Another Stage Women's War Relief Picture

IT is expected that followers of the stage and dramatics as well as the enthusiasts of the screen will be treated to some exceptional talent in the Stage Women's War Relief picture now being made under the title of "Tom's Little Star," and which will be released through the Universal company.

"Tom's Little Star" is the eleventh of the series of twelve being made for the S. W. W. R. under the direction of Eugene Spitz, George Terwilleger and Louis Dunmyre.

The cast varies from those playing tragedy roles to those of light comedy, and includes Constance Binney, Otis Skinner, Henry Miller, Blanche Bates, William Jefferson, Wheeler Dryden, Henry Hull, Lucia Moore, John W. Cope and Daniel Frohman. With the exception of one or two, all of the stars named are now playing in current New York attractions.

Work on the picture was started this week and will continue into next week. Several of the scenes are being taken at the Liberty theatre, the rest being at the Estee studios on 125th street. The story of the picture has not been released, but Miss Binney will cast as the lead or the "star" as given in the title of the picture.

Pre-release views of the S. W. W. R. pictures are said to have shown that they will be among the best pictures that will be released in the coming year.

Macauley Feature to Play at Strand May 25

The Srand Theatre, New York City, on Sunday, May 25, will give its first showing of "Whom the Gods Would Destroy," the First National feature based on the novel of the same name by Charles R. Macauley. Joseph L. Plunkett, managing director of the Strand has been busy planning special music and effects which will accompany the picture.

"Whom the Gods Would Destroy," tells a vivid story of a young inventor and a pretty Belgian girl who were sent through a hell of suffering at last to discover happiness. While the war background is entirely subordinated to the love theme, and there are virtually no battle scenes, yet one is made to understand the whole scheme of German ambition, and the reasons for its downfall through clever indirection.

"The Courageous Coward" Not a War Picture

Probably because of its belligerent sounding title, the impression has been gained in some quarters that "The Courageous Coward," featuring Sessue Hayakawa which Robertson-Cole released through Exhibitors' Mutual, is a war picture. In an announcement this week, Robertson-Cole depreciate this impression. There is not even the faintest hint of war in "The Courageous Coward." In reality the story centers about a young Japanese student who sacrifices position and reputation to protect the man he believes the girl he loves is about to marry.

"Reclaimed" Is Booked

Alpine Quintet Appears in Metro Feature

A decided novelty in the way of local color and real European talent is being introduced by Metro in the forthcoming production of E. C. Durling's comedy-drama entitled "Almost Married" in which May Allison is starred.

For the scenes in the Alps, Metro has engaged Ralph D. Robinson's Alpine Quintet, a musical act including two men and three girls, who are at present on the Coast after touring this country in a series of concert engagements. All the members of the quintet are musicians, dancers and yodlers, and Metro intends to use them in the scenes in and around the Swiss Chalet and the mountain "shots."

Goldwyn Purchases Five

Samuel Goldwyn announced five new plays that the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has purchased for production.

"The Wrong Door," by Jesse Lynch Williams, will star Madge Kennedy; and Mabel Normand has an unparalleled opportunity to be funny in "Up-Stairs."

"Heartsease" is another play that Goldwyn will put into the hands of a director shortly. "Lord and Lady 'Algy'" is the all-star play by R. C. Carton that gave William Faversham an extra triumph last year. Tom Moore will star. The fifth is a big new Rex Beach production, entitled "The Girl from Outside."

Another for Monroe Salisbury

Universal Announces Completion of "The Open Road," with a Strong Cast in Support of the Star

"THE OPEN ROAD" is the title of the latest Universal Special Attraction starring Monroe Salisbury. They state that none of their pictures made recently has received such praise from those who have seen the first print.

It was directed by Rupert Julian, star and author of "The Fire Flingers," and the screen author, Bernard McConville, with scenario by Elliott J. Clawson.

A special cast was selected for this picture, including many of their best known screen characters, namely Rhea Mitchell, Alice Elliott, Sydney Franklin, Marion Skinner, Pat Moore, Alfred Allen and Herschel Mayo.

Monroe Salisbury, who has starred for Universal in "The Millionaire Pilot, "Hugon the Mighty," "The Guilt of Silence" and his most recent release, "The Light of Victory," is cast in "The Open Road" of the picture are laid in New York's little as Tony, an Italian immigrant. The scenes Italy and the West. The time depicted is about a decade ago.

Tony, the moulder of clay and seller of statues in little Italy, adopts a spindling newsie and decides to go West, acting towards the little Tony as father, mother, maiden-aunt and good Samaritan. Before he leaves for the great West and the open road he pledged his faith to the beautiful Carlotta and promised to send for her when his ranch is well under way.

Kate Billings was the daughter of the bar-keeper. But she hated men who were weak. When Tony a year after his arrival in Red Butte, whipped the bully of the place Kate declared her love. Tony knew she cared only for the best man and told her so. He left behind him on his return to his cabin a woman scorned. Kate ran away with the bully, but after he declared he was not of the marrying kind she found shelter in Tony's cabin.

The bully spread scandal, but Tony was cleared and later when he learns that the beautiful Carlotta has already married he overtakes the stage which is carrying Kate away, holds it up and steals his bride, who is glad to submit to his embraces.

"Auction of Souls" Receives Added Publicity

THE beginning of a remarkable public support of a feature attraction is seen in the voluntary advertising of "Auction of Souls," the First National picture which has been started by the Committee for the Relief of the Near East (Armenian Branch) of North Texas. As soon as he had seen "Auction of Souls," C. P. Sites, of Dallas, Texas, director of this relief work, is said to have sent out several thousand personal letters to influential persons in his district urging them to see the picture.

His letter was a declaration of sponsorship for this film which, under the name of "Ravished Armenia" was seen by the foremost citizens of a number of the largest American cities at $10 per seat, it is said, the proceeds being added to the $30,000,000 fund which was raised nationally to send food, medical attention, and other necessaries to the millions perishing in the Near East.

Similar support is to be given "Auction of Souls" everywhere it is declared by local committees of the Committee for the Relief of the Near East. Mr. Sites has forwarded to the headquarters of this body, in New York, his recommendation that all interested in the Armenians, the Greeks, Syrians, Persians—and all others who have been crushed during the war period by the "infamous Turk"—see "Auction of Souls."

Mr. Sites, in his letter, said that he considered "Auction of Souls" to be an excellent visualization of the atrocities which were visited upon Aurora Mardiganian, the Armenian girl, who is the central figure of the picture, and her friends.

With the added support of the hundreds of society people, educators, professional men and philanthropists who saw "Auction of Souls" when it was shown for the benefit of the Near East in the largest cities, this direct propaganda of local committees all over the country bids fair to give the film one of the most remarkable voluntary advertisements it is stated in the history of motion pictures.

"Sahara" Secured by Hodkinson

Distributing Corporation Obtains North American Rights on J. Parker Read Special, Starring Louise Glaum

W. W. HODKINSON CORPORATION announces that it has obtained the complete North American distribution rights for J. Parker Read, Jr.'s special production, "Sahara," starring Louise Glaum and personally supervised by Allan Dwan, the story being the work of C. Gardner Sullivan.

It is stated that Producer Read held back its release date until the completion of nation-wide changes in the Hodkinson sales organization.

"Sahara" will be offered to exhibitors under the individual booking policy recently announced by the Hodkinson Corporation and first releases are scheduled in a dozen cities for June 1.

Beginning with the basis of a spectacular C. Gardner Sullivan emotional drama, Allan Dwan has produced what is declared to be the most daring picture of his career as a director with Triangle and Douglas Fairbanks productions in the past.

"Louise Glaum in 'Sahara' has the best-gowned role of her screen career," declared a Hodkinson official. "She has in the role of Mignon Stanley thirty changes of gowns and was never so beautiful and pictorial before in her life. Every gown is a modern one and six of them come direct from Paquin in Paris."

"Sahara" is to be continuously exploited in the trade press and backed up with regional publicity in every motion picture zone in the United States and Canada. It is marketed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation with the color inserts that appear in the trade press localized for use as advance programs or for distribution in advance of the presentations to audiences everywhere.

Its lithographs and accessories are credited with being the most unusual exploitation aids that have been provided with any picture of the season. There are also provided special musical orchestrations for the benefit of exhibitors everywhere—one by Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld and the other by Victor Schertzinger.

"Break the News to Mother" Has Heart Touch

DIRECTOR OF SALES CHARLES R. ROGERS has just sent to Select's branch managers in twenty-one cities throughout the country a letter in which he enthusiastically endorses the box-office possibilities of the big special attraction, "Break the News to Mother," which, produced by B. S. Moss, has been acquired by Select Pictures Corporation for distribution.

Mr. Rogers says: "A line in a Potash and Perlmutter play says, 'Nowadays if you want to entertain people you got to pretty near break their hearts.' That's what 'Break the News to Mother' will do. It is chuck full of heart throbs from beginning to end.

"Thousands upon thousands of soldiers are coming home these days. 'Break the News to Mother' links up with this, though there is not a single battle scene in the film nor has it any reference to the war.

"Mother love is the keynote of the picture, but it has a high class romance as well. It carries a big punch. It is the kind of a picture that starts growing on you from the first and by the time it is ended your heart is in your throat."

It is true that "Break the News to Mother' does not deal in any way with the war, and although at the very end the picture's leading juvenile—he can scarcely be called a hero—is seen in an army uniform, the fact is emphasized in all publicity and advertising aids that this is not a war picture, but a story of village life. It is a picture of peace and quiet, of human faith and of mother love.

Select is relasing "Break the News to Mother" at once, prints having already been shipped to all exchanges. Advance bookings in the Metropolitan district of New York forecast the picture's success in that territory, it is said, for more than fifty separate dates have been booked within a very short time, some of the most prominent houses being included.

Joseph Poland Sells Story to Universal Company

Joseph Franklin Poland, well known screen writer, recently sold to the Universal a story for a big special production, entitled "The Spitfire of Sevilla," in which Hedda Nova will be starred. The sale of this story solves a problem that has long been troubling Mr. Poland. Before entering the film field, he was head of department in a large New York exporting house. Here he studied Spanish. Since then he has often wondered of what value his knowledge of the language and customs of Spain was to him, until he conceived the idea of writing "The Spitfire of Sevilla."

More Officials Promoted by Select Pictures

Select announces the appointment of J. A. Conant as branch manager of the Cincinnati exchange, and W. C. Viebrock as assistant comptroller for the company.

Mr. Conant was formerly branch manager of General Film Corporation's Cleveland Exchange, and is said to be known personally to fully ninety per cent of the exhibitors in Cincinnati and the Cincinnati teritory.

Mr. Viebrock, who for the past two years has been traveling auditor for Select Pictures Corporation, was recently appointed by Comptroller J. A. Derham to the position of assistant comptroller.

Manheimer Buys Serial

The entire foreign rights, it is announced, of the thirty-one-reel serial, "The Great Gamble," have been bought by E. S. Manheimer, with offices at 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York. The production was made by Western Photoplays and was directed by Sidney Golden. Charles Hitchinson and Anna Luther are the featured players.

"The Unpainted Woman"

FEW stories have been more straightforward than "The Unpainted Woman"—few productions more adroitly directed—few dramas so perfectly acted.

With the simple folk of a small farm community for its people, "The Unpainted Woman" unreels a drama which, for realism, strength and depth of feeling, will not soon be forgotten by any audience.

McElravy, in The Moving Picture World, says: "The story is original in conception and unusual in development—firm in its portrayal of rural types and gripping and vivid in its pathetic picture of the heroine's struggles to find happiness."

WID says: "Miss MacLaren never misses an opportunity to exert a human appeal."

That's it—human appeal! That's what made "Shoreacres" and "The Old Homestead"—and that's what will make "The Unpainted Woman"—make it one of your biggest successes of the year.

Monroe Salisbury in "Blinding Trail"

ACTION is the key word of "The Blinding Trail," but exhibitors who are going to show this picture should not lose sight of the heart interest and the appeal to the gentler sex by bringing out for all they are worth the "two women" element. At the same time there should be care taken to see that the impression is not left that this is another of the well konwn "eternal triangle" pictures.

This is a drama of the north country and strong men. Even the interiors carry the atmosphere of the frozen country and, as pointed out elsewhere, there should be an especially strong appeal made on this point by the exhibitors who are going to show it during the hot weather period. But while we are pointing these facts out, we would also let it be known that this is not one of the dance hall pictures, for most of the productions that have the snow as their background find a great portion of their locale laid in the midst of the "fire water."

Monroe Salisbury is naturally associated with the manlier class of pictures and with those that keep things moving. This is no exception and so the exhibitor will make no mistake in going after the Salisbury fans. And he should mention the two women in the cast who are certain to bring additional patrons to the theatre.

THE action: To the north woods where "Big Jim" McKenzie is the fearless and beloved boss of the lumber camp come John Halverson, lumber king, and his daughter Helen and her cousin, Adele Grey. The two girls are directly opposites in nature, Helen being the society butterfly, beautiful, vain and fickle, while Adele is all-true woman. But both of the girls are attracted to the powerful man and when McKenzie risks his own life and suffers blindness in saving Helen from death on the toboggan slide, she practically forces her cousin to induce McKenzie to propose.

Eye-sight restored, Jim and Helen are married. A year passes and just as the child is born to the young couple Jim is again stricken blind. Here he shows the nobleness of his nature. Because he does not want the girl wife to worry for him in the time of her trial he arranged to be started straight for the bed and there pretends that he can see mother and child. But of course he cannot long keep the secret of his renewed affliction and soon thereafter Helen's love begins to wane.

From the moment of her arrival at the lumber camp Jean DuBrey, McKenzie's assistant, has had a warm interest in the girl who paid no attention to him. But now his interest is increased because she is the wife of another while the instinct of the flirt shows in the wife. She, pretending to still love him, and DuBrey apparently his loyal friend the two carry on their affair with an openness that attracts the attention of all the camp except the blind man.

BUT finally Bill Cairnes, an old employe and hundred per cent loyal musters up courage enough to tell McKenzie that there is a lot of talk about his wife and DuBrey. Even from this loyal friend McKenzie conceals the fact that he knows this is true by replying "You can't blame her for not wanting to spend her days with a blind man," but at the same time one may guess that his plans are being laid.

Then there comes a powerful scene where the wife, in the presence of McKenzie, hands DuBrey a letter arranging for their elopement and the wife, after kissing her husband goes to the arms of the other man. But during all the time of his affliction and while his wife has been paying attention to the other man Adele has continued her devotion and then at the dramatic moment when he calls for "Helen" and finds her missing it is then that Adele comes to him.

"You are a beautiful woman, Adele," he tells her. "I couldn't see it until I was blind."

Though sightless, McKenzie has a perfect sense of direction and distance and when he finds that his wife is missing he goes to DuBrey's cabin where the couple are about to set out on their elopement. Under pretense of talking business he locates his assistant, then tricks DuBrey into opening the door for him and in that position he seizes the villain and the fight starts—and it is some fight. DuBrey is finally able to get to his pistol and he fires the shot which kills—not McKenzie, but Helen and then the powerful lumber boss chokes the other to death just as the house is consumed by fire started by a lamp overturned during the fight.

Outside the cabin Adele finds McKenzie, his sight restored by a fall that he got during the struggle. Of course, the end is happiness with the man come to find the right girl for him.

OF course you will play the name of the star strong in your advertising and will play up scenes in which he appears in your advertising. There is one point you want to watch: If any of the pictures that you use, show him blind, with

Here is the contrast between the two women in "Big Jim's" life. At the left is the girl he married, in the center the cousin and at the right he is realizing the true love

At the left DuBrey pretending his solicitude for McKenzie, at the right the wife and the injured man and in the center the big fight scene between the blinded man and the friend who attempts to steal his wife a bandage over his eyes, be sure that the selling talk makes it clear that this is not a lasting affliction and that he gains his sight back in the end.

For somewhat the same reason the title of the picture should be explained further so as to get out the full drawing power of the picture. The blindness does supply a fine point on which to turn a selling argument:

"While he could see he was blind to real love and married the wrong woman. It was only when he was stricken with darkness that he came to see the falseness of the flirt he had married and the true love of the other woman. But the light of the world came back to his eyes and the light of true love illumined his heart."

Should you use as the illustration one of the scenes showing the big fight, it should be explained what this is all about so that there will be an appeal to the women as well as the male element. And the wise exhibitor will keep in all his exploitation the idea of the two women, remembering that here he has a selling point to both sexes and on a clean production.

THIS element, the romance, the action and then the snow, out-door appeals are those that you want to include. Now let's say that you have used a striking cut at the top or at least in an upper corner of the display. Then you will have the name of the star and there is a line that you can use that will get attention:

"His name always means action."

—and then follow this with the title. Then here is a selling talk that gets all of the angles in

"Here is a mighty drama of the snow country, a love story of the frozen north where men's hearts breathe strong. It is a story of action and of love—of two women who thought they loved a man—and of the doodness that triumphed.

"It is a story without liquor and without a dance hall—of a clean minded lumberman who was blind in his love until he lost his sight. And then his heart came to see aright. With the two women before his seeing eyes he picked the wrong one, and it was not until his sight was taken from him that he came to know the frailty of the one married and the strength and beauty of the soul of the other one.

"Then there comes the big fight—it is truly a fight for love. You'll thrill with the tensest scene that you ever saw on the screen—of a blind man and his naked hands against one armed—and who could see. It comes out just right and the light of the world comes back into his eyes while the light of real love triumphant comes to his heart and to that of the right girl.

"It's the prettiest, plottiest, liveliest picture we've shown in a long time."

THAT'S not too long, even if it seems to be. Make up your mind once that you are going to get more people into your theatre than you would if you depended only on telling the public that this was a picture in which a tremendous fight is staged. This scene is well worth bringing out, but the other elements are to be considered to make the appeal universal.

Then here is another one:

"Up in the frozen north 'Big Jim' didn't know much about women until the daughter and the niece of the lumber king came into his life. One of them was pretty, vain and spoiled, yet when he risked his life to save her she was captivated and her charms brought his proposal.

"He failed to see the best of her sex in the other woman, and it was only when he was stricken blind that he came to realize their true characters. His wife was about to elope with another, yet heaven directed this sightless man to the couple and there followed a fight that will long live in your memory.

"He could see again now—the beauties of the world about him—and the beauty of the girl whom he really loved. It's just the sort of a story that is divided between the thrill and romance—something to keep you on the edge of your seat all the time and leave you mighty happy at the end."

NOW we have illustrated scenes showing both of these women, and if you will take the space, you can make a mighty attractive advertisement by using one of these at each of the upper corners of the display and then at the bottom you can use one of the scenes showing the fight But be sure to take sufficient space so that you won't have the crowded effect, and then start your display off:

"Both of these women loved Big Jim McKenzie."

This should be in two lines of type about 30 pt., and then it can be followed by this in considerably smaller, even down to 10 pt. if the matter is indented sufficiently on the sides, but we would try to make the matter run as deep as the figures of the women:

"He had the keenest eyes in all the northland, but he was blind in matters of love. One of these was pretty and petted, spoiled and fickle. She loved to flirt and her gayness won him after he had risked his life and lost his sight in saving her. . . . And the other girl stood aside, though there was real love in her heart. . . .

"Then sightless his heart began to see. In the very room with him his wife and his supposed friend plotted their elopement. His cunning divined it and he groped his way through the snow to thwart the lovers. How he did and the fight between the blind man with his naked hands, and the armed rival who could see is one of the finest pieces of action you ever saw in a picture.

"Just what happened you must see for yourself—how Big Jim's sight was restored to his eye, and how the light of true love was put in his heart.

"Which of these was the woman? Which would you pick?"

Then the name of the star and the title of the picture should follow and below that we would run a smaller line:

"It's all out of doors in the snow stuff. You'll forget there ever was hot weather."

Center, the bride, and at the right the wedding and at the left the accident which brought the romance about

Chance to Dispel Heat Gloom From Your House

WHILE an active radiator is pleasant in New York as this is written many portions of the country are in the middle of summer and by the time this picture is shown in most sections Old Sol will be doing his best to discourage motion picture attendance. Here is just the sort of a production in which to get the idea of snow and the north country before your patrons. It will make them feel cool, if nothing more, and that psychological appeal will bring many of them into your theatre.

It is a very simple thing to construct snow scenes in your lobby by using ordinary cotton. There should be an outline of mountains and if possible a trail leading down the center and disappearing in the distance. This display should be high enough up to be out of the reach of children who might be tempted to sample the snow to test its reality. Scene pictures which show the snow scenes should be largely used and further atmosphere can be gained with snowshoes and furs.

In case of particularly warm weather the use of electric fans blowing over concealed cakes of ice and directly toward the street can be used profitably if you simply get the flood of cool air effect without a gale of direct draft that may offend the women.

EXHIBITORS who make it a point of sending circular letters to their patrons can get one by following either of the selling talks that we have used and making a couple of references to the fact that this is a story of the snow country.

This also offers a chance for a teaser campaign. Get from your local weather bureau each day the readings of the thermometer; pick the highest one and then use boxes scattered through the paper reading:

Temperature 88 on the streets of Sweetwater Yesterday, but 20 Below on " The Blinding Trail "

This is especially good if used in advance of the announcement of the picture in the newspapers, or used in card form to be sent to your mailing list.

Here is also an opportunity to get cooperation from the drug stores and various concerns that have cool drinks. For a week before the showing get one of them to name a very cold drink " The Blinding Trail," and then advertise it with cards saying that it is " The coldest thing in drinks. It'll make you forget there ever was such a thing as hot weather."

Your advertising, when you announce the picture, will act as a reflex that will boost the drink for the dealers. Combined with the newspaper teaser stuff the stunt will work especially well.

THERE should be either a song suggestive of the north and the wild life as the prelude to the picture, or a well known love song. There can be a clever effect here by a special effect which will show snowclad mountains and then a slight waterfall at the right of the stage with the effect of the water running off in the distance. Lights and an electric fan will get the effects.

With this have a girl in Indian costume singing " From the Land of Sky Blue Water." The rising moon effect can be carried out effectively and further emphasis may be made to the coldness by having a campfire burning in the foreground—not a real one of course—and letting this die down as the moon rises. The stage lights should all be kept dim for this effect.

In case this is not possible an excellent song for a woman's voice is " Love Is Divine." This may be then carried into the picture as the theme.

" The Song of Songs " or " Love's Old Sweet Song " are excellent substitutes.

In using any of these have the girl singer in a filmy white dress so as to keep the cool effect prevailing.

HERE is a case where we would not suggest introducing the theme too often, and you will get a better effect. There is a place after McKenzie has heard the old man tell about his wife, when he calls " Helen " and the other girl gets up and comes to him. At the call the orchestra should become tacit and then let the theme be introduced as Adele comes forward. The music scores have suggested using the theme first with the two girls entering the room after the accident, but we believe that is too far in advance.

Any one of the three songs that we have suggested as a vocal number can be carried in as the theme. There is also suggested Martin's " Yesterthoughts," and when the picture was given its pre-release showing at the Broadway, New York, Victor Herbert's " Sweethearts " was used.

There can be a pretty touch added with the scene where Helen and her baby are seen in the bed and " Sing Me to Sleep " can be played. Any lullaby may be used here, and then with the title " It's a boy," " My Little Billiken " will get the audiences going. " Norwegian Suite " can be used for most of the snow stuff and the rest of the music should be of the higher order.

2 GIRL PLAYERS

They Should Be Brought Out in Your Advertising

THOUGH we would play them only incidentally and put the greater part of the appeal on Salisbury we would call attention to the fact that Helen Jerome Eddy and Claire Anderson have the parts of the girl cousins—the two different types of women.

Miss Eddy has played with a great share of the best known players, including Mary and Jack Pickford, Dustin Farnum, George Beban and many others. She has recently scored a big hit in another production and her work has attracted attention all over the country.

Claire Anderson was formerly in Keystone comedies. Every one will remember her. Tell your public that she has not been " promoted " and that they will find her fascinating in a serious role.

Continuity Important, Says Miss Beranger

"COME OUT OF THE KITCHEN," the Paramount-Marguerite Clark photoplay which was the feature at the Rialto theatre in New York the week of May 11, received exceptionally favorable comments from all of the papers, including the trade press.

Clara S. Beranger, who has been supplying continuities and stories to Famous Players-Lasky at the rate of at least one a month, did the continuity of "Come Out of the Kitchen," with the result that opinions have proven that continuities are not the least important thing in film production. Concerning this latest picture, Miss Beranger said: "It is not always that a screen adaptation of a stage play can satisfy a public familiar with the stage version, but in 'Come Out of the Kitchen' the general verdict seems to be that the screen version goes a step further even than the stage play in getting laughs and in holding the interest of the public. This was proven at every performance during the picture's run on Broadway."

Regarding the part she had in making "Come Out of the Kitchen" the good picture that it is, Miss Beranger declined to talk, but concerning any story for a picture she said: "The personality of the star has much to do with putting over a photoplay, but too much stress cannot be laid on the importance of continuity. To make a successful picture out of a successful play requires not only an accurate knowledge of the technique of the screen but also the power to eliminate and build up wherever it may be necessary to carry on the interest of the photoplay."

Adolph Zukor, President of Famous Players-Lasky, Welcomes Back Capt. Al Kaufman, Former Studio Manager

In doing the continuity for "Come Out of the Kitchen" it is generally conceded that Miss Beranger has not only succeeded in maintaining the charm of the original play and given Miss Clark an unusually good chance to display her charm and comedy power but she has also added many original touches that have done much toward making "Come Out of the Kitchen" the success that it promises to be.

World Film Describes Its Five June Releases

WORLD Pictures announce their releases for June and these include five big pictures. Evelyn Greeley leads off on June 2 with "Phil for Short," written by Clara S. Beranger and Forrest Halsey and directed by Oscar Apfel. Hugh Thompson appears as her leading man.

Second on the list for the month comes "Thru' the Toils," which is scheduled for release on June 9. Koby Kohn wrote the story and Harry O. Hoyt is the director. Montagu Love celebrates his re-entrance into picture work by starring in this production.

Two new comers appear in the World release scheduled for June 16. They are Betty Compson and George Larkin, who are co-starred in "The Devil's Trail," a story of the great out doors directed by Stuart Paton. The story of this production is laid in the Canadian northwest, a region ripe in romance and action where full blooded men and women live, love and hate. Miss Compson has appeared in a number of Christie comedies and big feature productions. Mr. Larkin made many friends by his recent appearance in a serial, "Hands Up."

June Elvidge appears on June 23 in "Loave and the Woman," a story written by Philip Lonergan with the scenario prepared by Giles R. Warren. Tefft Johnson is the director. Philip Hatkin handled the camera. Prominent in the cast are George MacQuarrie, Rod La Rocque, Laura Burt and Ed Roseman.

The final release for the month is a Madge Evans picture, "Home Wanted." The story for this production was written by Lucy Sarver.

Gerald Bacon Signs Lucy Cotton for "Sunup"

GERALD BACON, who formed, recently, his own producing company, announces that he has signed Lucy Cotton, stage star, for his first production, a screen version of Max Marcin's play, "Substitute Prisoner," retitled "Sunup," the production of which will be started next week at the Bacon-Backer studio.

Miss Cotton, the star of the first Bacon production to be released by Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, is a popular stage favorite, her latest success in the spoken drama being "Turn to the Right" and "Up in Mabel's Room."

Mr. Bacon will announce the supporting cast within the next week. Oliver D. Bailey will direct under the personal supervision of Mr. Bacon. His first feature will be released in June. Basil Dickey wrote the scenario.

Arthur H. Sawyer Back from Trade Tour

Arthur H. Sawyer, one of the members of the firm of S-L Pictures, returned to New York this week following a country-wide trip in the interests of "Virtuous Men."

Mr. Sawyer visited several of the largest cities in Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio, as well as many of the far Western States. He reports that "Virtuous Men" is meeting with tremendous success in all sections of the country which have already been disposed of to state rights buyers.

Arthur S. Hyman, of Detroit, Michigan, who is handling the S-L production for Indiana, Illinois and Michigan has already received an unusual amount of first-run bookings from leading exhibitors.

Garson's "Hushed Hour" Opens in Detroit

Harry Garson's second Blanche Sweet production, "The Hushed Hour," was given its first public presentation in Detroit on May 18 at the Broadway Strand—scene of "The Unpardonable Sin" premier.

Mr. Garson is very sanguine he will duplicate his phenomenal success with the latter, it is stated, and points with a great deal of pride to the cast, which is said to be all-star, and the fact that the story is entirely different from the usual run of screen offerings.

In the cast are: Milton Sills, Mary Anderson, Harry Northrup, Gloria Hope, Rosemary Theby, Wilfred Lucas, Wyndham Standing, Lydia Knott, Winter Hall, Bennie Alexander, Edward M. Kimball, Norman Selby (Kid McCoy) and Blanche Sweet.

Methodists to Use Films

Arrangements have been consummated by representatives of several of the large film producers and of the Methodist Missionary Centenary for the use, on a scale it is said far larger than has ever before been attempted by any denomination, of motion pictures as a leading feature of this Protestant body's Centenary Celebration of Amrican Methodist Missions at Columbus, Ohio, June 20 to July 13.

"Ravished Armenia" Has Telling 24-Sheet

One of the strongest business getting 24 sheets recently designed it is declared, is that being sent out by First National to advertise "Auction of Souls," the feature which originally was known as "Ravished Armenia," and which tells the story of an Armenian girl who lived through the terrors inflicted by the Turks from 1915 to 1917.

Officials of First National had first hand opportunity when this poster was put up on New York boards to observe its effectiveness. At various points in the city they noted a high percentage of pedestrians stop to gaze.

The twenty-four sheet is an ideal combination of attractive lettering, presenting the most telling facts about the feature, and of large pictorial representations of the leading figures in the story strikingly posed.

Strong Cast for White's "The Westerners"

AN all-star cast it is reported will make its appearance when Benjamin B. Hampton presents his visualization of Stewart Edward White's famous novel, "The Westerners." With no stars under contract to exploit, Mr. Hampton was free to pick actors for the parts, and the result was a cast of star players that has never before been equalled it is said.

No introduction is needed to Mildred Manning, Roy Stewart, Wilfred Lucas and Robert McKim. Each one is a star in his own right, it is said, and in "The Westerners" each not only has the best role of his career, but each has realized his or her greatest possibilities, it is stated. The remainder of the cast contains Mary Jane Irving, Graham Pettie, Clark Comstock and Frankie Lee, and none of their characters is submerged for the stars.

Mildred Manning did not "happen" to get the dual role of Prue Welch and Molly Lafond. In referring to her work in "The Westerners" Miss Manning was chosen because many of her previous pictures were viewed by Mr. Hampton, Mr. White and Mr. Sloman, the director, and she was found to possess the dramatic ability and the personality that exactly belonged to the roles she was picked for.

Roy Stewart says "The Westerners" gives him the first chance he has had to do a really conscientious piece of acting. Cheyenne Harry, the role portrayed by Mr. Stewart, is a big-hearted young miner whose admirers are limited only by the population of the town.

Wilfred Lucas attracted much attention several years ago for his performance in "Acquitted," a D. W. Griffith picture that introduced Bessie Love to the screen. To Robert McKim, one of the screen's most famous villains, falls the role of Michael Lafond, the half-breed. McKim's stage experience covers eight years of stock, road companies, repertory and vaudeville.

Graham Pettie, one of the screen's most popular and versatile character men, is cast as Professor Welch, the absent-minded old scientist. Clark Comstock is the only actor cast as an Indian. The two children in the picture are Mary Jane Irving and Frankie Lee.

"The Westerners" was produced by Mr. Hampton. E. Richard Schayer wrote the continuity, and Edward Sloman directed. It is to be released at an early date.

"As a Man Thinks" Is Praised by Exhibitor

WHAT newspaper and word-of-mouth advertising combined will do for a strong motion picture was reported last week in Denver where the first Harry Raver-Augustus Thomas-Four Star screen drama, "As a Man Thinks," made a record for itself and for Talbot's America theatre, Denver.

In advance of its first presentation at the America, Manager Talbot advertised "As a Man Thinks" liberally and more especially so because he was leaving for New York for his annual spring trip.

"It was the kind of production I felt I could safely leave on my screen to sustain the America's volume of patronage," said Mr. Talbot in New York at the Hotel Algonquin, where he received his daily box office reports from his Denver associates. "As a Man Thinks" opened to a one day's record business for the house, built up his box office level still farther with each succeeding day and wound up its week by giving us the best Saturday we have had in more than a year.

"The Denver newspapers accorded the picture unusual attention, especially in view of the fact that pictures are not reviewed by critics after their first showing. This is the kind of dramatic production that causes patrons to talk and the effect of their talking is visible in the box office receipts."

ELMO LINCOLN

celebrated Star of "TARZAN of the APES" with GRACE CUNARD and big Cast

ON June 14th Universal releases its new challenge serial—"ELMO THE MIGHTY"—featuring ELMO LINCOLN, celebrated Star of "TARZAN OF THE APES."

Exhibitors who have played "TARZAN" and even those who haven't but who have heard of the records established by that production will in a flash understand the advertising possibilities of the Star of "TARZAN" in a big special serial written for Lincoln.

In addition to ELMO LINCOLN, you get GRACE CUNARD, whose popularity in serial extends 'round the globe.

Within the next ten days advertising and publicity campaign books will be forwarded to Exhibitors throughout the country. If you do not get your copy notify your nearest Universal Exchange. This new book carries elaborate props entirely complete and ready for all theatres.

Because of the sameness in advertising claims of all competitive serials we ask you to review as many episodes of this new serial that you can, and let the serial itself win its own booking. That's the test. Your nearest Universal Exchange will handle your booking now in advance.

Apfel Talks on Abuses in Picture Making

"CORRECTING abuses in picture making," says Oscar Apfel, who is directing Evelyn Greeley in "Phil for Short," a World Picture, which will be released in June, "has been deferred until it has come to the time when either steps must be taken to make a radical move or the industry will suffer by being regarded as just a makeshift to get the dimes from an entertainment-hungry public. We cannot go much further along the road we have traveled, if we expect to get anywhere. Indifference, carlessness, time killing, rank extravagance are the characteristics of picture-making. The stories and continuities disclose very little originality. To much dependency is placed on the patience of the public who are asked to accept anaemic development of plot, and must be satisfied with what is given them on the principle of, 'If you don't take it, then leave it.'

"To begin with we start off wrong with our stories. You can't write a good story between grape fruit and griddle cakes, and by the time luncheon is served at Claridge's, the story is sold, and a continuity writer turns his finished product over to the 'fillum' magnate. Within twenty-four hours the director is supposed to have shot about forty scenes. It's all wrong, Algernon. You may have hit a bull's-eye the first time you ever had a rifle in your hands. But you have never done it since. Neither can it be done in pictures twice in succession.

"You can't draft a pretty girl from a department store, and the next day expect her to make Sarah Bernhardt look like an amateur actress at a church entertainment. To get the best results the director must have people working with him that he does not have to tell when to breathe, bat an eyelid, raise their finger, or do the simple little things that a six-year-old child would do naturally as a result of a situation. These are but a few of the things that are wrong in picture making, and the sooner a little horse sense is shown in the making of picture plays the longer the industry will endure and the entire fraternity will profit by employing sane, sensible methods in manufacturing entertainment for the millions of picture patrons."

Describes the Ruben and Finkelstein Policy

I. H. RUBEN and M. L. Finkelstein, owners of fifteen theatres in St. Paul and Minneapolis, and holders of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for that territory, have solved to their satisfaction the difficult question of selecting profitable special features to be shown in their houses.

The exhibitor everywhere is said to be troubled with the question of whether he shall take a picture which may cost $25 to $50 a day, with fairly well-known stars, and advertise it very heavily, or whether he shall contract for a film which may cost as much as $100 a day, and carry the biggest stars.

Years of experience have led Ruben and Finkelstein to decide upon a fixed policy. They have studied the margin of profit carefully, and having selected a careful routine, stay by it regularly, it is reported.

Telling of the methods of himself and his partner, Mr. Finkelstein said: "Our plan is to see the picture, if possible. Of course, it is a picture which contains the best star obtainable. We do not consider anything else. Long ago we decided that it did not pay us to show the cheaper sorts.

"Having seen the picture and decided that it is a big one, we go the limit on advertising. It was this way with the recent Anita Stewart film, "Virtuous Wives." We knew the title was good, felt the power of Owen Johnson's name and of Miss Stewart as a drawing card, but we wanted to see the picture, and be completely convinced.

"We were not disappointed upon seeing the picture. We were made enthusiastic. At once the order was given for big advertising displays. The newspapers were given half-page ads, and preparations were made for liberal use of the billboards."

Ralph Ince Will Produce for Selznick

Myron Selznick announces that he has just closed a contract whereby Ralph Ince will produce for the Selznick Pictures Corporation. The first of the Ralph Ince productions will be Eugene O'Brien's debut as a Selznick star, "The Perfect Lover."

This is not Mr. Ince's first connection with Selznick productions. It was he who directed Robert Warwick in "The Argyle Case," one of the first Selznick productions when Lewis J. Selznick launched his open booking campaign. Following this success, Mr. Ince placed to his credit a long list of big photodramas, notable among which were "Today" and "The Corespondent." Among the stars he has directed are Anita Stewart, Florence Reed, Olga Petrova, Robert Warwick, Elaine Hammerstein, and others.

Mr. Ince will begin work immediately upon the Eugene O'Brien picture, "The Perfect Lover." This story is based upon a tale by Leila Burton Wells, "The Naked Truth," which ran in Harper's Magazine.

"Joyous Trouble Maker" Wm. Farnum's Next

ANOTHER book by a well-known author has been purchased as material for a production starring William Farnum. This is "The Joyous Trouble Maker," by Jackson Gregory, the popular magazine writer and novelist, author of "The Outlaw," "The Short Cut," "The Wolf Breed," "Six Feet Four" and innumerable short stories.

"The Joyous Trouble-Maker" is a story of the west. In it William Farnum will appear as Dick Steele, the calm, almost presumptuous, happy-go-lucky "mining engineer, gentleman of adverse fortune, Lord of an empty pocketbook and a full heart," who defies Beatrice Corliss, owner of the Queen's Ranch, the Little Giant Gold Mine and many millions of dollars besides—all inherited from wealthy and autocratic parents. Beatrice orders Dick Steele off her ranch, where he has staked out eighty acres. Dick laughs at her orders and threats and continues his search for a secret gold cache, which he believes is in the ground and to which he feels he is just as entitled to as the original discoverer.

Burning with indignation, Beatrice sends several of her men to oust him off the ranch, but they prove to be old friends, with absolute faith in his honesty—so they abandon the task. Joe Embry, confidential adviser to Beatrice and an unscrupulous character, persuades Beatrice that Steele is a crook. The fighting Corliss spirit asserts itself in the girl, who cuts off Dick's supplies. Unknown to Beatrice, however, three of Embry's men jump Dick only to receive a thorough thrashing for their pains. From this on the story has many interesting incidents.

It is not yet decided when William Farnum will begin work on "The Joyous Trouble Makers," but it is said that J. Godon Edwards will direct the production as well as a number of others which are to be made for Mr. Farnum from well-known novels, the rights to which have been acquired by the Fox Film Corporation.

William L. Sherrill Returns to New York

WILLIAM L. SHERRILL, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, alighted from the Twentieth Century in New York, thereby bringing to a close a three months' trip to his Los Angeles studio, where the Texas Guinan two-reel Westerns and the Mack Swain single-reel Comedies are being produced.

At his office Mr. Sherrill gave the following interview to a representative of the NEWS:

"I have always believed in our productions, primarily because I have put every ounce of endeavor into turning out what I believed to be extraordinary box-office attractions, but in the case of the Texas Guinan Westerns and Mack Swain Comedies, I am here to say that the Frohman Amusement Corporation, even in these short length productions, being the first we have ever made, will astound the exhibitors, and give the public something altogether new and original.

"My judgment as to the demand for meritorious one and two-reel pictures seems to have been vindicated by the contracts which greeted me at my New York office. It might be surprising for the industry to learn that more than seventy per cent. of the entire world has been sold on the Westerns and Comedies without a cancellation clause in any contract, and with a substantial deposit on each one, and that, without the showing of a foot of film or even so much as a still photograph.

"In the making of these shorter length subjects it is not to be assumed that I have abandoned the production of features. This company will continue to turn out the larger attractions. The story for the next seven-reel picture has been chosen by me, and I should say will measure up to the best that has been produced heretofore."

Mr Sherrill has not determined finally the length of his stay in New York, but it is possible that he will return to the West Coast in about a month.

Hodkinson Promises Big Summer Productions

IN contrast with all of the prevailing standards of the industry, Benjamin B. Hampton and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation declare that they are to release in June, July and August a sequence of bigger productions than have ever before been launched in the United States during the summer months.

They expect that not only exhibitor but producer interest in this innovation will be keenly revealed in a few weeks, when Stewart Edward White's first screen production, "The Westerners," the initial production of Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., begins playing in the principal cities of the country.

"The Westerners" negative and working prints have just been received from the California studios, where Mr. Hampton has been working for months, and the importance of the work that this new producing factor has been doing is said to be immediately apparent.

Mr. White's story is described as having been made on all-star lines instead of following the single-star standards.

Every role in "The Westerners" is declared to be filled by a player who has been starred frequently by the larger companies of the industry. If ever there was a picture that would have carried itself when merely well cast, "The Westerners" would have done so it is stated, and they announce that for this very reason Mr. Hampton has piled on the added attractions in the form of stars.

Roy Stewart, Mildred Manning, Robert McKim, Graham Pettie, Wilfred Lucas and little Mary Jane Irving are all stars of this drama of the gold rush into the Black Hills of Dakota. The directorial work of Edward Sloman contributes still another element to the production.

Circuit Bookings for "Bolshevism on Trial"

THE entire circuit of Marcus Loew Theatres in New York and Brooklyn is playing "Bolshevism on Trial," Select Pictures' special attraction, to box-office figures which are reported as setting records in many houses on this circuit.

The records made in the Loew theatres back up the experiences of enterprising exhibitors throughout the entire country who are said to be availing themselves of the exceptional exploitation possibilities of "Bolshevism on Trial," and consequently are declared to be "cleaning up" on this timely Select Special.

Loew's Delancey Street, 116th Street and Avenue B theatres in Manhattan; Burland theatre in the Bronx, and the Metropolitan theatre in Brooklyn lead in the business they have done with this Select Special, but the other Loew theatres are also said to be achieving fine results with this production.

An example of the means employed by the various Loew houses to stimulate public interest in the neighborhood can be taken from the exploitation methods used by Manager Dolinsky of the Avenue B theatre. The usual exhibition hours for the Avenue B are from 1 to 11 P. M.; to accommodate the crowds which came to see "Bolshevism on Trial" he opened the house from 10 in the morning until midnight daily.

The Avenue B theatre is in a neighborhood populated largely by recent Jewish immigrants, and accordingly Manager Dolinsky got out special fliers and a half-sheet printed in both Jewish and English, in addition to the striking paper furnished by Select.

He made liberal use of cut-outs made from this paper, which he pasted on the mirrors and doors of his theatre lobby—inexpensive but with a good selling punch. It is declared that his attendance broke all records.

Rothapfel Showing Packs the Rialto

The occasion for the showing of the first Rothapfel Unit Programme on Friday, May 9, was more of a national film occasion than purely a local one. At the invitation of Samuel L. Rothapfel a large number of out of town exhibitors and editors of daily newspaper photoplay departments came to the city, remaining as the producer's guests during all the time they were here.

The Rialto theatre was crowded to the roof when the exhibition began at shortly after ten in the morning and besides being attended by these visitors, a large number of representative men of the trade were present.

At the conclusion of the showing of the Unit Programme, activities were adjourned until the evening when Mr. Rothapfel tended his friends and guests a banquet at the Hotel Astor.

All those who assisted in turning out the first programme, including the casts of the feature and comedy pictures were also present. The bill of fare included a number of delicacies appropriately named after various members of the producing organization and the Indepenedent Sales and Film Clearing House corporations.

Following the dinner there were several speeches by heads of the trade press, dramatic editors and others. Those at the speakers table surrounding Mr. Rothapfel were Taylor Holmes, E. Lloyd Sheldon, author of "False Gods," the feature of the programme, Frank Hall, president of the Independent Sales Corporation and Film Clearing House through which the programme is distributed, Tom Oliphant of the Evening Mail, S. J. Kaufman of the Globe, Louella Parsons of the Telegraph, Lesley Mason of the Trade Review, George Blaisdell of the Moving Picture World and William A. Johnston, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

All the speakers praised Mr. Rothapfel's first efforts in the producing line.

Shirley Mason in "The Final Close-up"

THOSE who are going to show Shirley Mason in "The Final Close Up" should never for a moment get serious in their exploitation. Here is a picture that at times becomes almost a burlesque on motion pictures, for the heroine is an ardent "fan" and longs to live such situations as she has seen on the screen—and does—with the result that you are getting a laugh almost every minute.

The motion picture angle should be kept strongly to the fore. You have here a laugh almost every minute.

This motion picture angle should be kept strongly to the fore. You have here a particularly fine chance to appeal to the girl element of your community, for if there are any of them in your section who do not cherish an ambition to show their talents on the screen then they are included in the class that want to live such romances. And it is such a human angle

Another element that should be kept to the fore is the seashore resort and we would certainly use pictures of Miss Mason in a bathing suit in some of the advertising. It gets in the idea of coolness that is certainly going to appeal to audiences during the warm season. And then if your exploitation is along the light and humorous angles you will be sure to let everyone see that there is nothing "heavy" here—no problems for sultry weather solving.

THIS is the story: Nora Nolan is an orphan, daughter of a street excavator and a washer woman, and she has to work in the basement of a department store where it is as hot as blue blazes. There Jimmie Norton, Irish, too, but whose father has become a millionaire, first sees her. Jimmy has refused to enter his father's business and is a reporter on the local daily and he goes to Featherstone's store in search of a story and there sees Nora topple over, overcome by the heat.

Result is that the manager gives her a vacation so that she may recover—a vacation with four dollars and twenty cents as her total capital. But Jimmy has overheard enough of her conversation with the other girls to know her longing for romance and her financial situation. He is perfectly willing to work for his own living, but for Nora's sake he touches his father for $200, and gets it with the warning that it is the last.

"Nothing gives a boarding house such a crack between the eyes as to have some one croak in it" is the observation of Nora's landlady as the girl staggers into the house, but a few moments later the $200 comes to the girl from a mysterious source and she resolves that it is to pay for the good time she has been longing for. So off to fashionable Winchester-by-the-Sea, where the exclusive set holds forth as a sort of a club, she goes.

JIMMY has turned in his story which is a terrible roast on conditions at Featherstone's stone, and as Featherstone is one of the chief supports of the paper Jimmy loses the job. But he isn't worrying, because he knows that he can get fifteen a week and his board playing on the Winchester Hotel baseball team and without suspecting that Nora has picked the same happy hunting ground thither he goes.

But the society folk resent very much the intrusion of Nora and her little Irish ways cause them to absolutely ignore her. Only one, Lloyd Gregory, posing as a suitor of Emily Westervelt-Moore, one of the society girls, even notices her, and he with an ulterior motive, but he soon finds that Nora won't stand for any freshness. There are some clever comedy scenes that show her troubles at the hotel and there is a laugh and a little of the French spirit when Nora is shown using her stocking as the "First National Bank." One of her unfortunate breaks is to buy from a shop in the hotel a summer outfit that had been the property of Emily the summer before, and the rest of the guests are quickly informed of that fact.

Just then Jimmy arrives on the scene and is heartily greeted by the guests, especially by Emily who is determined to catch the rich youth. But at the first ball game Jimmy runs on Nora and they renew the friendship begun at the chance meeting in the store. Then seeing the way that she is treated by the others, Jimmy confesses the truth of the Irish girl's station and begs Emily to pretend to be her friend and help the shopgirl have the time of her life for two weeks. But instead of consenting to that Emily guesses at the interest of Jimmy and tells the guests with the result that they go to the management with the demand that she be turned out. But Nora has the wit to know her rights and refuses to budge.

OUT of the pity for the girl something else comes and Jimmy and she become constant companions. It is while they are in bathing that Gregory, who is really a thief, loots the bathhouses, getting away with jewels and money, including the remainder of Nora's "roll." Even then Nora refuses to call the game over, but for the time keeps her loss secret and goes ahead bravely.

Still smarting under his rebuff Gregory sees a chance to "get even" and at the same time further protect himself by suggesting that Nora is the thief and as she has made no complaint of her loss it is made all the easier. Then Emily determines to carry the game still further and goes to Nora's room to hide her own jewelry there so that the girl will be convicted. But while she is starting out Nora comes in just in time to see the society girl dart into the bathroom. A turn of the key and Emily is a prisoner.

Then come the searchers. They find the jewelry which the mother recognizes as Emily's, but again the Irish wit is there for she replies that certainly it belongs to her "dear friend Emily," who has put it there while taking a bath and then goes to the door and releases the girl who, after being a prisoner four hours, and afraid Nora will denounce her has to enact the role arranged. Of course, she is vindicated while the rest of the guests are stunned with the sight of Emily and Nora arm in arm.

BUT in the hour of her triumph she confesses to the hotel manager that she, too, has been robbed and offers to work for the board she owes. He sends her to the kitchen as a dishwasher, but Jimmy is called home by the illness of his mother. Her evenings Nora spends along the beach, alone, and it is here that she overhears Gregory and his confederate laying their plans to rob the hotel safe that night and make their get-away.

That same evening Jimmy has confessed to his father that he is in love and the old man declares that he will have no society girl in his family and when he hears the truth that it is a little Irish girl he orders his automobile and the two start for Winchester, arriving just in time, for the robbers have overcome the night clerk and are about to blow the safe as Nora, from her hiding place in a chest and armed with a huge sauce pan confronts them. Father and son overpower the thieves and the hotel is aroused.

Out on the veranda Jimmy proposes, at the same time revealing that he is the one that sent the $200 and that his father is a millionaire. "I know what happens to a poor girl when she marries a millionaire's son," she declares, but the father who has been listening answers her with "This is what happens," and then kisses the girl.

Then the two are alone again and Nora whispers to him that in the movies they always have the "final close-up" and we get the scene very realistically.

HERE is a case where it doesn't matter if you do "give away" the plot, for the interest is in the way that it is handled. The three elements to work in are the shop girl idea, the longing for a "movie" romance and a happy ending.

We would prefer to use as the illustrations for the advertising, if you prepare your own, the ones showing Nora and Jimmie in bathing suits or the one showing the "final close-up" with the girl in his arms or that which shows her with the sauce pan in her hand defying the burglars. Then here is a selling argument:

"She was a poor little shop girl and mighty pretty. But the only romance that she knew was those that she saw in the movies. And she just loved the movies, and to her the best part of them was the 'close-up' which showed the heroine in the hero's arms. But alas, she thought, no such luck for her.

"But a week later she was right in the midst of it. She was the guest at a fashionable resort, with haughty society dames, who wouldn't notice her all around. Then there were crooks and a big robbery, and a plot that she overheard and foiled and she was a real heroine. And don't forget that there was a close-up in her story—just the sort that she—and you—like to see."

Then this one:

"Her Irish wit and cleverness came in handy when little Nora Nolan, shop girl and orphan was thrown right in the midst of a regular movie plot.

"Only last week she was sweltering in the basement of a department store and today she was the guest at a fashionable seaside hotel. All around her were rich society people who snubbed her and a fresh 'villain' whom she soon put in his place.

"Then there was a scandal. She first checkmated a plot against her and turned the table on a society girl, then she overheard the plans of the regular movie burglars—and checked them, too.

"Gee, movies had always been her greatest delight and here she was living one. But the final close-up—you know the place where the hero takes the heroine in his arms was always the part she liked best. A movie that omitted that was 'no good' for Nora. Yes, there was a final close-up in Nora's movie and it'll delight you as well as it pleased her."

HERE are some short ones:

"Nora Nolan loved movies and especially that 'final close-up' of the lovers, but she never expected any such thing in her whole life. But then she found herself right in the middle of a thriller and it'll get you a lot of laughs and better satisfaction."

"She was Irish, and maybe that's the reason Nora made such a good heroine when she found herself right in the middle of a real movie—and the pretty girl in the 'final close-up.'"

"Little Nora was only seeking a rest, but she jumped into the middle of a regular motion picture plot—and of course she was in the hero's arms for the 'final close-up.'"

In the center Nora becomes acquainted with pots and pans, at the left she is using one on the burglar until the arrival of her sweetheart's father who gets into action at the right

Appeal Should Be Made Strong to the Girl Element

WITH this picture released May 18, the greater part of the exhibitors will play it during the school vacation season, and we would certainly make a special appeal to the young women with this one. It ought to be good for building up matinee business, and with this in view we would obtain a list of all the high school girls, all of those coming home from colleges and all of the younger women of the city, irrespective of whether they are married, and send out a special letter to these. Like this:

"Nearly everyone of us girls has had a secret longing to be either a motion picture actress or to really live the romance of a movie.

"I've always just loved movies, for they were only amusement when I was a little shop girl. I always liked the happy ones the best—and I just hated the ones that didn't have the final close-up of the heroine in the hero's arms.

"I never expected to get closer to one than the first row, but then I found myself mixed right up in the most thrilling sort of a movie plot. You'll get lots of laughs out of it at my expense, and I hope that you'll be as happy when the final close-up comes as I am now.

"Won't you let me show you? That's the name of it—"The Final Close-Up" and it's at the Empire all week, starting Sunday.

"Nora Nolan——That Was."

This would also be effective as a newspaper ad. and in this case try to get position on the woman's page or next to the society column.

WE do not know of any more striking lobby display that you can make than the simple use of cut outs, especially of the three sheet showing Nora in the hero's arms. With this there should be simply the title of the picture shown. Let your one sheets and the other matter that you use in the lobby carry out the rest of the work. There should be ample scene pictures used and pictures of the star. But don't try to get too much of a crowded effect.

The simple use of the cut outs mounted on heavy white cardboard to give the appearance of a motion picture screen, and especially if you use a shadow box effect is the best. This can be improved for the night effect by having bright lights hidden in the shadow box and flashing on the "screen" and off constantly. To get this over the best these should be placed high enough to be over the heads of the people, and there should be no other lighting at the top of the lobby—unless essential as a guide to your patrons.

This same idea can be carried out further by obtaining permission of the owner of the building across the street to use a portion of his front during the engagement. Then construct there a screen the exact size of yours and then mount in the middle of this the cut out mentioned and then paint around, so as to give the circular effect that you see in so many close-ups. This should be worked by a spot light from the front of your house. It will get quick attention. Be careful to get this high enough so that the bright light will not interfere with traffic rules.

THIS is another chance for an All-Happy bill. The music should be light and tuneful with the love songs and the old-fashioned ballads given preference There is a splendid chance here for an Irish setting of music and songs.

For the overture you can use either Victor Herbert's "Eileen," which was originally known as "Hearts of Erin," or his "Irish Rhapsody" or any of the standard Irish selections. Then you can carry the Herbert idea through your program by using for the song just before the feature his "Molly." If you don't care for that, "My Little Irish Rose" or any of the Irish love songs.

Here is a little way in which you can get a good effect just before the picture is shown: Have a male singer and let the first part of the song be sung with the lights fairly dim in blue and a rose garden setting, with a drop at the back covering the screen. Then toward the end of the song have the lights dim down to out, while the back drop goes up revealing the screen, and at that moment a girl in Irish costume joins the male singer in front of the screen and at the very end the spot is thrown on them and the screen revealing them in embrace, much as is shown in the close up on on the screen. Only their heads and shoulders need show and then with the picture starting and the titles appearing they can fade away behind curtains at the sides.

THEME for this picture, should be the song, if you have used one, or some one of the Irish love songs, otherwise. This should not be introduced until the scene where the boy and girl are seen together at the hotel, and then should be repeated at their appearances together. Especially should it be used where the boy points to the girl with the saucepan brandished and says to his father, "That's Nora."

There are some other clever little touches that can be put into the music with the use of easily recognized airs. For instance, when the crook tries to flirt with Nora "He's a Devil in His Own Home Town." Another place with the bathing scenes "Splash Me," an old favorite can be used. Still further along there is a place where the son tells his father that the girl he wants to marry is Irish and there just a touch of "Wearin' of the Green" should be played. There is another moment a few scenes from the end where the girl says "I know what happens when a poor girl marries a millionaire's son." Here use just a bar of "The Curse of an Aching Heart" on trombone or oboe. Further back there is a title for the gossips that shows two hens and "Chicken Reel" or "Turkey in the Straw" will help the laugh along.

Lytell Appears In Second Bartlett Story

ON May 19th Metro released one of its biggest programme offerings produced under the policy of well-known authors. "The Lion's Den" is the name of the offering by Frederick Orin Bartlett, with the screen star, Bert Lytell, in a role of which this actor has never before been seen upon the screen.

The story recounts the incidents in the life of the Right Reverend Samuel Webster, who plans to build a recreation or meeting club for the small boys of the little town.

In his efforts to collect a suitable sum with which to start his club, the Rev. Webster, encounters unforeseen obstacles in the form of opposing merchants, who refuse to see the new idea in the same light, and his contributions received from these crabbed and short-sighted individuals inspires the young clergyman to enter the so-called lion's den of commerce and build up a business in opposition to the delinquent merchants.

He goes on Sunday to the church, as did the village blacksmith, but during the week, in order to accomplish his purpose he dons a store-keeper's apron and waits on his customers behind the counter of his general store.

His rival in trade, one Grocer Stedman, father of the lovely Dorothy, becomes furious, and cuts his prices below cost in order to drive out the business-like minister, but his efforts are without avail, as the boys of the town, doing their mother's errands, patronize the clerical grocer.

The turning point arrives with the night that Stedman's store catches fire, and the Rev. Webster, with his volunteer fire brigade of the village boys, takes the opportunity of heaping coals of fire on the head of the hard-hearted merchant, by saving his business from ruination.

Special Exploitation for Bennison's Picture

GOLDWYN announces that it is making an intensive effort to help motion picture theatre owners throughout the country put over in the most successful manner the newest Betzwood picture, starring Louis Bennison.

The officials declare that "The Road Called Straight" is worth a big effort at special exploitation and a plan of showmanship and advertising has been prepared to aid exhibitors in extracting every ounce of value from what they regard as an unusually strong production of a star whose popularity is growing so fast.

Exhibitors are urged by the company to prepare cards a week or ten days in advance of the showing and post them on every available tree and post, particularly in the outlying districts. The card on a tree is intended to take the place of a sign post as the descriptive matter on the card is to read, "This is 'The Road Called Straight,' Louis Bennison."

Numerous other original stunts, calculated to excite keen interest in the production, have been prepared. Lobby displays suggestive of the story, which depicts a western cowboy coming east to make a ridiculous debut in society, are planned and the officials point out that most of the special advertising stunts suggested are really inexpensive and undoubtedly will be unusually effective nevertheless.

Besides an array of advertising lay-outs and catch lines, the usual Goldwyn accessories, are also provided, including one-, three- and six-sheet lithographs, a roto one-sheet, lobby sets in 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28, all colored by a new process described as remarkable. Appropriate captions suggestive of the action portrayed has been arranged especially for the lobby sets, and the regular slides and music cue sheets are also supplied by the distributors. The array of exploitation aids are suitable for large or small towns.

Famous Players-Lasky Stars Elliott Dexter

ELLIOTT DEXTER, one of the popular leading men as well as one of the finished actors of the screen, is to be starred under the Famous Players-Lasky banner.

This announcement was made this week by Jesse L. Lasky, Mr. Dexter's signed contract, covering a period of years, having just been received at the home office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Dexter has just started work at the Lasky studio in Cecil B. DeMille's Artcraft picturization of Sir James M. Barrie's play, "The Admirable Crichton," in which, as in most of the recent DeMille productions, he is featured in the leading male role.

Immediately following the completion of this picture he will begin his first starring vehicle, under the direction of William C. DeMille. The title of the production is "Don't Change Your Wife," and as may be inferred, it is a sequel or companion picture to Cecil B. DeMille's wonderfully successful "Don't Change Your Husband," by Jeanie Macpherson, in which Mr. Dexter played the leading male role.

"Of Mr. Dexter it may be truthfully said that he has well won and richly deserved the honor which elevation to stardom entails," said Mr. Lasky in commenting upon Mr. Dexter's experience and fitness. "He is versatile, conscientious, thoroughly appreciative of the mission of the screen in furthering the highest dramatic art, and withal a fine gentleman. Moreover, he is handsome and of splendid physique and at all times acts with a fine understanding of the requirements of the character he is portraying."

Pioneer Adds Film Editing Department

The new film editing department of Pioneer Film Corporation settled into its new quarters last week and began operations. This is the latest step in the Pioneer plans of expansion.

The editorial staff is headed by William A. Rudkin and Donald I. Buchanan, and has as its third member Southard Brown, press agent of the organization.

Immediately after the announcement that the editing department has begun activities, Pioneer made it known through a statement that it has secured the film rights to "Confession," by Hal Reid. The rights were bought for National Film Corporation of America, it is announced. This is expected to be included in the six specials which are being made for Pioneer, and contains a part that is said to suit Henry B. Walthall, the star, very nicely.

Smiling "Billy Parsons," president of the National, in a wire to the Pioneer, said: "We intend to put our best foot forward and if Confession don't prove to be the greatest dramatic picture that ever hit the country, I am going to retire from the picture business forever."

It will be remembered that "Confession" played for several seasons in New York and on the road with Theodore Roberts and Orrin Johnson as co-stars.

Morris Makes Short Trip

For the first time since he assumed the position of General Manager for Select Pictures Corporation, Sam E. Morris has left New York City for a flying trip to Philadelphia and Washington. In these two cities Mr. Morris will visit the Branch Offices of Select Pictures which are under the management of Max Milder and V. P. Whitaker. On this trip, Mr. Morris will also interview prominent exhibitors in these cities and the surrounding territories, for Mr. Morris is a firm believer in keeping close to the exhibitor.

Many Pre-Release Dates for "The New Moon"

CHICAGO, Dallas, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Toledo, Fort Worth, Washington, Richmond, Baltimore, Buffalo and several others are among the first of the big first-run cities to secure advance play dates on Norma Talmadge's latest Select Picture, "The New Moon," which had its premiere May 11, at ths Rivoli in New York. Dates at other Metropolitan theatres, including all of the Loew theatres, were announced last week.

Sig Faller's Bijou Dream theatre, with a seven-day booking, leads the list of Chicago houses to date in pre-release runs on "The New Moon." Other Chicago houses are the Riviera, four days, and the Randolph, four days.

The management of the big Jefferson theatre in Dallas, Texas, has signed "The New Moon" for a seven-day run, while the Grand Opera House in Pittsburgh will also show it for seven days. Other seven-day bookings that have been reported this week are the Stillman theatre in Cleveland, Alhambra theatre in Toledo, Metropolitan in Washington and Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo. "The New Moon" has been booked for four days each at the Egypt theatre in Fort Worth, Colonial in Richmond and the New Theatre in Baltimore.

"The New Moon" is a Russian story by H. H. Van Loan. It presents Miss Talmadge in a decidedly new role, that of a Russian Princess who is torn from the side of her fiance through the workings of the Bolshevist movement.

Beach Elected President

Rex Beach, the Goldwyn author, was elected president of the Authors' League by the Council at their seventh annual meeting. Recently, Mr. Beach has produced several thrilling dramas which have been released through the Goldwyn organization. At present, Mr. Beach is in his summer home at Ardsley-on-the-Hudson, where he is working on a novel and a new scenario which will be released through Goldwyn.

Frank E. Woods Visits New York

And runs into a Tom Hamlin interview

ACROSS the continent, thousands of miles from his "work bench," we trapped him and quizzed him to our hearts' content.

We wanted to know just how he made the wheels of the motion picture industry go 'round.

Frank E. Woods, Supervising Director of the Lasky Studios on the West Coast, was visiting New York City. He confessed that it was the "annual" vacation in which he "starred" every two years.

The question we first propounded was: "How can a man supervise nearly six hundred film productions and even manage a single 'annual' vacation in TEN years?"

Well Frank E. Woods admitted that he did it and then shut up like a clam. He wouldn't tell us how he did it. But he did it. Figures don't lie. He was associated with David Wark Griffith in the old Majestic and Reliance days, and then with Triangle.

In the year 1917 Mr. Woods joined Famous Players-Lasky and the calibre of the productions under his supervision, taken with the vast quantity turned out, marks him as an exceedingly busy person.

Supervising a film production of today is finally acknowledged to be an immense task, even by the most scoffing layman. They admit it in spite of all attempted criticisms directed at some mere slip in the technique. But to take the charge and responsbility of an army of productions; well—that's Frank E. Woods.

We learned from Mr. Woods that it is just as easy for a photoplaywright to write a successful stage play as it is for the playwright to write a winning photoplay. In other words, that it was not a case of the screen deriving all its ideas from the stage. That a large group of screen writers have been developed during the last few years and that the screen stands by itself upon its own legs.

It is no longer the little sister of the stage, but the Big Brother of all clean recreation, entertainment and amusement.

Says we: "Will you tell us, Mr. Woods, whether the plot market is 'Bullish' or 'Bearish?'"

"There are only a few given plots to work upon," said Mr. Woods. "You must recollect that for practically ten years we have had subjects galore filmed in single reels, two reelers and the larger features of the last five years.

"Consider that about ninety-five reels a week are being produced at present; say fifteen five-reel subjects and a dozen more subjects utilized in one and two reelers. Then recollect that at one time the General was issuing about seventy reels a week in short subjects while the Universal and Mutual made up possibly sixty more reels a week.

"I really believe that the production was greater in volume several years ago than it is today. It was certainly greater in the number of subjects utilized. With all the actual plots used and the great quantity of subjects already filmed it later became a question entirely of superior production.

"Today we simply present our subjects in a more entertaining and appealing way. More artistic and with careful attention to detail. The limit has not yet been reached."

Mr. Woods stated that he believed that D. W. Griffith and Cecil B. De Mille were the two greatest motion picture producers.

As Supervising Director of the Lasky Studios he has a direct interest in the selecting of the story, the preparation of the script until he finally turns it over to the director. Then Mr. Woods takes the picture up again for the editing and subtitles. The finished product is then sent forth; maybe with a little prayer.

For Mr. Woods deplores the fact that the film producer is handicapped as compared with the producer of stage plays. And he states that no matter how much of a hit the film production may have made with all the film colonists, it may after all be a rank failure.

"The real public is the final judge, and while the producers, directors, artists, and all friends who may witness the professional premiere of any particular film production, may fairly rave over it; sometimes there is a different tale reported from the various box offices throughout the country.

"But the producer of a stage play can 'try it out on the dog,' as the saying goes, and show his play in many towns, in the meantime making the changes he finds necessary to make it a better production. He can fairly hack his stage play to pieces until it doesn't bear the most remote resemblance to the original play and finally envolve a big success from a bad failure.

"We cannot do it in the films. When we send out the finished product it is done."

While Mr. Woods hurried for his train we noticed several telegrams in his pockets and imagined they were wiring him frantically from the West Coast to "hurry back, we haven't had a bit of sunshine since you left."

Karger Gets Atmosphere in Circus Story

Circus stories are, in motion pictures, generally without either plot or reason, and are merely a jumble of acrobatic stunts bunched together with comedy subtitles, and the wire-walking queen always marries the poor serious clown and the audience files out sadly avowing never to go again," says Maxwell Karger.

There is a reason for this, and Mr. Karger, Director-General of Metro productions, knowing the reason, decided, when he purchased "One-Thing-At-A-Time O'Day" from the author, William Dudley Pelley, for the Metro star, Bert Lytell, that he would produce the story in a spirit of the circus so necessary to its success.

"Technical details," said Mr. Karger, speaking of circus pictures in general, "are not the only requisites of a good circus picture. The spirit of the circus must be there; must be paramount in all the scenes as well as the atmosphere. Just sawdust and red paint don't make a good circus."

And realizing the value of this factor in the circus story, Mr. Karger has turned over the script to Director John Ince, who will be assisted by Fred Warren and Webster Cullison, both of whom are ex-circus men and well acquainted with the atmosphere of "the big top."

In this new picture Bert Lytell will be seen as a boobish-appearing country gawk, who puts one over every now and then. He has what is classified as a one-track mind and he does only one thing at a time. He makes a special study, as he says, of one thing, which, in many men would prove a virtue indeed. "Stradivarius" is his surname, his parents labelling him thusly because "he fiddles away his time."

Reports Leslie Feature Makes New Records

"A Stitch in Time" is said to be piling up new records for the Gladys Leslie-Ralph Ince production. A compilation of booking figures collected at the various Vitagraph offices places "A Stitch in Time" far ahead of all releases to date which star "the girl with a million-dollar smile."

A feature noticed in connection with the engagement of "A Stitch in Time" in various cities is the marked interest said to be taken in the screen version of this Fulton Theatre (New York City) success by patrons of dramatic stock houses where "A Stitch in Time" has been seen directly after its release to the weekly-change theatres.

This manifestation of interest on the part of one class of theatre-goers controverts a claim once made that screen versions of popular stage plays suffer in patronage after previously seen on the stage. If anything, the advertising expended in behalf of a stage play redounds to the benefit of a later screen version, an eventuality undoubtedly applicable as well to a reverse case.

Players in support of Miss Leslie include Eugene Strong, Agnes Ayres, Julia Swayne Gordon, Earle Schenk, Charles "The Unknown Quantity," Corinne Grifchester and Charles Walton.

Ralph Ince and Montagne Again Collaborate

With Ralph Ince's return to the Vitagraph, Edward J. Montagne is again collaborating with the well-known director on the Ince scripts. This method was followed for many years while Mr. Ince was with the Vitagraph, writer and director working together, somewhat similar to the Emerson-Loos combination. Some of Vitagraph's best pictures were the result.

Since Mr. Ince's return to the Flatbush plant, he has already completed "A Stitch in Time" and "Too Many Crooks," and Mr. Montagne is now putting the finishing touches to "Belinda Puts Her Hair Up," which will be their next vehicle to go into production.

Fox Cameraman Thrills

What is declared to be one of the most daring feats of photography seen in a long time was by Harry Plimpton, cameraman for Richard Stanton, who is staging "Checkers," the great racing picture, for William Fox. Plimpton, in a seaplane, filmed three members of the "Checkers."

The players were in another hydroaeroplane over Jamaica Bay, Long Island. The scene furnishes one of the big thrills in "Checkers."

Blackton Adds Three

J. Stuart Blackton, it was announced this week, has engaged, in addition to the cast already assembled for his new and yet unnamed picture, "Jolly" Fanny Rice, Gus Alexander and Eddie Dunn. All are well known to fans.

Goldwyn Discusses Screen Drama

Believes Producers Will Profit If They Listen More Closely to Suggestions from the Screen Public

Madge Kennedy, in "Strictly Confidential," Goldwyn film

It is the public's developing idea of the scope of the motion picture as much as the producer's that is compelling a change in the technique and composition of the screen drama, according to Samuel Goldwyn, who has recently returned from a long stay at the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, California.

"The producer is so wrapped up in his side of the matter that he often forgets that public attention does not stand still. The great body of screen observers have a great opportunity for finding flaws in the fare that is offered them, and it is a mistake to believe they merely adopt a waiting and uncritical attitude. Motion picture men have a good deal to learn yet from the magazines. Imperfect as most modern popular magazines are, it must be recognized that they are constantly in a state of evolution to meet the changing demand of the public interest and taste. The greatest disaster that could happen to the motion picture would be to have it stand still and not take advantage of new opportunities for technical novelty.

"I am interested in that side of the matter because our entire effort at the Goldwyn studios now is to perfect a form of the picture that will set it aside from the other forms of entertainment, especially the stage, on which it has been patterned. All our directors are pooling their ideas in the hope of finding new ways of setting off the picture in motion and of minimizing the energy of the spectator in giving it his attention. Critics may say we are too ambitious to attempt a thing that has not yet been accomplished. But we feel that the screen is an art by itself, not a sister art to anything, and as such there must be principles underlying it as yet undiscovered which will, when put into practice, allow it to obtain the honored place and recognition as a definite and unique thing we all believe it is. Men like Griffith and Ince have done much in that direction. Without laying claim to too much, I like to believe that Goldwyn productions will go into screen history as one of the chief contributing factors to the effectiveness and imaginative ennoblement of the motion picture."

Reports Exhibitors Praise "Veiled Adventure"

While exhibitors in every part of the country are said to be praising Constance Talmadge's current Select picture, "The Veiled Adventure," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, Miss Talmadge is putting the finishing touches on her forthcoming Select attraction, "Happiness a la Mode." Even at this early date exhibitors who have already played "The Veiled Adventure" are making anxious inquiries concerning Miss Talmadge's forthcoming attraction it is reported, and although no release date has as yet been announced, hundreds of requests are said to have been received for early bookings.

One large Western exhibitor writes:

"'The Veiled Adventure' stood them up four afternoons and nights. Let me have Constance Talmadge's next as soon as it is finished."

Tornado is Filmed

A tornado which fullfils an important part in the plot development of "A Man's Fight" the latest super-feature with Dustin Farnum just completed by Director T. N. Heffron at the Brunton Studios, provides one of the realistic and spectacular effects in this forthcoming United Picture Theatres offering. First is seen the gathering of the storm, the leaves stir and tremble. The wind increases to a gale, and trees bend before the blast.

A "moving" argument for urging membership in the United Picture Theatres of America

Becomes Member of United's Advisory Board

SIDNEY M. NUTT, proprietor of the New Central theatre, the most exclusive motion picture house in Hot Springs, Ark., has upon the invitation of President Berst accepted membership on the Advisory Board of United. Mr. Nutt's appointment makes a total of 29 of America's leading exhibitors serving on United's Advisory Board.

Mr. Nutt says:

"I will be delighted to serve and do anything I can to make the United the leading concern in the world, which I think will be soon. It looks as though you have the right principle and the right men, so you can't lose.

"You are going forward every day, and if we will be careful and not try to grow too fast we will win out. Go slow but sure and you can't go wrong."

W. J. Lytle of San Antonio, Texas, owner and manager of the Royal, Empire, Princess, Wigwam and Pike theatres in that city, was appointed to the United Advisory Board last week.

Among the visitors to the home office of United last week were two members of the Exhibitors' Advisory Board, Mr. Edward Zorn, of the Temple theatre, Toledo, Ohio, and Mr. W. J. Hayes, of the Strand theatre, Erie, Pa.

Members who purchased additional shares last week, include: Isadore Teacher, Evanston, Ill.; J. W. Romwebber, Akron, O.; D. Filizola, Ft. Scott, Kansas; Stanley & Brill, Sedalia, Mo.; J. E. Haggard, Nevada, Mo.; Wes. Millington, Ottowa, Kansas; William Pearl, Highland Park, Ill.; W. W. Graham, St. Louis, Mo.

Forty-nine new members are reported by United for the current week.

Lou Tellegen Signs for Goldwyn Pictures

THE latest featured player in the Goldwyn roster is Lou Tellegen, whose engagement was announced by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation recently.

Mr. Tellegen will play opposite his wife, Geraldine Farrar, in a series of photoplays under the direction of Frank Lloyd, also a recent Goldwyn acquisition. The couple will leave New York Saturday for the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, California, where they will begin work immediately.

Mr. Tellegen has had a most colorful career in the drama. Though his nationality is primarily a blending of Dutch and Greek, he is a typical product of the French school.

In the last few years Mr. Tellegen has achieved widespread popularity in this country, representing among all critics the delicate artistry of the European theatre. Perhaps his most notable appearance was with Dorothy Donnelly in "Maria Rosa." He has appeared in "The Ware Case," "The King from Nowhere," and several other plays. His most recent performance was in "Blind Youth," which he himself wrote in collaboration with Willard Mack.

In February, 1916, Lou Tellegen married Geraldine Farrar. This is the first time the two have appeared together.

Aside from an appearance when the screen was in its earliest days, Lou Tellegen has never before appeared in motion pictures. The plays that the records star him in are "The Victory of Conscience," "The Explorer," and "The Unknown," "The Victoria Cross," "The Black Wolf" and "The Long Trail."

Deslys Feature Captures

Gaby Deslys, it is estimated, has reached a higher degree of popularity through the phenomenal drawing power of "Infatuation," issued as a Pathe special. So great has been its drawing power that return dates are said to have been played and original bookings extended. It captured Los Angeles, the home of the sternest of cinema critics when it was booked for one week at Quinn's Rialto, beginning April 27.

Goldwyn Plans Publicity to Blanket America

Since the return of Samuel Goldwyn from the Culver City, a new publicity policy has been worked out, aiming to reach every important publicity medium in America, in every corner of the country, with material on Goldwyn productions.

Two new publicity agents have been added to the Goldwyn staff since the recent engagement of Ralph Block as director of publicity, and Kenneth Macgowan as director of advertising. Howard Dietz, well known both as a newspaper writer and an advertising writer is now with the Goldwyn organization. Miss Lucy Huffaker, former publicity writer for the Washington Square Players, and wife of Edward Goodman, their director, joins the Goldwyn publicity staff this week.

Hedda Nova is Engaged by Universal Film

Hedda Nova, a distinguished and widely-known European actress has been engaged by the Universal company to play the title role in "The Spitfire of Seville," Joseph Franklin Polland's latest photoplay which has been purchased by the Universal for a super-production. Priscilla Dean, the Universal star who was scheduled to play the title role in this super-production is ill with pneumonia and Mlle. Nova has been chosen to take her place in the production.

Thurston Hall will be Mlle. Nova's leading man and George Seigmann will direct.

George Walsh Popular

Unique evidence of the popularity of George Walsh, the William Fox star, in South America was given last month by the production in Rio de Janeiro of a three-act stage comedy entitled "The Rival of George Walsh." The play was written and directed by Francisco Marzullom, one of the best-known actors in South America, and was greeted with capacity houses throughout its run.

Goldwyn Makes Plans for Scenario Material

Extensive plans for additional scenario output at the Goldwyn Studios appropriate to the comprehensive plans for the new Goldwyn star pictures, are being made by J. G. Hawks, managing editor. Negotiations for several important works of fiction are now under way, and the staff of writers at the Culver City Studios are said to be working on a number of new adaptations, as well as several striking original stories.

The newest addition to the scenario force is Harvey Gates, who comes backed by a long record of cinema successes. Now he is working on a vehicle for Pauline Frederick.

Thompson Buchanan, an American author, another recent Goldwyn acquisition, is working on an original story for Madge Kennedy, of modern setting, in which the star will play a society part.

Griffith Brings New Comedy East

When D. W. Griffith came to New York recently for the opening on May 13 of his repertory season at the Harris Theatre, he brought to the metropolis with him his latest completed subject, "Trueheart Susie," a country comedy of the type of "A Romance of Happy Valley." In "Trueheart Susie" Claire Seymour, who appeared in "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," is featured, with Robert Harron in a principal role.

"Broken Blossoms" was the production which Mr. Griffith put on as the opening program of his season at the Harris.

Features Vivian Martin

Vivian Martin, Paramount star, is completing her new picture, "The Third Kiss," at the Morosco studio, Hollywood, Robert G. Vignola being the director. Meanwhile, Miss Martin's next Paramount release, "The Home Town Girl," was scheduled for May 11. This is an adaptation of "You Can't Just Wait," a story by Oscar Graeve, which appeared first in Collier's Weekly. The adaptation was made by Edith M. Kennedy and Robert Vignola directed.

Bigger and Better Films Says Brentlinger

ALBERT F. BRENTLINGER, general manager of the Bankers' and Merchants' Theatres Company, Fort Wayne, Ind., is an exhibitor who believes the future of the picture business depends entirely upon bigger and better pictures. He further holds that the exhibitor should have the right to choose his pictures in order that he may know what he is giving his public.

In a recent letter to Floyd Brown, manager of the Indianapolis Exchange for First National Exhibitors' Circuit, he expresses this very clearly. His letter contains many thoughts of interest to all exhibitors. Mr. Brentlinger wrote:

"It is with great pleasure that I advise you of our wonderful success with 'Virtuous Wives.' It broke all records in our three houses, the Liberty, Terre Haute; Orpheum, Ft. Wayne, and Murrette, Richmond.

"This photoplay made a profound impression upon our audiences. It is a masterpiece of technical perfection. It was gratifying to present to my patrons a picture of such high calibre as this as Miss Stewart's first release.

"I feel you are right when you demand of your various stars to make pictures which will meet with your approval before acceptances are made. In so doing you can be assured that all pictures will contain all the elements that go to make up a first-class production, and one that every exhibitor can boost as such. Nothing is more detrimental to the exhibitor of today than to exploit a picture as a great special and find it only an average production.

"I have made a very careful study of the picture industry and I have come to the conclusion that the situation is fast developing into a 'survival of the fittest.' The time has come when the producing companies must make real pictures if they expect to meet with success. The market is overstocked with productions that lack punch and unless this is overcome business is bound to suffer. Nothing can drive our patrons back to legitimate attractions sooner than pictures that do not hold the interest and the sooner the producer comes to that realization the better it will be for the business.

"No one is more willing than I to pay good money for productions which come up to the standard, as this class of pictures are proving my success, while the other kind mean failure. I am confident you will continue to release only pictures which meet your approval."

Thompson Leading Man for Greeley

Hugh Thompson, the widely-known screen player, who has appeared as leading man for Theda Bara, Virginia Pearson, Annette Kellermann, Florence Reed, Emma Wehlen, Olive Tell, Doris Kenyon and others has just completed work in the five-reel picture issued in S. L. Rothapfel's first Unit Program, and has been engaged by World Pictures as leading man for Evelyn Greeley in "Phil-for-Short," the first World picture to be produced with Miss Greeley as the sole star.

Oscar Apfel is directing the production.

Engages Chinese Actors

In order to obtain realism and genuine characters for several scenes in the serial, "Elmo the Mighty," being produced by the Great Western Producing Co., and for which the Universal has the exclusive rights in the United States and Canada, Henry McRae who is directing the picture, obtained the services of several Chinese men to play the parts allotted to those characters in the serial.

Lou Tellegen Makes Interesting Statement

WITH the signing of his contract to play in Goldwyn Pictures, with his wife, Geraldine Farrar, Lou Tellegen comes forth with this interesting statement:

"It is with a tingling of expectation that I look forward to the work at Culver City," said Mr. Tellegen on the morning scheduled for his departure from New York. "I have appeared in pictures before, to be sure, but somehow I feel as though I were taking a fling at a new form of art. For, in fact, the motion picture has changed since my last adventure with it and changed considerably. It has progressed—oh, so much. Where once the actor was unable to play his role with the subtlety of character, due to the undeveloped machinery of the camera, to-day this is all done away with.

"I feel that in appearing on the screen to-day I can put into my acting the minute expressions, the details of gesture which the spoken drama allows. When the motion picture was in its younger days I was not able to do this, and it was with a keen disappointment that I was informed that it would be necessary for me to work in time with the camera flashes. No art is an art until its mechanism is perfected. The motion picture to-day stands as an art merely because it has conquered its medium. I am a sculptor and I understand to the full just what this means. If I have not the proper clay I cannot model to artistic satisfaction."

Eulogizes Priscilla Dean

Further proof that Universal has the "find of the year" in its feminine star Priscilla Dean is evidenced by the many reports being received at the Universal home office in regard to the success of the attractions in which she is the star. Almost daily telegrams and letters are received it is said congratulating Universal for the excellent attractions of Miss Dean.

That she is a drawing power is shown by the fact that some of the largest theatres in the east have booked her vehicles. Recently the Rialto, of Washington, D. C., one of the Moore circuit of theatres in Washington, and the Boston theatre of Boston, Mass., signed up for the Dean feature "The Exquisite Thief."

Jack Mulhall with Metro

Jack Mulhall who has played many important parts on the screen, will be leading man for Emmy Wehlen in "Fools and Their Money."

Mr. Mulhall is a graduate of Columbia University and is well known especially in New York, having been a member of the West End Stock of this city for two years. Later he appeared for some time on the Orpheum Circuit in his own sketches. He later played with James K. Hackett in "The Grain of Dust."

Says Nesbit's Latest is Big Success

Evelyn Nebit's latest William Fox play, "Thou Shalt Not," recently released, has met with great success, asserts the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation, and part of this success has been due to the way in which the play lays bare the religious hypocrisy and bigotry of a small town.

The Fox Film Corporation is in receipt of a letter from the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures praising the picture highly, and particular mention is made of its revelations of small-town provincialism and cruelty.

Formes Joins Vitagraph

Karl Formes, the singer, recently at the Park Theatre in New York, is going in for picture acting under the Vitagraph banner. He will be seen initially in "The Little Boss," in which he supports Bessie Love, on June 2, and in "Rogue's Romance," supporting Earle Williams, on June 9. His characterization in the former play is that of Old Farley, one of the important roles of the play. Years ago, Mr. Formes took a fling in the movies for a short period, appearing in several Kalem productions.

Walcamp Gets New Title

"The Queen of 1000 Cowboys" is the latest title applied to Marie Walcamp, Universal's daring serial star, as the result of her thrilling exploits at the Fourth Annual California Rodeo staged at Sonora, California on May 3 and 4.

Miss Walcamp was the guest of honor at the big round-up of western events in which more than 1000 cowboys participated for handsome prizes offered to keep up interest in the fastly-passing sports of the great west that was.

Press Book Now Ready for MacLaren Feature

Universal's press book for the exhibitor's on "The Unpainted Woman" is now being sent to the exchanges for distribution. Mary MacLaren is the star of this Special Attraction picture which portrays the life of a woman who lived in the land of the wheatfields.

The press book is complete in every detail, as are all the press book on the Special Attractions now being issued by the Universal company. A complete story is given for the exhibitor, short synopsis, newspaper stories and reviews, ad cuts, and advertising aids of every description. Many letters from exhibitors have been received by the Universal company since it started issuing the press books, all of which have commended the idea and told of its helpfulness in exploiting the picture being shown.

"Happiness a la Mode" Is Talmadge's Next

"Happiness a la Mode" is announced as the title of Constance Talmadge's next Select Picture, in which she will be presented by Lewis J. Selznick. Miss Talmadge has already completed her part of the production, and the finishing touches are being added before the original print is shipped to New York. According to present arrangements "Happiness a la Mode" will be released as a June attraction, following "The Veiled Adventure," her present offering.

Rothapfel Sells Foreign Rights

Robertson-Cole Company Buys All Foreign Markets Outside U. S. and Canada for the Rothapfel Unit Program

Jane Grey appears in "When My Ship Comes In," for Independent Sales Corp.

THE Robertson-Cole Company have taken over the entire rights to the Rothapfel Unit, outside of the United States and Canada.

This deal, which involves a vast sum, was concluded by representatives of Robertson-Cole and Frank G. Hall, president of the Independent Sales Corporation and vice-president of the Rothapfel Pictures Corporation, immediately after the showing of the initial unit at the Rialto theatre.

Thus are declared to be allied two of the most powerful factors in motion picture fields, for S. L. Rothapfel is said to be almost as well known abroad as he is in the United States, while Robertson-Cole long ago became established as one of the foremost organizations in the cinema exporting business.

Robertson-Cole have already concluded arrangements whereby Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., whom they represent in the United States, will take over the distribution of the Rothapfel programmes through the British Isles. Jury's is announced as the foremost distributing organization in all Britain, and the most expert handling of the Rothapfel Unit is expected from this source.

Under a recent arrangement, Jury's distribute in the British Isles all the Robertson-Cole motion picture products, and in additions will buy for Robertson-Cole the foremost European productions for American distribution. Robertson-Cole, as Jury's American representatives, have already closed several important deals for their British associates, not the least of which was the recent purchase of Maurice Tourneur's, "The White Heather."

Viewing the situation from a foreign angle, Robertson-Cole is declared to have made a ten strike in obtaining the Rothapfel Unit for foreign distribution, while Rothapfel is being congratulated for aligning himself with such an organization as Robertson-Cole.

The association of Robertson-Cole, and the Rothapfel Unit is described as giving further prestige to the already firmly established position of Robertson-Cole as one of the foremost factors in the motion picture export field. The entire globe is circled by pictures produced by the various Robertson-Cole units. The people who handle the foreign business of Robertson-Cole are said to be experts in this line, made so by years of export activity.

First Run Presentations for Buffalo Feature

FIRST run presentations of "The Price of Innocence," initial production of the Buffalo Motion Picture Corporation, of Buffalo, N. Y., in which Stella K. Talbot is starred, will be given in every key city in the United States within the next two weeks, it is declared.

It already has received its premier of a week's run at the Washington theatre, Detroit, Mich., to exceptional patronage, and a season of seven days to big business at the Strand Theatre, New Orleans. It opened for a week's run on Sunday in Cleveland and St. Louis. The remaining key city engagements will be played next week.

The Buffalo Motion Picture Corporation is headed by Frank L. Talbot, a former exhibitor and well known showman, as president. Mr. Talbot was one of the first of the producers for the legitimate stage to enter the ranks of motion picture exhibitors. He used the famous Hippodrome theatre in St. Louis to introduce the new art in that territory.

Last fall, in Buffalo, he was given the opportunity to work out the production ideas acquired in his years of experience as an exhibitor. The Buffalo concern was organized and financed by a number of prominent bankers and business men there. "The Price of Innocence" was chosen as the first story, and Miss Stella Talbot was selected as the star.

The production is being released independently by all First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchanges. Likened in action and theme to the two famous classics, "Shore Acres" and "'Way Down East," it is proving itself it is said to be a genuine box office attraction.

Releases Latest Fairbanks

"The Knickerbocker Buckaroo," Douglas Fairbanks' big special production recently acquired by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was released on the Artcraft schedule May 18. This production is reputed to have cost upwards of $260,000, and was made on a scale of lavishness said never before to be equalled by Fairbanks in any of his pictures. Albert Parker directed.

Marjorie Daw is leading woman and the support includes William Wellman, Frank Campeau, Edythe Chapman and Albert McQuarrie.

Select Officials Have Celebration

Many from Home Office, Together with Several Hundred Exhibitors, Guests at Opening of Enlarged Quarters in Boston

OFFICIALS from Select's Home Office and several hundred exhibitors in the New England district were the guests of New England Manager David J. Selznick last Monday in celebrating the opening of newly enlarged quarters of the New England Exchange in Boston. The officials from Select's Home Office who were present were General Manager Sam E. Morris and Director of Sales Charles R. Rogers. Owing to the urgent need of his presence in New York, Mr. Lewis J. Selznick, President of Select, was unable to attend.

The location of the new New England Exchange remains at the same address, 69 Church street, but the quarters are said to have bene enlarged to twice their former size. The building next door to the old Exchange has been taken over, and together the two buildings have been remodeled and decorated so that from the inside it gives the appearance of one large building.

This is the second time within a year that the quarters of the New England Exchange have been enlarged. Several months ago, when Director of Sales Charles R. Rogers was New England Manager, considerable new floor space was annexed. Since that time, however, the New England business has steadily increased and about a month ago it was realized that even more space was needed.

Constance Talmadge, in "The Veiled Adventure," Select picture

Director of Sales Charles R. Rogers, under whose supervision as New England Manager the Boston quarters were first enlarged, went to Boston last Saturday to assist New England Manager Selznick with the arrangements for the celebration.

Invitations had already been sent to several hundred exhibitors in the New England territory and replies of acceptance were pouring in with every mail. Mr. Rogers arrived just in time to save Mr. Selznick from an attack of nervous prostration.

The events for the day were arranged in the form of a running program and consisted chiefly in the projection of the latest Select Pictures including Star Series attractions and Specials. Refreshments were served throughout the day.

Universal Continues Relations With Tippett

IN the wake of the recent departure for Europe of John D. Tippett, it is announced from Universal headquarters that that company's product in Europe will continue to be distributed under the supervision of Mr. Tippett through the Trans-Atlantic Film Company of London, which has been the European distributing center for the entire Universal product for the past six years. It was that long ago that Mr. Tippett sailed for Europe to organize the European distribution of Universal Pictures, founding the Trans-Atlantic Film Company for that purpose, and the notable success which he has had in the foreign circulation of these pictures has made him recognized as one of the foremost European distributors of motion pictures.

Mr. Tippett is the only American film executive who has consistently distributed an American product in Europe through his own offices exclusively.

During his recent visit to America, as the result of a series of conferences between Mr. Tippett, Mr. Carl Laemmle, Mr. P. A. Powers, and Mr. R. H. Cochrane of the Universal Film Company, a satisfactory arrangement was entered into for the indefinite continuation and extension of their relations.

Mr. Tippett, before leaving for Europe, declared that American film product in Europe this year would enjoy greater vogue than ever, but that it would be necessary for American film producers to grant more recognition to London as a film center than it has in the past.

Moves to Fifth Avenue

The New York office of the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc. and Great Authors Pictures, Inc., has moved from 3 East 44th Street to 547 Fifth Avenue.

Master prints of "The Westerners" for Great Authors Pictures, Inc., and "Desert Gold" for Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., are on the way here from the West. Rumor from the California film colony pronounces "The Westerners" and "Desert Gold" absolutely the most wonderful pictures produced this year. They will be released as specials by W. W. Hodkinson Corp.

Episode No. 13—"Barriers of Flame."
Episode No. 14—"Under Arrest."
Episode No. 15—"Out of the Shadows."

Says "Modern Husbands" Suits Walthall

Critics of Henry B. Walthall's work in motion pictures have frequently laid stress on what they consider the failure of the producer to furnish him with the proper type of vehicle. Walthall is an unusual character, who needs special attention when it comes to the selection of a story. In "Modern Husbands," which Robertson-Cole release through Exhibitors Mutual, Walthall apparently has been placed in exactly the type of picture for which his talents are best suited, for wherever it has been shown it has received an immeasurable share of praise.

"Modern Husbands" is Walthall's latest work for Robertson-Cole. It is built around the lives of two married couples, and an unscrupulous "love pirate."

Reef Lauds First National Attractions at Decorah as Money Makers

R. J. Reef, of the Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa, says that for seven years he has been building up a steady patronage by giving his patrons his personal guarantee of the quality of the subjects he books. He has shown all the First National attractions, he says, and in every instance he has made big money.

"I go out on the stage and tell my patrons such and such a picture is coming," said he. "Of course, I make a thorough investigation of the picture before I give it such announcement. After many such talks from the stage, and a liberal use of one of the best mailing lists in this country, together with liberal space in the local newspaper and in the papers in nearby towns, I can always feel confident that a picture will go over as it should. I never devote so much attention to a picture unless it merits it—and I always put over every First National attraction this way."

Mitchell Lewis Denies Leaving Select Pictures

Following the printing of an item in a trade paper daily to the effect that Mitchell Lewis had withdrawn from his contract with the Select Pictures Corporation to go on his own in feature productions, Lewis at his Los Angeles office last week denied the statement that he would make no more productions for the Select Corporation.

Through the courtesy of Lewis J. Selznick, Lewis had been given permission to appear in one special production in addition to his pictures being made for release through the Select Corporation, of which Mr. Selznick is the head. This special release for one production gave rise to the report that Lewis would sever his affiliation with Select.

Assures Seven Paramount-Drews

Original Schedule Will Be Maintained According to Official Announcement of Famous Players-Lasky

Houdini is shown tied to the drive wheel of a locomotive to provide one of the multitude of thrills planned for his Famous Players-Lasky picture

WALTER E. Greene, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution, has just announced that in accordance with the original schedule, there will be seven Paramount-Drew comedies during the current season.

Following the death of Mr. Drew, considerable speculation has been evident among exhibitors, particularly those who have contracted for the entire series of Paramount-Drew comedies, as to whether or not the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation would be able to deliver seven subjects. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew together made five comedies for Paramount release in the following order: "Romance and Rings," "Once A Mason," "The Amateur Liar," "Harold, the Last of the Saxons," just released, and "Squared," to be released June 15th.

"Squared," the next film in which Mrs. Drew and the late Sidney Drew appear, is said to be not only different, in that Henry and Polly are not man and wife, but also it is not written around the home and the domestic life of these two leads.

It is a business play, with all the scenes laid around a business office. Henry is the office drudge, the old faithful who does all the work, gives his entire loyalty to the firm, gives his very life to his work and yet someone else always gets the money and credit. Polly is a Twentieth Century business woman who tries to draw Henry out of his rut.

Following the release of "Squared," two comedies in which Mrs. Drew will star alone, will be presented. They are "Bunkered," a golf story, and "Night of the Dub," another highly amusing two-reeler. In both of these stories Mr. Drew had a hand in the writing.

"Harold, the Last of the Saxons," the current release, is reported to have already scored one of the greatest hits ever registered by Paramount-Drew comedies. Congratulatory messages have been received from all parts of the country both by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the V. B. K. organization, which produces these films.

Robertson-Cole Sells Scandinavian Rights

AN unprecedented season of popularity for American films in Continental Europe is predicted by Chester Beecroft, who represents the Scandinavian Film Agency of Copenhagen in the United States. Mr. Beecroft has just returned from an eleven weeks business trip abroad, where he went to confer with his firm regarding distribution of the Robertson-Cole pictures.

Before leaving for Europe, Mr. Beecroft, as representative of the Scandinavian Film Agency, purchased the entire Robertson-Cole motion picture production for 1918 and 1919, and in addition a large number of specials handled for foreign rights only by Robertson-Cole. This deal is declared to involve nearly a million dollars and was the biggest foreign transaction of the year.

"Every indication points to a record year for Robertson-Cole films," asserted Mr. Beecroft. "The type of production which thus far has been issued by Robertson-Cole fits in ideally with what the continental European motion picture enthusiast regards as the best screen plays.

"In addition to the star series already mentioned, the Scandinavian Film Agency purchased the following specials for Continental Europe: "Nine-Tenths of the Law," with Mitchell Lewis; "Her Man," with Elaine Hammerstein; "Men," with Chraoltte Walker, "The Eleventh Commandment," with Lucille Lee Stewart; "Those Who Pay," with Bessie Barriscale; "Just a Woman," with Charlotte Walker; "The Prodigal Wife," with Mary Boland; "Devil's Playground," with Vera Michelena; "Where Love Is," with Ann Murdock; "The $15,000 Mystery," with Detective Wm. J. Burns and "The Pendleton Round-Up."

"In addition to these the Scandanavian Film Agency bought fifty-two Billie Rhodes comedies, twenty-six Capital Comedies and eighteen of the super series of Jester comedies with Twede Dan."

Barthelmess in New York

The many friends of Dick Barthelmess, formerly of Broadway, New York, but now of Broadway, Los Angeles, are welcoming him back during his short leave from studio work, which has been granted him by D. W. Griffith for the purpose of attending the opening of "Broken Blossoms" at the Cohan Theatre. In this production Barthelmes has a featured place.

Variety of Subjects For Metro

Director-General Maxwell Karger Reports Discovering Spice in Various Themes of Productions Under Way

WITH Viola Dana in a frothy farce, Bert Lytell in a tale of the big tops, May Allison in a story of the stage, Hale Hamilton putting pep into prohibition, and Emmy Wehlen satirizing newly rich society, Director-Genearl Maxwell Karger is said to find plenty of variety in his supervising at the Metro studios.

There are only five characters in Miss Dana's production, "Some Bride," a seaside farce of a bride with "can't behave" eyes and a jealous husband. Irving Cummings has the latter role.

As "World of Make Believe," Bert Lytell makes a "special study" of everything he undertakes, and carries that thing to completion. Lytell had to make a special study of getting a job with a circus, and of persuading the bareback rider, Eileen Percy, to love him. John Ince, who directs the production, has as assistants, Danny Hogan, rustling circus props, Webster Cullison, directing close shots, and Fred Warren, major-domo of the three hundred extra people.

Emmy Wehlen and her company have been working two weeks on "Fools and Their Money," the satire on Manhattan society picturized by Finis Fox from the story by E. Forst. Miss Wehlen has a cast including Jack Mulhall, Frank Currier, William V. Mong, Hugh Fay, Charles Hill Mailes, Mrs. Bertram Grasby, Betty Peterson and Molly McConnell. Herbert Blache is directing.

Hale Hamilton is presented by Metro in "After His Own Heart"

"Almost Married," in which May Allison has the role of a "Swiss nightingale" who flies to New York's Cabarabia, was completed last week. Charles Swickard is directing the picture, and the cast includes Walter I. Percival, Frank Currier, Harry Ratenbury, James Warton James and Hugh Fay.

What happened to a certain "dry" republic when a lively young man with a gift of gab and a grip full of liquid "pep" breezed in, is being depicted in "Full of Pep," in which Hale Hamilton is starring under the direction of Harry L. Franklin.

Strong Types Predominate in Warner Feature

ATTENTION to detail which will be found paramount in the first Superior Picture, "The Man Who Turned White," starring H. B. Warner, which Robertson-Cole will release next month through Exhibitors Mutual, extended particularly to the selection of Warner's supporting players.

Without Joudar, the "Bornu Barber," or in other words the real villain of "The Man Who Turned White," the story would lack "pep" and might become uninteresting. So Jesse D. Hampton, had to face his most difficult task. Scouring the Hollywood film colony, he finally hit upon Manuel Ojeda, who professes to be a Mexican, but who is suspected of being Arabian. He looks the villian and acts it even better, and with his dark skin he did not need much make-up to portray Joudar.

One of the cleverest touches in the feature was given by Carmen Phillips, who plays the part of Fanina. As Fanina, the dancing girl of the desert, she does one of the most graceful "bits" ever seen on the screen. Walter Perry, who made himself a name as one of the most versatile character actors on the West Coast, has another prominent part in the production. He plays a watchman. Perry has frequently been seen in William Desmond Pictures, his latest appearance being in "The Mints of Hell."

Wedgewood Nowell, who plays Capt. Beverly, "a moral coward, but a courageous soldier," is well known as a heavy, his most recent work being with Alma Rubens, in Diane of the Green Van." Jay Dwiggins is M. Mirabeau, the merchant of Mzab.

Eugene Ronde, a favorite of other days, reappears as the wife of the Merchant of Mzab.

"Wagon Tracks" Is Next Hart Feature

C. Gardner Sullivan, scenarist, is responsible for Wm. S. Hart's new Artcraft picture, produced under supervision of Thomas H. Ince, and following "Square Deal Sanderson" which is now completed.

"Wagon Tracks" is the title of this picture. It deals with the life of those who followed the old Santa Fe trail westward in the Eighteen-fifties and sixties. Experienced guides brought the wagon trains across the deserts and through the mountains. It is as such a guide that Wm. S. Hart will be seen—Buckskin Hamilton, captain of the emigrant trains, a "son of the new empire," fearless, brave, resourceful.

Universal Film Shown at Automobile Club

Some of the most prominent good roads enthusiasts in the country were guests at the annual meeting of the National Highway Traffic Association at the headquarters of the Automobile Club of America, 247 West 45th street, New York City, Wednesday night, May 14, when the first presentation of "The Open Road to a Greater America," Universal's campaign film, was the feature.

This film, the first ever produced exploiting the dire necessity of better highways in America, has aroused a great interest among exponents of this movement. Among those who have expressed interest and offered their support, it is said, are listed some of the highest officials of the nation's more important highway associations."

Lytell Uses Two Cameras in Circus Story

Long shots and close-ups of Bert Lytell are filmed simultaneously in the production of "One-Thing-At-A-Time O'Day," at the Metro studios. The Metro star faces two directors and two cameramen in nearly every scene of the circus story.

John Ince directs the body of the story and the master scenes of the circus episodes, with Robert Kurrle, Bert Lytell's photographer, at the camera crank. The closer scenes are directed by Webster Cullison and photographed by Eugene Gaudio. In practically all of the scenes, long shots and close shots are taken at the same time.

Negotiations for Kaufman

It is announced at the offices of the Selnick Pictures Corporation that negotiations are under way for securing the services of S. J. Kaufman to write for the Selznick stars.

The Pioneer Film Corporation Presents Henry B. Walthall in "The Boomerang," Made by National

Announces First Select for May Release

The first of Select pictures May releases will be "Break the News to Mother," a Select special attraction inspired by the famous song of the same name by Charles K. Harris. Two others which will be released later in the month are Norma Talmadge in "The New Moon" and Mitchell Lewis in "Jacques of the Silver North."

"Break the News to Mother" is a story of romance and a mother's love for her son. In the adaptation of this story for the screen there has been retained all the sweet sentiment which made the song so famous.

Raymond Bloomer has the leading male role in the special, while the leading feminine role is played by Pearl Shepard. Others in the cast are Gertrude Berkley, Alice Gerard, Forrest Robinson, William Baily, Louis Stern, Joseph Smiley and Chester Barnett.

Universal Schedules More Animal Comedies

Announcement has been made by the Universal of the early release of the second of its Campbell animal pictures, with Joe, the Monk, and Charlie, the elephant, as the leading actors. "And The Elephant Still Pursued Her" is the fanciful title chosen for the second of these animal comedies.

The members of the cast include Dora Rogers as the Girl; Rube Miller, the opera house manager; Bob McKenzie as the villain, and Ross Letterman and George Allen as his frisky henchman.

Mae Murray Scores Again

One of the best Universal Special Attractions ever produced is the newest Mae Murray picture "The Big Little Person" according to Universal officials. The producer's predictions are that this attraction will be of great box-office value. The picture is five reels in length and was adapted to the screen by Bess Merideth from the novel by Rebecca Cooper Eastman.

Coming Program Offerings

Four June Releases for the Metro

Refreshing Light Summer Plays Follow Exhausting War Times, It Is Announced—Clean Humor Predominates

Bert Lytell in "The Lion's Den," his latest Metro vehicle, has evidently bearded the lion

THE announcement from the Metro studios of that producing firm's releases for the month of June, show light, clean humor predominating as a welcome change from the trying days of the war. The first of the four June releases is May Allison in a racy story scheduled for June 2, describing the trials and tribulations of a prima donna imported by a progressive young theatrical promoter. "Almost Married" is the title of the comedy-drama, and it is a screen adaptation of E. V. Durling's story written especially for Miss Allison by the erstwhile New York reporter. June Mathis and Luther A. Reed, of the Metro staff, converted the vehicle to the screen, and Charles Swickard directed under the supervision of Maxwell Karger, Director General of Metro.

On June 9, under the title of "Patricia," Metro will release the first venture of a new combination of writers in the persons of Anne and Alice Duffy, two San Francisco women. June Mathis and Luther A. Reed, who are well acquainted with the personality of Viola Dana, have made the adaptation from the play. Henry Otto, who directed May Allison in "The Island of Intrigue," directed "Patricia," and John Arnold, Miss Dana's regular photographer, was the cameraman.

Emmy Wehlen's "The Amateur Adventuress" is scheduled for release on June 16. It is the story of the newly rich called "The Family Tree," depicting the efforts of a contractor's family to secure recognition on a social plane with the established aristocratic families of their town.

It is an original story by E. Forst. The story was scenarioized by Finis Fox, of the Metro staff, and was directed by Herbert Blache. Martin Allen is Blache's cameraman, and Maxwell Karger supervised the direction.

Supporting Miss Wehlen in "The Family Tree" are Jack Mulhall, Charles Mailes, Mollie McConnell, William V. Mong, Betty Peterson, Gerard Grassby and John Steppling.

Bert Lytell in "One-Thing-at-a-Time O'Day," from William Dudley Pelley's short story in the Saturday Evening Post, stands out prominently as one of the few good saw-dust ring pictures since that side-splitting comedy success, "When the Circus Came to Town," by William H. Cook, who is also a recent addition to the Metro staff.

Eileen Percy is Mr. Lytell's leading woman. The others in the cast are Joseph Kilgour, Jules Hanft, J. Carrol, Fred Heck and Bull Montana. John Ince directed.

George D. Baker adapted the story to the screen, and Robert B. Kurrle, cranking the camera, completes the personnel.

Shirley Mason's Latest

In the new Paramount picture, "The Final Close-Up," which overflows, it is said, with good comedy and dramatic situations, Shirley Mason again plays the type of role which is so well liked by screen patrons—a purely American girl, full of pep and activity, who keeps things moving all the time and never allows a dull moment to creep into her daily life. This picture is scheduled for release May 18. Royal Brown wrote the original story, which was scenarioized by Julia Crawford Ivers.

Walter Edwards directed. The supporting cast includes Francis McDonald, James Gordon, Betty Bouton, Eugene Burr and Mary Warren.

Dustin Farnum is star of "A Man's Fight," United Picture Theatres feature

William S. Hart's New Picture for Artcraft Is "The Money Corral." Marguerite Clark, in "Come Out of the Kitchen," Is Scheduled to Wear Many Costumes. At the Right Is a Moment in "Vicky Van," in Which Ethel Clayton Is the Featured Player

Keith's Circuit Books "Topics of the Day"

"TOPICS OF THE DAY," selected from the world's news by the Literary Digest and produced by Timely Films, Inc., has been booked for the Keith circuit houses, each film for seven days' run. The arrangement includes eight houses in the New York district, and Indianapolis, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Columbus, Cincinnati, Toledo, Dayton, Youngstown, Ohio, and Louisville.

Omaha audiences have shown the keenest appreciation of the short feature which is booked at the Rialto. It was a big hit from the very start and Manager H. M. Thomas speaks in highest appreciation of it in a communication to Pathe Exchange, saying:

"Permit me to compliment you upon your new release, 'Topics of the Day.' I believe the issuing of a film of this character is the biggest advancement of the motion picture industry in some time.

"I have just shown the first of these films, and I want to tell you right now that I would not think of running a program in the future with this feature eliminated."

Beginning the carefully planned national campaign to get a record-breaking distribution of "Topics of the Day," the Literary Digest on May 3, in the course of a quarter-page display in 300 newspapers, gave a conspicuous place to the growingly popular "punch" paragraphs dealing with social and political and other foibles of the hour.

Goldwyn to Release Three Ford Weeklies

The next three Ford Educational Weeklies to be released through Goldwyn disclose the romantic interest which surrounds the history of common things:

"From Mud Dug," the story of pottery making, takes audiences through the largest pottery kilns in the world.

"The Land of Ukulele," is a visit to the Hawaiian Islands.

In "The Only Way," concerns the traffic cop, the railway guard, the teamster and the fireman.

The releases dates for these Ford Weeklies are:

May 25—"From Mud Dug," the Story of Pottery Making.

June 1—"The Land of Ukulele," A Visit to the Hawaiian Islands.

June 8—"The Only Way," a Picture of "Safety First."

Lewis Completes Another

Mitchell Lewis' forthcoming Select picture, "Jacques of the Silver North," completes the list of three attractions which Select pictures has announced for the month of May. The production is now finished and will be distributed the latter part of the month.

Pleasing in every detail, it is believed "Jacques of the Silver North" will find particular favor with those lovers of the outdoors who delight in viewing great stretches of virgin North territory, with snows so deep that human habitations are almost buried in them.

Another Minter Feature June First

American announces that "A Bachelor's Wife," with Mary Miles Minter in the stellar role, will be released June 1.

The production is said to be one of the most ambitious recently undertaken by the "Flying A," revealing Miss Minter in a distinctly new characterization, and is said to be the strongest of all the recent features in which she has been offered.

Books Goldwyn Features

Bookings are reported increasingly active on Goldwyn's two most recent extras, "The Eternal Magdalene," by Robert H. McLaughlin, and Zane Grey's "The Border Legion." Several cities in the Northwest are claimed to have already signed up for first runs. The Goldwyn Seattle branch has reported that the Majestic Theatre, of Portland, Ore., has arranged for first runs on succeeding weeks, of "The Border Legion" and "The Eternal Magdalene."

Jesse D. Hampton presents H. B. Warner in the Robertson-Cole picture, "The Man Who Turned White," through Exhibitors Mutual

Says Morey Feature is Booked Solid

"Beating the Odds," said to be solidly booked from coast to coast, came to the screen May 12, rated as one of the best productions ever made with Harry T. Morey as the star. "The Money Maker," a popular novel, forms the foundation of "Beating the Odds." The story was written by Irving R. Allen; Paul Scardon directed it.

The new Vitagraph-Morey production deals for the most part with life in the underworld, but, on the contrary to usual treatment in screening that phase of life, is not converted into lurid melodrama. "Beating the Odds" is declared to be distinctly "different" for the reason that its types and the conditions pictured are without exaggerations.

In the cast are George Majeroni, Robert Gaillard, Eulalie Jensen, Robert Mowbray and Frank Norcross.

Chadwick Heads Pathe's May 18 Program

Pathe Program for May 18 was headed by Helene Chadwick, recently Douglas Fairbanks' leading lady, who is said to give a delightful, breezy and charmingly emotional performance in "Caleb Piper's Girl," a five-act comedy drama, produced by Astra.

"The Tiger Trap" is the title of the fifth episode of "The Tiger's Trail," in which Ruth Roland is starred, and "Before Breakfast" is the Rolin comedy, featuring Harold Lloyd, with Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard and characterized as a bit of "Hooverian hilarity haloes in hash."

Engages Conway Tearle

It was announced this week that Conway Tearle has been engaged to appear with Marion Davies in her latest feature, "April Folly," which she is making at the Biograph studio in New York. Robert Leonard is directing.

Poland Reported Successful Screen Author

"A BACHELOR'S WIFE," a Mary Miles Minter comedy-drama which the American will release June 1, is the third successive Minter vehicle written by Joseph Franklin Poland.

Mr. Poland is not on the regular authors' staff of the American but has contributed much of his recent work for the use of the "Flying A" stars. The two previous Minter subjects from the Poland pen were "The Amazing Impostor" and "The Intrusion of Isabel," each of which claims a number of box office records to its credit, and a fourth Minter-Poland production, "Yvonne from Paris," has just been completed at Santa Barbara under Emmett J. Flynn's direction.

Another new story by Mr. Poland, "The Tiger Lily," is serving as the "different" vehicle in which Margarita Fisher will be featured in a midsummer release.

At present Mr. Poland is living in Santa Barbara, where he can keep in close touch with the American studios. He is, howver, a Brooklynite by birth, and was educated at Erasmus Hall High School and Columbia University. He entered the newspaper world, but shortly transferred his activities to the still bigger world of the screen. After considerable service as a staff writer for Kalem and Vitagraph, he launched out as a free-lance and has been turning out photoplay stories of high rank ever since. He is still in his twenties.

Pathe Special Shows Aerial Warfare Scenes

PATHE NEWS continues to score in its series of air pictures and the recent special spectacle arranged by the aviators at Kelly field, San Antonio, taken exclusively by Pathe cameramen, has called forth country-wide commendation, it is stated, from both exhibitors and from airmen at all stations. This thrilling "Battle of the Clouds" reproduced vivid scenes of aerial warfare, first showing Hun planes bombing a model French town; the village in flames and the inhabitants fleeing in terror; and then the Yankee planes to the rescue, and, after a fierce battle, completely routing the foe. And in Pathe News No. 38, released May 7, the "aerial touring car" is introduced for the first time in sight-seeing over Atlantic City, excellent panorama of the resort being taken at an altitude of 2000 feet. Then as you sit in your aerial seat, you hold your breath while the plane loops the loop and then goes into a nose spin. It is all very thrilling and the camera catches every detail of it.

One of the biggest hits was made by the special which covered the parade of the 26th Division of New England. It took place on Friday afternoon, April 25. The negatives were received in New York at midnight and sixteen prints were shipped by messenger to Boston at 10 o'clock the following morning, it is said, so that they were shown in the theatres of the Hub at 5 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

J. Barnstyn Forms Some Big Plans

Contemplates Covering Europe with United States Films—Describes Continental Economic Conditions in Picture Activities

BECAUSE he plans to reach every country in Europe with his films—and because he believes that the films to accomplish this must be of American make—J. C. Barnstyn, director of the British & Continental Trading Company, with headquarters at The Hague, Holland, arrived in New York this week on "important business." In addition to his British & Continental Company duties, Mr. Barnstyn is the sole buying agent of the H. A. P. Film Company of Holland, which supplies film programs to one hundred and forty of the two hundred and twenty-five motion picture theatres in the Land of Dikes.

The H. A. P. are "renters"—what we in America would call an exchange—and the exclusive distributors of World, Triangle, Keystone, Christie Comedies and other well known American film productions in Holland. It is expected that the plans now maturing will enable Mr. Barnstyn and his associates to cover the entire Continent of Europe, exclusive of the British Isles, as thoroughly as they now do Holland.

"We will immediately extend our operations to Belgium, France, and Italy," said Mr. Barnstyn, when seen at Inter-Ocean Building, "and eventually cover the Continent with American pictures. I am here to get a close-up view of the producing conditions on this side. I shall remain on this side until middle August, when I return to The Hague, but I will be back in October for a stay of at least a year."

Mr. Barnstyn declared that while there is considerable unrest in Europe, picture conditions were good. He said that unemployment was an evil, but that it had not especially affected the cinemas, as the masses had the small admission fee for motion pictures, although they often lacked the means to attend the theatres producing legitimate attractions. Having plenty of time on their hands, the cinemas got their patronage.

When he started four and a half years ago, Mr. Barnstyn says, he rented a small building near the present one, which the firm owns outright. He had five employees, whereas today there is a staff of sixty. His first American films were purchased through Inter-Ocean, and the late Henry J. Brock, of that firm, was the first American film man with whom Mr. Barnstyn did business. Gus S. Schlesinger of Inter-Ocean, who attended to Mr. Barnstyn's first purchases, is still with Inter-Ocean and is again assisting Mr. Barnstyn in the selection of pictures from the American field.

Mr. Barnstyn is making his temporary headquarters at the Inter-Ocean Building, 218 West 42nd Street, until he finds quarters in the Manhattan film district for a permanent American buying office. He is residing at the Hotel Astor.

Jess Willard Feature Ready In Few Weeks

JESS Willard, champion heavyweight boxer of the world and star of "The Challenge of Chance," which the Continental Pictures Corporation is making, will come to the screen in a few weeks as a widely advertised individual.

It is estimated that several millions of dollars will be spent by the newspapers of the country during the next two months in providing news of him to their readers.

Every newspaper of consequence, every press agency and news syndicate is now engaged in a campaign of publicity concerning the champion, and one paper alone announced recently, it is said, that it had already laid plans to spend $25,000 for obtaining training camp news and pictures of the champion and his challenger. Many others will spend as much and more, it is thought.

As indicating the interest that has been aroused in the champion, there was one of the greatest bidding contests in the history of sports and entertainment on the part of cities seeking to be chosen as the site of the battle on July 4th.

Willard, in this production, which marks his advent among film stars, does not appear as a prize fighter, but it is promised that the champion will be seen in some of the most sensational rough and tumble fighting that the most ardent admirer of fisticuffs could wish to see. It is claimed for Willard that he is a real "find" for the screen, a new type of star, and that he not only screens well, but also is a good actor. This being so, his coming release will be awaited with interest by everyone interested in motion pictures, whether in or out of the industry.

Willard is said to be very seriously interested in his motion picture work, more interested in its future than the ring, in fact, so that the "Challenge of Chance," which is to be a seven reel special feature, probably will be the vehicle by which a real star, known the world over, will be brought out.

To Exploit Gale Henry and Billie West Comedies

Milton L. Cohen, president of Bulls Eye Film Corporation, producers of the Billie West comedies, and distributors of the Gale Henry comedies, announces that James L. Mendelson, special representative, will start on a trip that will mbrace the entire United States.

Mr. Mendelson is one of the youngest men in the film industry, and for several years has specialized in the intricate policies of state right distribution as well as production, and wherever he goes he will bring to exchange men handling these brands and to exhibitors showing them the direct contact with the main office that is deemed essential to increased activity and successful exploitation.

Bacon Busy on First Film

Gerald F. Bacon, who recently organized his own producing company, releasing through Independent Sales Corporation and the Film Clearing House, Inc., announces that he will commence work on the first of the series of eighteen productions to be made, next week. Mr. Bacon will occupy the Bacon-Backer studio following Charles Miller who is now completing the first of the Miller features.

Mr. Bacon received the finished scenario for his first feature from Basil Dickey, this week. Mr. Dickey wrote the continuity from Max Marcin's play, "Substitute Prisoner," re-titled "At Sunrise." Oliver D. Bailey will direct the production. He is now casting for the first picture and will announce the cast next week.

"White Heather" Scores

Maurice Tourneur's latest production, "The White Heather," had its premiere at the Rialto theatre in New York, offered with a special musical arrangement by Hugo Riesenfeld. "The White Heather" scored a remarkable success. The New York critics received it with uniformly enthusiastic comments.

A. L. Shakman Values All Educational Films

Managing Director A. L. Shakman, of the 81st Street Theatre, on upper Broadway, New York City, is one of the oldest customers on the books of the Educational Film Corporation's New York exchange. He has used practically every release in their vaults, and is constantly clamoring for more.

Mr. Shakman combines the single-reels with his vaudeville and picture program, defying all precedent by listing the subjects under heading "Educational Studies," which is declared to be about the most reckless manner possible of billing entertaining material.

Rothapfel Unit Proves Successful

So Says Exhibitor on Showing His Program to Large Audience of Critics and Public

SAMUEL L. Rothapfel's premiere showing of his first Unit Programme was pronounced a big success by the packed house which viewed it at the Rialto Theatre May 9. Expressions of favorable opinion are said to have come from all sources—the public, the trade and daily press, social, civic and dramatic organizations; dramatic and screen critics, exhibitors and producers. From nearly every source, Mr. Rothapfel, the producer and Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, which is handling the distribution of the Rothapfel Unit, have received congratulations from representative men and women on the artistry and dramatic novelty represented in the premiere of this programme. More than two thousand are said to have attended the opening at the Rialto Theatre in the morning, and more than three hundred came as Mr. Rothapfel's guests to the Hotel Astor at night, and without exception the opinion was expressed that the first Rothapfel Unit Programme was all that was expected. Immediately following the showing of the programme, the twenty-odd dramatic and screen critics representing the most prominent and widely read daily papers in the country, wired their editors a brief outline of the programme and their criticisms, and all were of the opinion, it is stated, that the Rothapfel Unit Programme represents entertainment that satisfies every demand of exhibior and public.

Among the expressions of opinion on Mr. Rothapfel's first Unit Programme are the following:

H. M. Thomas, general manager, Rialto Theatre, Omaha, Neb. "As Mr. Rothapfel is a pioneer in modern photoplay presentation, so he is the pathfinder in a new idea in motion pictures—that of the Unit Programme. I have just reviewed the opening Programme at the Rialto Theatre, and I must say that I was agreeably pleased with every detail. Mr. Rothapfel deserves the credit of the entire industry, and I personally wish to congratulate him. I think it is up to the exhibitors of the United States to show their earnest appreciation of Mr. Rothapfel's efforts by booking his Programme, which will certainly add class and prestige to any theatre showing it."

Charles A. Goldreyer, owner of the Concourse, University and Fordham theatres, N. Y. C. wrote: "Without bias I can state that I believe that in offering the Rothapfel Unit to the patrons of my theatres, I am giving them the height of motion picture entertainment."

Eva E. Keleher, "Lottie Lee" of the Cleveland News-Leader, said: "If I could write flowery language my words concerning the Rothapfel Unit Programme would be an ever-blooming tree. I personally think it a splendid programme; is artistic; includes everything that has been done and much that should have been done a long time ago."

The speakers at the banquet and reception given by Mr. Rothapfel and Frank G. Hall at Hotel Astor on Friday evening were: Ashbel P. Fitch, president Film Finance Corporation, toastmaster; Samuel L. Rothapfel, Frank G. Hall, Major T. C. Sterrett, U. S. Marine Corps; Col. A. S. McLemore, U. S. Marines; Mr. W. A. Johnson, editor Motion Picture News; Mr. E. Lloyd Sheldon, Mr. T. E. Oliphant, dramatic editor Evening Mail; J. A. Quinn, managing editor Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, Cal.; William Brant, president Brooklyn Motion Picture Exhibitors League; Louella O. Parsons, motion picture editor Morning Telegraph; Frank Morris, writer; Col. Howard Borden, S. Jay Kaufman, N. Y. Globe; Leslie Mason, publisher of Trade Review; George Blaisdell, editor Moving Picture World.

Reports Big Success for "Romance of the Air"

Reports coming to Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, handling the distribution of "A Romance Of The Air," starring Edith Day and Lieut. Bert Hall, American Ace, through the exchanges of the Film Clearing House, indicates that this aerial attraction is meeting with big success through the Middle West and on the Coast.

An added attraction in the presentation of this feature in these territories, is the personal appearance of Lieut. Hall in the larger cities.

Showing a Part of the Crowd Which Lined Up Before the Kinema Theatre in Los Angeles to Gain Admission to "The Unpardonable Sin," Garson-Neilan Production

Declares "Mickey" Consistent Profit Maker

As predicted by W. H. Production Company, "Mickey" is being reported as one of the best box office attractions and the most consistent profit-making features that has ever been released, and this fact is said to be borne out particularly by exhibitors who have shown the picture not only once but over and over again, they particularly claiming that it is among the most profitable repeat photoplays that is shown in the motion picture theatre.

Sam Ackerman, manager of the East Side Theatre, Detroit, Michigan, made the following statement in a letter addressed to Mr. Joe Horwitz, exhibitor for Michigan:

"I wish to state that although I have been in the show business for nine years, I have never played to such crowds as I have while showing 'Mickey.' I played 'Mickey' after all the theatres on Gratiot Avenue, and I could not control the crowds. It took five policemen to try to keep them in line. It is, without doubt, the greatest drawing crowd that I have ever had at my house."

Sidney Lust, who controls the rights to Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia, stated that in Baltimore at the Parkway Theatre, "Mickey" played to approximately 40,000 people on a six days' showing. At the Strand, which was the next house to show "Mickey," they also played a six days' engagement and the records at this house were smashed to smitherines, and in Washington, "Mickey" is repeating in all of the theatres that have already played it regardless of the number of days the first engagement consisted of in the way of a run.

Calvert Feature Has Carefully Selected Cast

Under the direction of R. William Neill, Catherine Calvert is nearing the completion of her picture, "The Career of Katherine Bush," at the Fifty-Sixth Street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. This is the photoplay adaptation of Elinor Glyn's sentimental novel of the same name, the scenario having been written by Catherine Stuart.

Seldom, if ever before, has such exacting discrimination been exercised, it is declared, in the selection of a cast as for this production. In fact, the picture had been under way for nearly ten days and practically all the minor scenes had been filmed before Miss Calvert's leading man had been finally selected. After much careful consideration John Goldsworthy was finally engaged to play the leading male role in Miss Calvert's support, that of Lord Algernon Fitz-Rufus. Mr. Goldsworthy, a graduate of the English stage, is one of the best known juveniles on the stage or screen.

Other members of the cast are Craufurd Kent, who plays Lord Gerard Strobridge; Mathilda Brundage, who plays Lady Garribardine; Helen Montrose, Ann Dearing, Augusta Anderson, Claire Whitney, Norah Reed, Albert Hackett, Earl Lockwood, Walter Smith, Robert Minot, Edith Pierce, Allen Simpson and Fred Burton.

Billie Burke has a good start in her new Paramount picture adapted from the stage play, "Billeted," which is being produced under the direction of John S. Robertson at Fifty-sixth Street. Frank Walton is again assisting Mr. Robertson in the directing.

Irene Castle's big special production of Robert W. Chambers' "The Firing Line" is nearly completed under the direction of Charles Maigne.

Jenks Returns to Europe

Harry Maze Jenks, the proprietor of Harma Film, returned to Europe by the Aquitania, very well satisfied with his visit.

His chief technical adviser, Mr. Henry Howse remains in New York, as General Manager for the time being, to carry on the business of Harma Productions, Inc., and has secured offices at 46 West 24th Street.

Mr. Henry Howse has had a long career in the trade.

Arrangements are being made to strengthen Harma's European organization, by engaging well-known American artists, it is said also one, if not more front rank American Directors who will proceed to Europe as soon as possible.

Arrow Reports Continued Success in Field

The Arrow Film Corporation reports continued activity in the state right market. Since this firm has moved into its new office business has shown a decided increase. Mitchell Lewis' latest picture, "Fools' Gold," which co-stars Florence Turner, and a strong cast as well, has been selling rapidly. There is some territory still open on this splendid subject, but most of the territory has been sold.

Florence Turner returns to the screen in "Fools' Gold," and is as charming as ever. This is a picture of the great Northwest, and it is said that the scenery and photography is unexcelled.

"The Masked Rider," the fifteen episode Western serial handled by Arrow is also selling fast. This serial stars such well-known players as Ruth Stonehouse, Paul Panzer and Harry C. Myers. William Steiner produced this serial, and the location was a little near San Antonio, Texas, where the scenery is well suited for this kind of a picture.

Radin of Tyrad Plans Trade Tour of Country

Matthias Radin, president and general manager of Tyrad Pictures, Inc., of 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, is completing plans for a business trip which will include the principal cities of the United States and Canada. He expects to leave New York City next week.

The trip is in the interests of "And the Children Pay," "Your Wife And Mine," and "Passions of Men," three five-reel productions which Tyrad is state righting at this time. Radin's plan is to give elaborate showings of his subjects to the trade in various cities included in his itinerary. He will devote his efforts mainly to "Passions of Men," starring Lottie Tilford, which is his firm's latest acquisition.

Outing-Chester Film Shows Wild Haytian Dances

H. D. Ashton, Outing-Chester cameraman, returned Monday from a three months expedition into Hayti, where in order to film one of the prohibited voodoo dances he was compelled to join in the wild gambol himself, and steal off to crank his machine whenever the fun got so fast and furious that his disappearance was not noticed it is declared.

Among other things he had to drink goat's blood as it spouted from the slashed jugular of the sacrifice. Finally he was made a high priest, and given some authority, which he utilized in filming the altar, the gifts, and particularly the dance.

There are only three of the old voodoo drums left on the island, and one of these Ashton brought back with him. It will be presented to the American Museum of Natural History later, but will for some time be displayed by first-run houses during the week they have the voodoo dance release.

Gaumont Camera Man Has Thrilling Voyage

Cameraman A. E. Gold, of the Gaumont Company, reports a thrilling voyage from New York to Trepassey Bay, Newfoundland, on the U. S. S. "Prairie."

The "Prairie" left New York several days ahead of the start of the N-C's from Rockaway Point, so that it would be at Trepassey Bay, the second stage of the trans-Atlantic journey, when the aircraft arrived. The run from New York to Newfoundland took four days, through heavy, rolling seas.

Pearl White Writes

Pearl White, Pathe serial star in "In Secret," has written a book called "My Struggle for Fame," it was announced this week.

The book is expected to be published immediately.

Capital Produces and Also Distributes

It was announced from Chicago this week that the new arrangements that have been practically completed by the Capital Film Company will introduce them to the exhibitors of the country as a producing as well as a distributing organization.

The new plans which are being crystallized by Mr. C. Eddy Eckels co-operating with Mr. S. L. Barnhard will mean the producing by the Capital Film Company of many new two reel pictures of character made from the best stories by well known authors, with the punch in them that will insure box office drawing strength, and enable the managers of theatres throughout the country to furnish their clientele with the clean, snappy, up to the minute program which entertains and obviates the necessity of sitting through five or six reels of "WATERED STOCK" to get the meat of a plot that could be told in a single reel. This does not mean that the Capital Film Company contemplate an immediate discontinuing of distributing the re-issues of worth while pictures of the past, but a step forward to fill the crying need of the exhibitor for two-reel subjects that will enable him to conscientiously present to a discriminating public a well balanced program. When the Capital Film Company's new wires are properly installed, and the current turned on, it is figured that the instantaneous illumination will be so bright "that he who runs may read" the sign which will spell the end of the exhibitors booking trials and tribulations and give to this organization a vote of thanks from both manager and public. For reinstating the Keystone of the industries arch of success (crisp short subjects) which had been temporarily removed by over ambitious producers of large super productions, the correct translation of which would mean "Footage Only."

Bockliss Secures Rights on Swain Comedies

Without screening a production, and without seeing as much as a photograph, it is said, Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., negotiated a contract with Jesse J. Goldburg, general manager of Frohman Amusement Corporation whereby the entire foreign rights on the Mack Swain comedies were secured by Mr. Garrett. This is possibly the first instance where a transaction involving twenty-six productions was closed in advance of the showing of even the first attractions, but Mr. Garrett states that the reputation of Mack Swain is such as to justify this.

Negotiations are also pending between the Frohman Amusement Corporation and Mr. Garrett for the acquisition of the Texas Guinan two-reel Westerns.

Says "Unknown Quantity" Proves a Bonanza

"The Unknown Quantity," Corinne Griffith's current release, is said to be proving a bonanza among Vitagraph offerings of the past weeks. Much new business has been written on the score of this graphic picturization of a story by O. Henry. It is, in fact, as human a document on the screen as the story proved to be.

Miss Griffith is supported by Huntley Gordon, Frederick Buckley, Harry Davenport, Jack Ridgeway and Jack McLean. The picture was directed by Tom Mills.

Shallenberger Returns

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation has returned to New York from a western trip, a combination business and pleasure trip. Shallenberger finds the west in a highly prosperous condition and the picture business in a particularly flourishing condition.

"There is considerable talk on the subject of the open booking and exchanges everywhere are considerably exercised over the contemplated actions of the various film concerns who have announced a change of system," said Mr. Shallenberger.

Fitz-Gerald Completes First of New Series

CISSY FITZ-GERALD, whose film and dramatic career is said to have encompassed the globe, is producing a new series of comedies under her own engagement. The picture will be known as the "Cissy and Bertie" series. The first of the comedies has been completed and the others are in a stage of development, which promises an early release.

Miss Fitz-Gerald is best known in filmland for her two years of work with Vitagraph, appearing under that management as the lead character in "The Winsome Widow," "How Cissy Made Good," "The Accomplished Mrs. Thompson," "Cissy's Innocent Wink" and "Curing Cissy." Her earlier dramatic efforts were directed by Charles Frohman and she became a favorite in America as well as in Australia, India and China.

The first release of the new series, "Cissy's Funnymoon," will introduce two new characters of American domestic life, "Cissy and Bertie." The succeeding films will carry the pair through the various farcical situations created by "Cissy's" firmness of rule and "Bertie's" ingenuous faculty of doing the wrong thing in the right place. The new comedies were written by Mildred Considine, who is now said to be working on a play for Mary Pickford. The cast includes Joseph Kerr, Beverly Byrd, Leonard Mellin, Gertrude McKenna, Ralph Johnson and Victor Beecraft. Edwin Middleton is director. The films are being produced in the Chicago studios of the Rothacker Film Company, which is co-operating with Miss Fitz-Gerald's company.

Katterjohn to Produce Four Special Features

ALMOST a year ago Monte M. Katterjohn, noted as an author of virile film dramas, announced the formation of his own producing organization to make a series of four special pictures of greater than program merit.

This week it is stated that the long period of preparatory thought and labor is drawing to a close, and that actual production of the first picture will soon be undertaken.

"In preparing this first production," said Mr. Katterjohn, "I realized that it would unfailingly be regarded as a criterion for my future efforts. I knew that to secure the confidence and support of the exhibitors of the country, my initial production must furnish convincing proof of my ability to create pictures—stories of unusual entertainment qualities—a success not only from the box office standpoint, but also from the standpoint of the critical public.

"I have exercised the utmost care in laying out the production. The scenario continuity has been written and re-written many times, and in each of its six hundred script scenes, the utmost detail of action has been thoroughly outlined.

"To the many who have expressed interest in my forthcoming productions, I am glad to report that my expectations for ideal producing conditions have been more than fulfilled, and that my faith in the financial success of my pictures has increased tenfold. The exhibitor, to whom these productions are dedicated, shall be the judge."

Purchases Foreign Rights to Calvert Features

Bech, Van Siclen and Company, Inc., have purchased the foreign rights to four pictures with Catherine Calvert, who has been engaged recently by the Famous Players, as a star.

The pictures acquired are "Marriage," "Out of the Night," "Marriage for Convenience," "Romance of the Underworld."

Houdini Serial Plays Pantages' Circuit

Though they have never played Houdini in person, the Pantages circuit of vaudeville theatres in the West will have Houdini as an attraction through the medium of the screen. Joseph J. Goodstein, the head of the Arrow Photoplay Company, Denver, announces that he has booked Houdini in B. A. Rolfe's super serial, "The Master Mystery," in the Empress Theatre, Denver, one of the Pantages houses, for a fifteen weeks' run, beginning May 12. "The Master Mystery" will be run in connection with the Empress' regular vaudeville bill, each episode being played for a week.

Mr. Goodstein controls the distributing rights to the Houdini serial in Colorado, Wyomind, New Mexico, Utah and Southern Idaho.

Sill Joins Company in Seattle

It was announced from Seattle, Wash., this week that J. C. Sill, who has been photographer for Robert C. Bruce scenic films through Educational Films, has joined the Adventure Pictures Company, recently formed in Seattle, for the purpose of producing and marketing adventure scenic pictures.

Other members of the Adventures company, as announced from Seattle, are Jack Rantz, an exhibitor, who will be president, and H. H. Brownell, formerly manager of Mutual branch. Mr. Brownell, it is understood, will be general manager of Adventure.

Bloxbe to Produce

The Bloxbe Film Corporation announces that it is going to make twenty-eight comedies of a very unique idea. Six episodes have already been filmed it is reported and will be ready for the release within a short time.

The direction of the pictures will be handled by Philip Van Loan. Associated with him will be Fred Bezerril.

Film Stock Outside the Theatre

ON this page in the May 17th issue we discussed the question of the risks involved in the use of inflammable film stock as they exist today in Motion Picture Theatres throughout the country and also the risks involved in the handling of this stock in exchanges.

We now come to the third classification, namely, the risks and protective measures necessary to show motion pictures in the home, school, Y. M. C. A. and other semi-public gatherings.

The consideration of this subject is of the greatest possible importance, as this field is increasing every day and the demand for pictures for educational and instructional purposes is growing rapidly.

This field is one which is not protected by laws and regulations such as protects the theatre. There is no general regulation or law requiring that a fireproof booth be used, such as is necessary for theatres. People in general do not realize the great danger and risk which they are running when they show film printed on inflammable stock in their homes, in the schools, or any other semi-public meeting place.

This, however, is being done every day by people who, if they realized what they were doing, would certainly give up the practice. The general statement might be made that any motion picture machine of any make or model is unsafe when used with inflammable film outside of a fireproof booth.

The statement has been made that the greatest danger is during the time of handling the film when it is not actually in the projector. This is true but just as a chain is no stronger than its weakest link, so the safety involved in the showing of motion pictures is no greater than the most dangerous element which enters into the process of showing. Therefore, if motion picture film is dangerous while being put in or taken out of the projector, the entire mechanism should be located in a fireproof enclosure while this process is going on. Then, should the projector be proven to be absolutely safe it can, after being loaded with the film be moved out into the auditorium, providing, of course, this will enhance its usefulness, and be of added value by so doing.

As a rule a projection equipment is purchased by an absolute novice who knows nothing about the electric control devices which he is using, about the mechanics of the projector, and in fact is absolutely ignorant of the entire outfit, except for the knowledge which he has derived from the instruction book or catalogue of the manufacturer. He knows nothing of the dangers involved and smoking, as a general rule, is allowed, near the projector, while the reels of film are being changed, or while they are not in use and are lying about absolutely unprotected in the open. The saying is that Providence protects babies and those intoxicated. To this should be added the amateur operator of a motion picture projector, for thus far we have had but few accidents.

Since this condition exists in the use of a professional projector, how much more does it apply to the portable type. Even a 900 watt lamp or less is a dangerous light source, as the heat which it generates will ignite inflammable film within a very short space of time if the rays of light are allowed to be concentrated on the film while not in motion.

The man who buys one of these miniature projectors, built for the "professional standard," and who feels that he can take it home and use it indiscriminately, obtaining his film from any exchange where he can secure a subject which he desires, is not doing himself justice, and is subjecting his family to risk for which he should be held criminally liable. The mere fact that this film is made on inflammable stock regardless of the safeness of the machine condemns the entire outfit unless properly protected. If non-inflammable film is used in this machine the danger is eliminated, but this is not often done. There is very little non-inflammable film used today in the "professional standard" width, and if there were, people in general would "take the chance" and use inflammable stock because it is cheaper to rent and easier to get.

There is absolutely no need, as we stated last week, of forcing this non-inflammable stock upon the theatre interests, for they do not need it, do not want it, and should not be made to use it. Those interested in private or semi-public motion picture showings should, however, be forced to conduct them in a manner which is absolutely safe.

This may be done in two ways:

First, make it a criminal act, subject to imprisonment and fine, to show motion pictures without a booth when inflammable stock is used.

Second, set up some standard which is protected, or guarded, so that the general public will not obtain anything but positive prints made on burning stock.

Over a year ago the Society of Motion Picture Engineers set up what is known as a "safety standard," which is a narrow width film specially perforated and designed for use on miniature projectors. The particular perforation laid down is not patented. This is a weakness of the standard.

There are today several concerns using this standard, or planning to do so. They are compiling libraries of film on instructional subjects as well as purely entertainment films—the latter printed from negatives controlled by the large film companies of the country which have been already exhibited in the theatres throughout the country.

These positives are printed from the same negatives as are used in printing film in the "professional standard," merely being reduced by an optical printing process. The "safety standard" can therefore be printed from any negative made on the "professional standard".

With film produced in this "safety standard" runs a label which states that it has been printed on non-inflammable stock. The rental charge for this film as compared with the "professional standard" is very small and only companies making a specialty of supplying this demand can afford to handle prints on this "safety standard."

It was stated some time ago that the easiest way of fighting this "safety standard" and forcing it into disrepute would be, when the demand for this film became great enough for some one to flood the market with inflammable film in this size to be given away which would cause immediate action on the part of the fire authorities throughout the country. Any man who would do this should be put on trial and given a prison sentence. He could not be too strongly condemned.

This new "safety standard" may not be as well protected as we might wish, yet when it is thoroughly established we believe that public opinion will be so strong against an action of this kind that a man will think twice before he prints a picture on inflammable stock in this standard.

The same thing applies to the traveling salesman as applied to the man who shows film privately. Should he show a picture on inflammable film to a prospective customer without a booth he should be criminally prosecuted, for the danger here is just as great as the danger in any semi-public gathering.

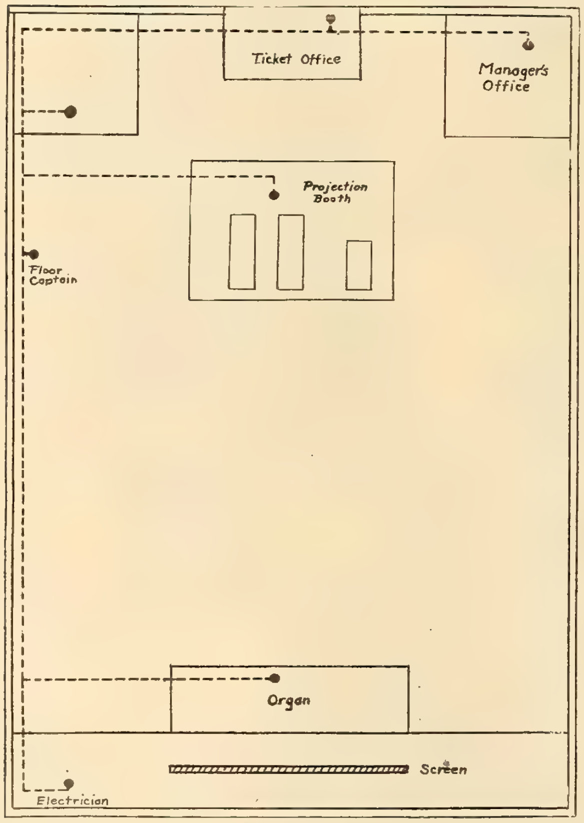
The Use of Inter-Communicating Telephones in Motion Picture Theatres

By R. T. Pierson—Sales Engineer. Stromberg-Carlson Tel. Mfg. Company.

INTER-COMMUNICATING telephones are to-day installed in all business establishments which are conducted along efficient and economical lines. The thought, however, may not occur to you how Inter-Communicating telephones can be adapted to the needs of Motion Picture Theatres.

Let us then consider the tactical points in a Moving Picture Theatre, or, in other words, the points or locations which for the successful operation of the theatre must be kept in close touch with the executive head of the organization:

House Manager's Office
Box Office
Operating Booth
Main Floor Captain
Balcony Floor Captain
Orchestra Pit
Music Room
Electrician
Doorman



Drawing showing pocitions of different stations in an inter-communicating telephone system as would be installed in a medium sized theatre

Now take into consideration some of the advantages that accrue in the management if an Inter-Communicating telephone is installed at each of the above locations in the Theatre. The Theatre is crowded; in other words, every available seat is occupied, and, of course, fire laws in the most instances prevent standing. The Manager first telephones the Box Office to stop selling tickets. Then possibly, he notices a number of people leaving by exits and telephones the Main Floor Captain and the Balcony Captain requesting the number of vacant seats on the Main Floor and Balcony. He receives his answer immediately, and in turn advises the Box Office and the Doorman, the number of people to be admitted to the unoccupied seats. It is immediately seen that 100 per cent efficiency is gained in the seating capacity of the theatre without the loss of time, where if it was necessary for the House Manager or some employee to make this investigation by personal observation, and return to the Box Office with the information considerable time would elapse.

Again the theatre is crowded, and the House Manager notices that there is a large crowd outside awaiting admittance—so he immediately telephones the operator, ordering him to abandon all special features, and only run the feature films. This, of course, is giving especially good service to the patrons of the theatre without any loss of time. The larger majority of the people in the theatre and those waiting for admittance have been attracted by and are interested in the feature film.

It is a common occurrence to receive a telephone call at the Box Office for a certain Doctor, or any other person who is known to be in the theatre. In such cases it is only necessary for the Box Office or House Manager to telephone the operator to run a slide at the end of the reel then showing to inform the desired person that their presence is required at the Box or House Manager's Office.

The House Manager for some reason wishes to change the music either during the period the Orchestra is playing or when the majority of the members of the Orchestra are in the Music Room. In this case it is only necessary for him to telephone the leader in either the Orchestra Pit or the Music Room and give what orders he deems advisable.

Although there are usually duplicate projecting machines in the Operating Room, many occasions arise when it is essential that the operator get in touch with the electrician immediately, and the use of a telephone in this instance is absolutely indispensable.

If the House Manager wishes to change the electrical effects in the theatre or outside of the building during the period that the show is in progress or if something has gone wrong with the lighting system, it is only necessary for the House Manager to telephone the Electrician, and have such changes or repairs as are required made promptly.

To the House Manager will naturally arise many other thoughts of situations in which he and his employees can use an Inter-Communicating system.

if you use WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMPS for Motion Picture Projection.

The 900-Watt lamp is recommended for general motion picture theatre service, and will give satisfactory service for throws up to 100 feet on a 12-foot x 16-foot screen.

The 600-Watt lamp is for use where there are shorter throws and smaller screens, as in churches, lodges, colleges, and other places. It is particularly adapted for use on rural lighting outfits where the power supply is limited.

The advantages outlined in the preceding paragraphs only cover the period the theatre is open to the public, but there are just as many advantages to be derived from the house telephone system during the period before and after the theatre is open to the public.

The above outline covers the number of stations required in the larger theatres, but the manager of a smaller theatre will find that he can manage his theatre on a more efficient and economical basis if he, too, will install an Inter-Communicating telephone system, using possibly a fewer number of stations at locations which he deems advisable, which will naturally be suggested to him after looking at the above list as used in the larger theatres.

The type of system generally recommended to be installed to give this service is commonly known as a "selective ringing common talking, Inter-Communicating telephone system," and derives its name from the fact that each telephone in the system is equipped with a number of push buttons for signalling the other stations selectively. By depressing the button marked with the name or number of the station wanted, the bell of that station is rung. No other station in the system will be signalled but the one desired, and as a consequence each station may call and talk with any other without interfering with the remaining stations. Any or all stations may be called in rapid succession for the purpose of giving general instructions or conversations involving the attention of these responding to the general call.

The words "common-talking" are derived from the fact that all conversations are carried by means of a single pair of talking circuit wires which are common to all stations.

Figures 1, 2 and 3 illustrate the desk, wall and combination telephone which are used in this system. They are furnished in two standard sizes—six and eleven stations. If a smaller number of stations are required a partial equipment may be purchased for immediate operation and additional apparatus installed at any future time if required.

These instruments include in their equipment standard long-distance type transmitters, receivers and all associated minor apparatus, 5 or 10 single contact push buttons as required by the size of the system are connected in the telephone or mounted on separate push button blocks for ringing the other telephones connected to the system.

It will be found that the Combination Telephone as shown in Figure 3 will be the most suitable and convenient for use in Motion Picture Theatres especially for use in the Box Office, Operating Booth and Orchestra Pit. This is due principally to the fact that the transmitter and receiver are contained in one piece, so that it is possible to carry on a conversation, leaving one hand entirely free for other work, which may be necessary to perform while carrying on this conversation.

The cables for making connections between stations are made up with a waxed core containing two pairs of No. 18 B & S Gauge conductors, and the balance of No. 22 B & S Gauge single conductors depending upon the size of the system.

Two types of cables are furnished—one with the tightly woven exterior braid, the other with a lead sheath. The lead cable costs more than the braided covered type, but has the advantage that humid atmosphere, leaky pipes and condensing steam and vapor have no effect upon it. Of course, when rightly installed the lead covered cable is always good unless the sheath is broken by abrasion. On the other hand, braided covered cable is cheaper and easier to handle, and will give perfect satisfaction under certain conditions, but it must be remembered that braided cable will not stand moisture, and that cable which has absorbed moisture is absolutely useless for telephone purposes.

One centrally located set of about six cells of dry batteries is required to supply both talking and ringing current for this type of system. The exact number of cells required, of course, depends upon the length of the line. These dry batteries should last under normal conditions for a period of at least a year, so that the maintenance in such a system when once properly installed amounts only to approximately $3.00 per year. This, of course, is not counting the depreciation on the system, but when it is figured that such a system using a good quality of apparatus properly installed should last for at least 15 to 20 years the depreciation is a small item.

To insure satisfactory and continuous service of Inter-Communicating telephone systems, the apparatus and material should be carefully selected, but the importance of having the proper installation work done cannot be too strongly emphasized. No matter how excellent the apparatus may be there will be constant operating trouble and expense for repairing unless the installation is made in a thoroughly workmanlike manner with connections properly and securely made.

Extra-lite Shutter Tested and Approved

THE Projection Department has received many inquiries concerning the merits of the so-called "Extra-lite" shutter manufactured by the Precision Machine Company. Not having witnessed a demonstration up to the present time, the editor has answered such inquiries as satisfactorily as he could by making use of what has been written and claimed for the device. A few days ago, however, the Precision Machine Company ran a special test in order that a conclusive report might be made in this department. Readers may now consider the results of this test as an authoritative report on this lately developed shutter.

For the benefit of those who have not made themselves familiar with the new shutter, a few words of description will be given. The Extra-lite shutter is constructed with the same proportioned blades as the standard Simplex shutter but instead of being made of solid opaque material, the blades consist of two layers of perforated wire cloth between which is placed a secret "filler." This material called the "filler" performs a most important function which will be described later.

In order to show how completely the procedure was carried out the test will be described in detail. Two similar machines were mechanically connected so as to turn at the same speed. Two prints of the same negative were run through the two machines and timed to bring the same two scenes before the aperture simultaneously; and lastly two incandescent lamps of the same rating were used for the illuminants. Two six foot pictures were projected side by side on a white muslin screen at 60 feet.

The two machines were started. In a few seconds after comparing both titles and scenery it was not a difficult task at all to select the better picture. In each case that we selected the better picture, we were informed that we had picked the picture projected on the machine with the Extra-lite shutter. There was no doubt at any time in the minds of those present regarding the comparative quality of the two pictures. One was the usual 'very good' picture seen at the better houses. The other possessed an indefinable something which might be called "snap" but which was probably better definition due to the presence of a greater quantity of screen illumination.

The next test was the one which every purchaser of an Extra-lite shutter may carry out if he so wishes. It consisted of closing up the open segments in the shutter with black cardboard and projecting the picture through the perforations alone. The object of this test was to demonstrate the quantity of light which passes through the material of which the shutter is made. This quantity is really considerable. At 60 feet we were just able to read titles which is a much more difficult feat in any film than viewing scenery. After this test we would estimate that the makers' claims in percentage increase of light are justified. With every shutter sent out there is furnished the necessary pasteboard closures to allow projectionists to run this test themselves.

The next test was a searching one and would have brought out any flaws existing in the operating of the shutter. Instead of running a standard exposed film through the machine, its place was taken by a strip of film stock on which at regular intervals pairs

SWAAB'S SUPERLITE SCREEN

Is a perfect Silver Screen and will not oxidize; remains bright and Silvery and can be cleaned easily and quickly. Swaab's Superlite Silver Screen now in use in the Stanley and other large representative theatres in this and other cities. Price is 75¢ per square foot. An additional charge is made for the Special Stretcher Frame, according to size, the average extra cost is $30.00. You are not obliged to buy the frame.

NEW SPEER CARBONS

now ready and far superior in quality and screen results to any carbons thus far produced.

SWAAB'S MOTORS

for Power 6A and 6B are pleasing their users—not a single one has fallen down or been returned. They are sold for $37.50 and $40.00 respectively and are complete absolutely. Dealers do not recommend our Motor Equipments because they cannot make anything on them. We have priced them so that the Exhibitor gets the best price regardless of the Dealer. WE ARE EXCLUSIVE DISTRIBUTORS OF THE SIMPLEX MACHINE. We repair all makes of machines and sell all supplies. Your old machines taken in trade for SIMPLEX.

Mr. Projectionist:

On account of unavoidable manufacturing delays, it will be two or three weeks before we can get a supply of Boylan Even Tension Reels into the hands of the Distributors.

Please be patient. You will feel well repaid when you finally get the reel and observe the light even tension on the film, so light that it cannot wear the lower sprocket or the sprocket holes. You will be amazed at its operation.

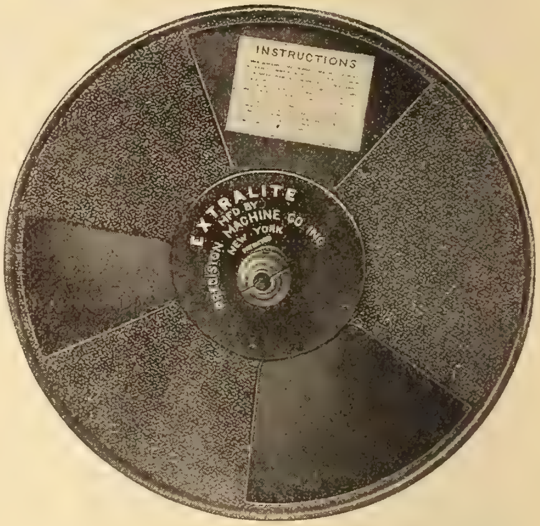
of circular holes had been accurately punched. For all purposes this film produced a screen image of pure black and white, hence there was the greatest opportunity for the picture to show "travel ghost" if such a defect existed. We can say, however, that at a few feet from the screen itself, not a trace of travel ghost could be distinguished.

These tests are convincing proof that the shutter is a distinct addition to projection room equipment and that moreover it will prove to be a current saver of really commendable proportion. If a sufficiently brilliant picture is now being projected with the usual shutter an equally brilliant picture may be thrown on the same screen through an Extra-lite shutter with 10-20% less current. This latter fact rather than an increase in brilliancy, should interest the exhibitor who is paying the current bill.

No attempt has been as yet made by either the manufacturer or others to explain the action of this shutter by the theory of optics. The final test and the best test is the human eye itself, which in this particular instance as we have shown, is much better satisfied by a picture projected with an Extra-lite shutter.

Some of those who have studied the Extra-lite shutter have wondered if the sides of the perforations would not catch and reflect the light, producing halation on the edges of the screen and even going so far as to throw light about the theatre. Fortunately the "filler" which is used solves this problem so successfully that not a bit of halation or vagrant light can be discovered.



By examining the cut closely it will be noticed that on the two flicker blades there is a narrow sector which is not treated with the "filler." The width of this sector is slightly less than the diameter of the beam of light at the point of intersection. By allowing an unimpeded travel across the flicker blades that portion of the light ray is let through which is of the greatest value in illuminating the screen, and this added quantity more than makes up for any grayness (which may be present but is not distinguishable by the eye) produced by the movement of the film during the inter-position of the cut-off blade.

In conclusion it can be said that: The Extra-lite shutter is a decided improvement over the usual type of shutter inasmuch as its use will permit of better projection in houses where insufficient screen lighting is now being secured, and more efficient projection in theatres using abnormal amperage for the results being obtained. Moreover, the Extra-lite shutter will not produce travel ghost any more quickly than the opaque shutter which is not at all when adjustments are correctly made. There is no perceptible graying of the tones in the picture nor is there produced vagrant light to cause waste and detract from the picture on the screen. The Precision Machine Co. is now making the Extra-lite shutter a part of every machine leaving the factory and their faith in the shutter seems to be substantiated by the results of the above demonstrations.

Theatres Worth While on Page 3459

Letter from Iowa, and the Reply to It

Robert F. Smith, Hospers, Iowa:

Enclosed please find three good reasons for more members in the N. A. M. L. I cut them out of Episode One of "The Lightning Raider." They should be sent to the museum.

In the April 12 issue of the News you inquired concerning the name of the operator at the theatre I spoke of. I am sorry to say that I do not know his name but if I ever see him personally I will try to convince him to join the N. A. M. L. If we round up all of those fellows there won't be any more punch holes or splices (?) like the enclosed.

Please forward some more stickers. I used up those you sent a while ago. I have never received a film with a sticker on, but I suppose the exchange removes them. By the way, what is the best way to apply the sticker? I put them on the side of each reel but when they're re-wound at the exchange the sticker doesn't follow the film. As it is, I never know whether or not a film has been inspected by a League member (although by the condition of some of the films I receive no League man ever saw them). I often spend four hours getting a two-hour show in decent running condition If it made any better show I'm willing to work six. I cut out all of the misframes as I inspect them on the rewind, and as I near the end of each reel, hunt for punch-holes and cut them all out where it is possible without weakening the film. I made twenty-five splices in a two-reel comedy last night. We run from sixty to ninety day stuff here and you know the usual condition of such films. No titles, worn down to about three-fourths of a reel, and the perforations are ripped off until it is actually dangerous to project the picture. It is a relief to get a decent film.

I noticed in last week's New's that the league has just over a thousand members. Here's hoping there will be more thousands to come.

In reply: We know of no better place for the labels than the outside of the can. The purpose of these labels is not to notify the next user of the film that it has been inspected but rather to let the exchange know that you have used the film and are returning it in a satisfactory condition for the next man. As you know, the great trouble has been to get exchanges to thoroughly inspect returned reels before sending them out again. We hope to better this general condition by constantly doing our part until the exchanges begin to "see the light" and bring it about themselves.

The N. A. M. L. now has approximately a thousand members. This number, while truly remarkable as showing the interest taken in its formation, does not represent by any means a large percentage of projectionists. The majority of reels, therefore, probably never come under the watchful eyes of N. A. M. L. members, with the result that most of the films that you and other League members receive have never been inspected by conscientious projectionists.

A new supply of labels is on its way to you by parcel post.

The three film specimens which Mr. Smith sent in had splices varying from five to nine sprocket holes in length and in none of the samples did the perforations of the splice match closely enough to allow the point of a pin to pass through.

The Boylan Even-Tension Reel

A FEW days ago we received from the Automatic Reel Company of Washington, D. C., a Boylan Even-Tension Reel for the purpose of having it tried out under actual conditions. We accordingly turned the reel over to Mr. B. W. Sheppard, who is in charge of the main projection room of the Inter-Ocean Film Company. Mr. Sheppard gave the reel a thorough test with both 1,000 and 2,000 foot film, and from the results obtained we are pleased to say that the Boylan reel will do all that its manufacturers claim for it, and is satisfactory in every way.

The basic idea of the reel is extremely simple. Instead of a one-piece hub, the Boylan hub consists of two pieces; one of which is a wooden cylinder which slips over the key on the take-up shaft. This cylinder slips inside the main portion of the hub which is also lined with wood; thus we have a wood-to-wood bearings.

When the machine is started the friction between the driven cylinder of wood and the reel itself is sufficient to turn the latter.

If Exchanges do not safe-guard their New Film by Treating and Curing it of its "Greenness," Prevent film from becoming Oil-Soaked and Renovation of Film from time to time, Removing all Corrosion, Dirt and Grime, Films are not in proper condition to Operate. There is no reason why Operators should be accused of Scratching, Ripping and Tearing Sprocket Holes when Films are not properly cared for by Exchanges.

Exchanges who neglect the life of Film trying to save a mere expense are really at fault for destruction of Film Stock.

The reel, however, may be held stationary by the hand which shows how slight the tension is, yet even this amount proves to be sufficient.

As the film is taken up the weight of the reel on the hub produces more and more friction, which automatically maintains the tension in the film at a constant figure. It is the elimination of extreme tension which makes it possible for the manufacturers to state with confidence that the use of a Boylan even-tension reel will practically do away with all wear on the lower sprocket.

The Boylan reel might well be a part of the equipment in every projection room.

An Entire Theatre Circuit Works for Better Projection

SOME time ago Mr. E. V. Richards, Jr., General Manager, Saenger Amusement Co., Inc., sent out a letter to all the operators on his circuit on the subject of picture machines and the care of films. I answered his letter, told him that I was a member of the National Anti-Misframe League and explained the league to him. He answered my letter at once and asked me to start the Anti-Misframe League on the Saenger Circuit. Enclosed you will find a letter that I have written on that subject, and which I intend to send to all operators on the Saenger Circuit. The result should be about one hundred or more new members for the Anti-Misframe League:

Dated at Houston, Tex., April 15, 1919.

From Charles A. S. Smith,
Chief Operator,
Isis Theatre,
Houston, Tex.
To All Operators Saenger Circuit of Theatres:
Subject: Anti-Misframe League.

Brother Operators:

As chief operator of one of the Saenger theatres and a member of the National Anti-Misframe League, I have been requested by General Manager E. V. Richards, Jr., of the Saenger Amusement Co., Inc., to get in touch with all the operators of the Saenger Circuit theatres with a view of inducing every one of you to join the National Anti-Misframe League, thereby making the Saenger Circuit 100 per cent. in this, as it is in many other matters.

The purpose of the league is to assure smooth projection by elimination and remedying misframes, bad patches and other physical defects which may be found in the film.

There is no charge to join the League, but membership in it stamps an operator as a man who keeps faith with himself and his duty as well as with his employer and the public. Every operator should join the league and his membership in it should be an incentive to co-operate with his brother operators in assisting to overcome the evils practised in operating rooms of theatres and inspection rooms of film exchanges. A good patch will preclude and avoid a blank screen, elimination of misframes will please the patrons of the house.

As a matter of justice to yourself and dignity to your profession, as a conscientious duty to the Saenger Circuit in which we all take pride, as a conscientious duty to the patrons who make possible our pay checks, I urge you to look in the back part of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS for the application blank which you will find there addressed to the National Anti-Misframe League, to fill out this blank and to mail it as soon as possible.

Trusting you will lend your assistance in making the Saenger Amusement Co. circuit of theatres 100 per cent. in Anti-Misframe, I am,

Fraternally yours,
(Signed) CHARLES A. S. SMITH,
I. A. T. S. E. Local 279.

It is when we receive letters such as this one that we are convinced the League will be a wonderful success. When the projectionists on the Saenger circuit receive Mr. Smith's well-written appeal and become members of the League—as they will without a doubt—it will mean that not a film will be sent back to the exchanges from any Saenger theatre until it has been placed in first-class condition. You can't make us believe that the exchanges will ignore the bettered film condition and refuse to do their own work better.

Mr. Smith should be congratulated for his initiative in starting the ball rolling on the Saenger circuit.

1—“Flutter On, My Broadway Butterfly”—Fox trot. The hit from Monte Christo, Jr., now playing at the Winter Garden, New York. (J. H. Remick, 217 W. 46th St., N. Y.)

2—“Monte Cristo, Jr.”—Another fox trot hit from Monte Cristo, Jr., now playing at the Winter Garden, New York. (Remick.)

3—“I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles.” Waltz. Here is it, boys. The tune you hear played everywhere. The sensational dance hit of the year. (J. H. Remick.)

4—“You're Still An Old Sweetheart of Mine.” Fox trot. A new ballad song hit. An over night success. A number which will become just as popular as that famous “Smiles.” (J. H. Remick.)

5—“Down By the Meadow Brook.” A big romantic waltz hit. The latest and newest waltz craze. (Waterson, Berlin & Snyder, Strand Theatre Bldg., N. Y.)

6—“Tears of Love.” Wonderful song orchestrated as fox trot and one step. Specially adapted for dancing or concert purposes. (J. W. Stern.)

7—“Himalya.” Latest and greatest hit by S. R. Henry and D. Onovas. Published as one-step, fox-trot and intermezzo. (J. W. Stern, 100 W. 38th St., N. Y.)

8—“Sweet Yesterdays Waltz”—Most wonderful waltz published by A. A. Penn. Play it—Gladden the hearts of a million dancers. (Carl Fischer-Witmark, Orch. & Band Dept., Cooper Sq., N. Y.)

9—“America Never Took Water and America Never Will”—No beer, no music—that's the slogan—Play it and help beat Prohibition. One step intro. “Welcome Home, Laddie Boy.” (Carl Fischer-Witmark.)

10 “Dear Little Boy of Mine”—E. R. Ball's new one arranged as a waltz. Play it and make a real big hit. (Fischer-Witmark Orch. Dept.)

11 “Scintillations” by Lucius Hosmer. A delightful concert piece. Its general style is suggested by its title. (Oliver Ditson Co., 178 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

12 “Pastorale” by S. Barmotine. A great composition, suitable for certain scenes in photoplays or for general concert purposes. Arranged for orchestra by Otto Langey. (Oliver Ditson Co.)

13 “Berceuse,” by S. Barmotine. The greatest of its kind. (Oliver Ditson Co.)

14 “Shadows.” The sensational waltz hit by Howard Lutter. Same arrangements as featured in all the Goldwyn productions of “Shadows,” featuring Geraldine Farrar. (Vandersloot Music Pub. Co., Williamsport, Pa.)

15 “Lisztiana,” by A. Chiaffarelli. A novelty march hit which is sure to please. Based upon famous “Liszt” themes, it makes a most unique and wonderfully spirited number. It is clever, interesting and melodious, while the arrangement is not difficult but sounds brilliant and effective. (Carl Fischer.)

The Sticker Conquers!

“OH! What's the use? I have tried it. It's useless. It doesn't pay. Music is nothing but an unnecessary debit on the box-office receipts. I know what I am talking about.”

Such are the universal expressions adopted by most of our exhibitors to act as an ice-bag on the heads of hot advocators of “Better Music for the Film,” a fact which cannot be denied, even by the most impartial individual. I admit most of our exhibitors have tried to work toward the betterment of musical conditions in their theatres, but how many have possessed enough resoluteness to indefatigably continue this work until crowned by results.

The fundamental doctrine responsible for the evil that most exhibitors are resigning to musical junk is to be found in the fact that “The exhibitor of to-day is trying to monetize everything, even art.” He doesn't realize that in order to build a house the foundation must first be started, and that it is the bottom that carries everything and not the top.

Music and aristic surroundings are the fundamental principles of your show and cannot be monetized. They should be considered as an investment indispensable to the mighty structure of success, as is the invincible foundation of a majestic skyscraper.

Determination to continue is the secret of success. I know exhibitors who have installed large orchestras in their theatres, determined to improve their shows, “but here is the But.” They have failed. Why? The peremptory answer to this question is again lack of determination to continue the good work. Three days after the installation of a good orchestra, the exhibitor begins to count. “How much more have I taken in?” is his first question. It is again that great spirit of covetousness that prompts most of our exhibitors to deviate from their original resolution to promote the sterling policy of exhibiting pictures.

Art must be thoroughly developed before it can realize something. Art cannot be converted into money unless perfect. It cannot create results in its stages of infancy. It cannot be advocated by people whose minds do not parallel with the fact that success can only be attained through steadfastness and determination to continue what has been started.

Mr. Exhibitor, kindly note. “To preserve results from eating, you must continue to eat.” “To preserve results from advertising, you must continue to advertise.” “To preserve results from manual or mental work, you must continue to work.” The same applies to the music in your theatre. “Steadfastness to indefatigably continue is the only power leading to success.” In plain English, musical ambitions cannot be considered as New Year's resolutions, or, in brief, “The sticker conquers.”

M. Winkler.

Another Musical Novelty

A POPULAR song, entitled " Upstairs and Down," has been inspired by the latest Selznick photoplay, " Upstairs and Down," and dedicated to Olive Thomas, the beautiful and versatile star of this production. The music is by that well-known writer, Walter Donaldson, and the words are by his colleagues, Sam M. Lewis and Joe Young.

The song is published by Waterson, Berlin and Synder, and they intend exploiting it extensively in conjunction with the picture. They have shown excellent taste by using the portrait of Miss Thomas as the cover of this song, and aside from its musical value, this alone will attract the attention of the public.

Not only is this song appropriate for the picture, " Upstairs and Down," but it is of such excellent musical merit that it can be used very effectively in conjunction with any motion picture requiring a characteristic moderato melody as the Theme.

Thousands of theatre men and concessionaires have found the Butter-Kist Pop Corn and Peanut Machine their greatest payer.

$600 to $3,120 Yearly Income

And all for a small cash payment—the machine buys itself on our easy payment plan.

It's costing you from $2 to $10 a day to be without this never-failing fountain of new-found profits. 90 bags a day means about $1,000 yearly profit.

No extra help needed—it runs itself as well as pays for itself—all you have to do is pour in the raw corn and the peanuts and collect the money.

BUTTER-KIST

Pop Corn and Peanut Machine

Peanut Roaster now nearly doubles the machine's value. Another new attachment which sells salted peanuts is a source of great profit.

The machine is an ornament to your lobby—occupies waste space only, and less than 5 square feet of that. Letters from theatre men prove that the Butter-Kist machine not only increases the profits made on the usual attendance but that it brings new patrons to the show!

Theatres Worth While

William Fox Builds New Theatre in Springfield, Mass.

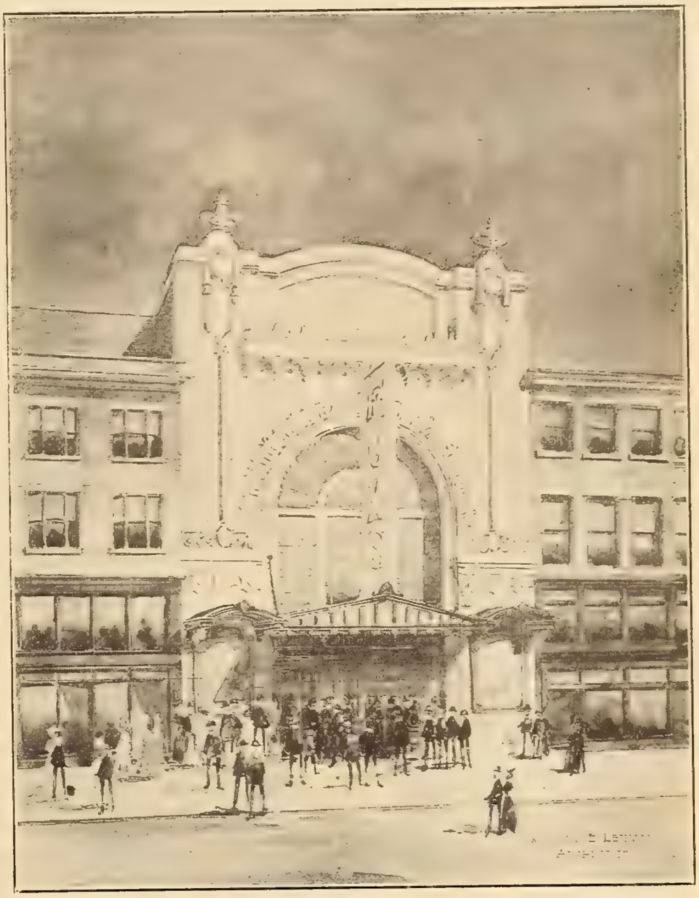
PLANS have been completed and contracts awarded by William Fox for the immediate erection of a new theatre in Springfield, Mass., to replace the one now occupied by Fox's Theatre. The location is considered ideal, fronting directly on the main street in the heart of the down-town business district, and within one minute of the railroad station. The titles for the acquisition of the land on which the present theatre stands, as well as for large strips in the rear and side, were acquired by Mr. Fox a few weeks ago.

The theatre will undoubtedly be the largest in the state, and probably the largest in New England, having a seating capacity of three thousand five hundred seats, one thousand nine hundred and fifty of which will be on the orchestra floor, and the balance on one balcony, and all indications point to an edifice of architectural beauty in keeping with its size—in fact to one of the most magnificent houses on the William Fox Circuit.

The facade of the building will be laid up in a mat-glazed terra-cotta, from which will extend a large marquise of unique construction, measuring thirty-five feet in width by twenty-two feet in length. It is intended to make the illumination of the front a matter of special effort, a huge double-faced diagonal electric attraction sign extending from both extremities of the front elevation to a center-point at the outer edge of the marquise, and covering the entire height of the building. The upper portion of each face will bear the name of the theatre, the lower decks being devoted to the names of the stars, attractions, etc. Under marquise lights will be suspended in delicately tinted globes, which will carry out the prevailing color-scheme of the lobby. The lobby proper will be finished in caenstone with enrichments of burnished gold-leaf panels. The ceiling of the entresol is to be vaulted and hung with stalactite chandeliers of opalescent glass.

In drawing up the specifications, particular attention has been paid to the ventilating and interior illuminating systems, both of which will be distinct innovations. Apparatus has been contracted for, which will cause the air throughout the entire theatre to be changed uniformly and regularly every two minutes, the incoming air being kept at the same temperature as the out-going. A huge air-filter is to be installed into which the air will be conducted through pipes from fanned inlets on the roof in the rear of the theatre. After passing through the chemicals of filtration and being purified, it will be distributed evenly throughout the auditorium. The lighting of the auditorium is to be a combination of the direct and indirect, and, with the aid of dimmers, transparencies, etc., pictures will be presented with the most unique and effective lighting auxiliaries.

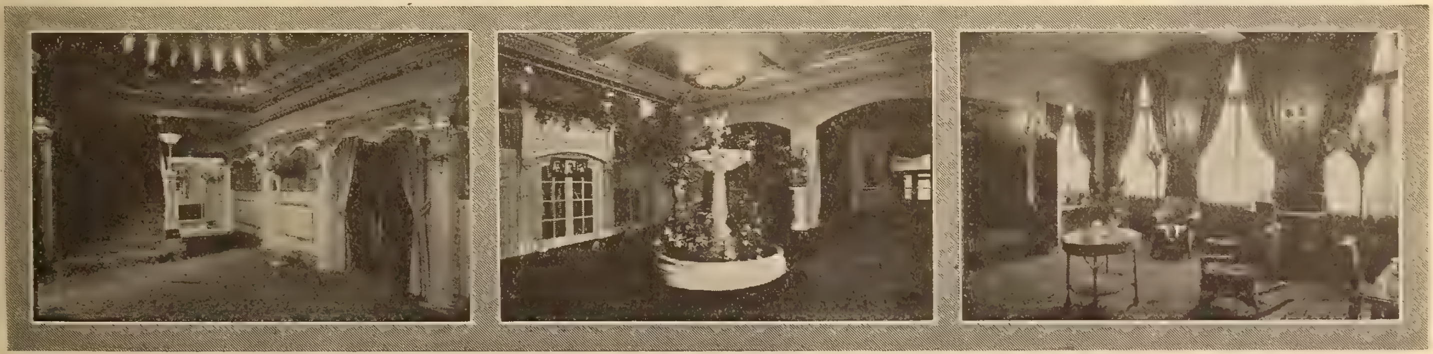
The construction and illumination of the stage, it is said, will be a radical departure from those of even the most recently built theatres, affording facilities for electrical and scenic effects that will be thoroughly novel.



How the new Fox theatre at Springfield, Mass., will look when completed

All the musical aids to proper picture presentation will be provided for also. A twenty-four thousand dollar organ will be installed which will have all the up-to-date attachments. In addition to this a thirty-piece orchestra will be engaged.

Offices have been furnished in the present Fox Theatre building for the accommodation of the construction and engineering chiefs of the William Fox staff, who will move their headquarters to Springfield immediately upon Mr. Fox's return from Europe, when work will be started. It is expected that Mr. Fox and John Zanft, his personal representative, in whose hands the arrangements have been left, will occupy a suite of offices in the same building from time to time while construction is in progress.



At the left is the foyer of the Columbia theatre, Portland, Ore., a corner of which is shown in the center panel. At the right is the rest room. The Liberty and Columbia theatres are operated by Jensen and Von Herberg

WE SELL ON THE INSTALLMENT PLAN

Apollo Refinished and Improved

THE Apollo Theatre, 209 West 125th Street, New York City, managed by Mr. Sam Hurtig, has been recently refinished and many improvements made.

Mr. Hurtig is a theatre man of long standing, having been in this business for over twenty years. His present theatre, since the changes have been made, has a seating capacity of 1,250.

The equipment and furnishings are all new and of the latest types. Music is furnished by a Photoplayer Organ, 24 feet in width, which was installed at a cost of $20,000. The picture, which is projected by two of the latest 6-B Powers machines, equipped with an entirely new system of ventilation, is thrown on a Mirroroid screen, with shadow boxes on the sides. Portraits enclosed in the show boxes cover some of the pipes of the organ and produce a very pleasing appearance.

The projection room in general is well equipped with all necessary apparatus and with every facility for fire protection. A special rewinding room equipped with everything that is necessary has been placed just a few feet from the projecting room. As a rule, one of the projectionists examines the reel as he winds, while the other operates the machine.

Over five years ago Mr. Hurtig hired two brothers, Sam and Will Selkey, as projectionists. They are still with him, neither one having missed a show during their time in his employ. As would be assumed, they produce a picture well worth seeing.

The interior of the theatre is artistically lighted in a manner which does not detract from the screen picture. Large electric fans keep the air in motion at all times. Over 6,000 lamps are used in the display on the exterior of the theatre, with a large American flag of incandescent lamps aiding greatly in making the facade attractive.

Rothapfel's First Unit Program

(Independent Sales—Film Clearing House)

SAMUEL L. ROTHAPFEL'S first Unit Program, which was shown last week at the Rialto theatre before an invited audience, revealed five different subjects, including a feature drama and a two-reel comedy. The first picture on the bill is entitled "The Wood of Fair Water" and is intended as a climax for a news or magazine reel. This is a tribute to the United States Marines' achievement at Belleau Wood and contains a number of views of the famous battle ground. With appropriate music it is impressive, although there are many pictures of just scarred tree trunks which could be elided.

"The Last Hour," a visualization of Massenet's Elegie, is also impressive with the appropriate music. The picture itself, which shows an old bachelor brooding over what might have been, includes a number of double exposure scenes which do not possess the highest technical polish that is possible.

The brightest spot on the program is the largest, the feature entitled "False Gods," by E. Lloyd Sheldon. While this is somewhat slow in getting started, the interest begins to accumulate about at the middle and rises to a climax of real dramatic force. The story tells of an architect and his wife, who, when success comes in business, encounter all sorts of pitfalls in high society. The picture is splendidly acted by a cast headed by Grace Darling, Hugh Thompson, Florence Billings, Ida Darling, Harry Mestayer, Alfred Hickman and Hattie Delaro.

The story contains a number of good comedy snatches and is exceedingly well staged in a number of fine settings, while the photography is to be commended. With a few eliminations in the early reels, "False Gods" will stand any test that the exhibitor may care to apply to it in comparison with the better program features of the day.

Next on the bill comes a humorous little conceit entitled "A Thought of Equity," an epigram evidently the first of a series, and then comes the comedy, "Wild Flowers," from the pen of George V. Hobart. There are some very clever titles in its two reels, all in rhyme and containing some animated figures that catch the audience's attention. The comedy itself is amusing, treating as it does with the day's activities of New York's "wild women."

Mr. Rothapfel supervised the production of all the pictures while the actual direction was in charge of Wally Van. His first program is of varying merit and doubtless the lessons Mr. Rothapfel learned in formulating it will be turned to good advantage, so that the few mistakes of an initial attempt will not appear in a second. Further comment on the program, including a listing of the music and lighting plots, will be found on previous pages of this issue.—Peter Milne.

"Broken Blossoms"

(D. W. Griffith Production)

"BROKEN BLOSSOMS" marks a real advance in the motion picture art and not since the day of D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" has there been such an advance. Here the producer departs from all beaten paths of directorial effort— his story, his production, his effects are different from anything that has been shown on the screen heretofore. And moreover with all these radical changes he has established the motion picture higher than ever before in the ranks of the various arts.

"Broken Blossoms" is a tragedy, not, mind you, a mere melodrama with an unhappy ending, but tragedy real and simple. Mr. Griffith found his groundwork in and received his inspiration from Thomas Burke's "The Chink and the Child," a story of London's Chinatown. Its main characters are the girl, Battling Burrows, her father, and the Chinamen. Battling always vents his cruelty on the little child, beating her, hitting her, whipping her. After one of these prosecutions she falls in a faint at the Chinaman's door and he, having long admired her from afar takes her to his room, baths her wounds and dresses her in soft silks. His love for her is a holy thing—it is worship, but Battling can not understand and when his evil self has asserted itself to its full vile rage, the girl, the Chinaman—and he himself are dead.

Of course words can not do the picture justice. The art of the director has accomplished what no linotype can accomplish. It is the reality of the tragedy that strikes to the very heart, a reality that is made forceful by the rare simplicity with which the plot has been treated. The story progresses naturally and the accumulating force is felt like a swiftly running tide. The crash of emotions that brings the tragedy to its climax is intensity itself. Simplicity is, indeed, a wonderful thing when brought into play by such an artist.

There are three performances rendered in "Broken Blossoms," neither one of which has been paralleled. Lillian Gish as the girl lives the role of the broken, fearful, miserable child whose few hours of earthly happiness are furnished by the yellow man. Her scenes with the brutal father in which she becomes the very epitome of fear, and with the silent Oriental in which she for the first time revels in comfort and satisfaction, are nothing if not lived. Richard Barthelmess as the Chinaman characterizes the role with a touch of velvet softness that shrouds it with a deep appeal. Doiald Crisp's Battling Burrows is the essence of brutality and vulgar pride.

Mr. Griffith and Mr. Bitzer have revealed some new effects of photography, effects which suggest the brush of an artist more than a grinding cameraman. The scenes of London Chinatown and the atmosphere that shrouds them fairly draw the spectator into the picture.

"Broken Blossoms" is the great work of a great artist. By it Mr. Griffith proves that a tragedy can reach the heart, can appeal without recourse to the saccharine-coated implements of the picture carpenter.—Peter Milne.

HARRISON'S EXHIBITOR REVIEWS

"Come Out of the Kitchen"—Paramount

IT will prove a rather hard job for you to determine which will give your patrons the most pleasure, Marguerite Clark, or the story. You may have to call it a draw; it seems that each was made for the other.

The plot is based on the stage play of the same name, a dramatization of the book by Alice Duer Miller. It is a domestic little drama, full of comedy, so wholesome that it will make spectators laugh to their heart's content; tenderly pathetic situations are also found here and there. It is a genuine American little story that will have a particular appeal to all Americans. It depicts a proud, impoverished family of the modern South. The father goes somewhere for his health. The doctors determine an operation is necessary, but money is nowhere to be had. The heroine manages to induce her sister and her three brothers to rent their house for the summer to a wealthy young man, who was looking for one. One of the conditions of the lease is that all servants must be white. The house is ready for delivery, but at the last moment their agent wires that he is unable to furnish them with white servants. Consternation reigns, but rather than have the lease broken and thus lose the only chance of helping father, they determine to assume the servant duties themselves; the heroine is elected as a cook. In the end it results in a love affair between the young man and the heroine.

For over a year Miss Clark has hardly appeared in a better picture. Released by Paramount May 11. Length, 5 reels.

"The Veiled Adventure"—Select

YOU ought to consider yourself lucky if you have this picture coming. From a production angle, as well as from an entertaining, it may, without any hesitation, be graded 100 per cent. Never has Constance Talmadge been supplied with a story that is so close to real life. It gives her an opportunity to act like a regular human being. In seeing it projected on the screen, one wonders whether he is looking at something created by mechanical contrivances or is witnessing an actual occurrence, such as we experience in our daily lives, acted by characters with bone and flesh, so realistic is the impression.

"The Veiled Adventure" is a delightful romance, full of vigor, saturated with comedy, clean and wholesome. In addition, unlike attractions of this class, suspense of strong tensity has been ingrained into the plot, an accomplishment which is due to skillful construction which avoids giving away the impending action. Some of the situations arouse strong anxiety, also; the kind that leaves a pleasurable impression.

The subtitles are most artful. They have been composed so cleverly they add as much to the inherent good qualities of the story; they are full of sublety, wit and humor; they are like little gems.

This picture deserves a longer run, if any does. Released through Select. Length, 5 reels.

"The Mayor of Filbert"—Triangle

THERE is a class of picturegoers whose tastes are plain and not hard to satisfy; the demands of such are usually simple; exaggeration and lack of realism do not prevent them from enjoying a picture, sensation rather than actualism being what gives them the most enjoyment. To such the present offering may turn out to be the kind that would just suit their tastes, but to think of asking a hard and critical spectator to accept this picture as an evening's entertainment would be the same as if you accused him as lacking good sense of humor.

The plot is of the dual role variety, in whose construction situations showing suffrage, murder, a wronged woman and her illegitimate child, an underworld and the political machinery back of it, under the leadership of a Mayor, have been employed in a way that taxes the credulity. Dual role stories, at their best, are but poor material for a picture, as they possess an inherent weakness; it consists in having the same person portray two roles, a fact which, of course, could not be so in real life—one cannot be himself and at the same time someone else; the inborn knowledge of this truth constantly haunts a person's mind; as a consequence the illusion is badly shattered. Portrayal of two roles by one and the same person was attractive while it was a novelty, because it mystified, but the case is hardly so any longer, especially where a story lacks originality. Released through Triangle May 25. Length, 7 reels.

"The Law of Men"—Paramount

"THE LAW OF MEN" is not a picture you could brag about; at the same time it is not the kind that would make you wish to shrink to nothing. It is just an ordinary melodrama, with merits and defects. Its merits are realistic acting and good treatment, features which have imparted to it whatever entertaining value it possesses; while its chief defect, the fact that the theme is common, much in vogue throughout the life of motion picture production, especially during the old days—the innocent hero is arrested for murder, tried and convicted on circumstantial evidence, being saved in the end by the confession of the real murderer. Another weak point is the ability of an "average intelligence" picturegoer to foresee, after the second reel or so, how the story will wind up, thus weakening the suspense.

The wife of a prominent attorney and guardian of the heroine shows too much friendship for an architect of known libertine tendencies. He remonstrates with his wife.

The architect, fascinated by the beauty of the innocent-minded heroine, whom he met by chance, lures her to his apartments, but when he reveals to her his real purpose she becomes horrified; she manages to escape and return home. The hero, noticing her agitation, demands to know and is told the cause. Enraged at the vileness of the man, he rushes to the architect's hotel, enters his apartments unperceived, but is discovered and thrown out by the butler. Returning home, he induces the heroine to marry him at once, so as to give him full rights of protecting her. Just as the wedding ceremony is over, policemen enter and arrest the hero for the murder of the architect. He is tried and convicted, but before sentence is passed the heroine's guardian confesses that it was he who murdered the architect for having stolen the affections of his wife.

The picture contains no offensive situations; it should give average satisfaction. Released April 27, with Enid Bennett as the star. Length, 5 reels.

"The New Moon"—Select

FOR a melodrama, "The New Moon" is extraordinarily impressive; it is also realistic, but its realism depends on the amount of information of the subject treated each spectator possesses. The interest arousing properties of the picture should be sought, not in the originality of the story, but in its timeliness; it strikes a chord that is vital and of universal interest.

The Nationalization of Russia's women under the Soviet regime forms the foundation of the plot. Miss Norma Talmadge is presented as a Princess, who, escaping the revolutionists, goes to another province and, under an assumed name, sets up a grocery store. The chief of the Soviet of that district recognizes her, and in order to obtain her issues a decree making women a National property and orders them to register. As the heroine has refused to register, she is arrested and brought before the chief, who is determined to obtain her by force if not by persuasion. Right at that time, however, the Prince, her betrothed, who was arrested by the revolutionists and was to be executed but had managed to escape, comes to her rescue. They escape and move to another district, where they are happily united.

The scenes showing the executions, intended and accomplished, may be considered by some picturegoers as too strong; they are a little too long and could be shortened to good advantage. Released by Select. Length, 5 reels.

"Rustling a Bride"—Paramount

A VILLAIN, a horse thief, and his Mexican accomplice; a glove, planted by him for the purpose of incriminating the innocent hero; a girl, the heroine, stolen from the hero by the villain and taken to a remote cabin in the desert; the arrest and conviction of the hero on the strength of the discovery of his glove at the corral, for horse thieving, an act he did not commit; his sentence to string from a tree; the heroine's escape and her arrival just in time to prevent such a gross error of primitive justice; the hero's and the heroine's final union—all these situations, which used to form the basis of the old-day Western melodrama, have been dug up from the chest and borrowed to construct the present plot, the basis of Lila Lee's latest contribution.

The picture, in spite of the oldness of the idea, is much more entertaining than any one of those released in the past with Lila Lee in the lead. What helps it mostly are the thrilling situations towards the end; also the fine work of the supporting cast, which is headed by Monte Blue, a late and wise addition to Lasky producing forces. Released by Paramount. Length, 5 reels.

HARRISON'S EXHIBITOR REVIEWS

"Daddy Long Legs"—Mary Pickford

MOST of the entertainment in this picture is derived from its first part, which depicts the heroine's life in the orphanage; it gives the star the opportunities she most desires, opportunities that are most excellently adapted to her inclinations—to show kindness to children; it is her life-long joy; also from the last part, which shows the culmination of the love affair with a man who turns out to be her Daddy Long Legs, her protector. The part between is a little draggy; also badly cut up, lacking continuity; characters appear, later to disappear without a due explanation. The faults, however, can be attributed solely to the haste with which the production was assembled and shipped East. The task of editing must have been tremendous, when one bears in mind that the length of the original production was over 100,000 feet. It is hoped, however, that these defects will be remedied before it reaches the smaller exhibitor.

Jean Webster's book, that forms the basis of the picture, is known in America widely. This fact has inspired Miss Pickford to follow the original as closely as possible. Such a commendable desire, however, has also its drawbacks, because, while the development of certain ideas in a story intended for reading purposes may produce pleasing results, in pictures, quite often, have the opposite effect: For instance, the endeavor to shroud the identity of Daddy Long Legs with mystery. It seems to be irritating rather than suspense producing to the spectator. Such suspense, instead of as natural, appears as artificial.

The production end of the picture bears unmistakable signs of the minute care with which it has been surrounded. It is extremely artistic.

With proper re-editing there is no reason why this attraction should not give satisfaction, especially to all women and children and to those of men who like the sentimental sort of pictures. In fact, the first part of it, showing the pranks of the children in the orphanage, the intoxicated dog, and other laugh producing incidents, should delight all youngsters, as well as grown-ups. Released through the First National Exhibitors circuit. Length, 7 reels.

"Mints of Hell"—Robertson-Cole

PICTURES produced in Alaskan atmosphere have invariably proved extremely fascinating, especially if such are shown during the summer months; the icy atmosphere, the snow-clad trees—a sight which never fails to inspire a lover of nature,—the white ground, all seem to exert a pleasurable influence upon the mind, an influence which acts favorably upon a perspiring body. One other kind of subject that charms and fascinates the mind, when ably portrayed, is gold-mining: Imagine then how much pleasure should a picture afford, a picture that combines the two elements and presents them as naturally as if the drama was an actual occurrence of life, men in flesh and blood taking part. Such an attraction "Mints of Hell" is: It is so realistic that you couldn't be held nearly as spellbound, you couldn't be more in love and sympathy with the good characters, had the story been real and you a participant in it.

Although strong,—men at times being shot as if they were nothing more than brute animals,—the picture is in nowise gruesome, as, whatever killing is done, it is fully justified by some damnable or monstrous act of the sufferer, an act which draws the spectator's ill will.—Released through Exhibitors' Mutual in May. Length, 5 reels.

"All Wrong"—Pathe

"ALL WRONG" is a fairly good entertainment, that is, the kind you don't have to feel nervous while playing, but at the same time not of such a quality as you could make any rash promises about: It contains some laughs, some cleverly complicated situations, etc., and it maintains a fairly good suspense; the production end, on the other hand,—that is, continuity, acting, direction, photography, etc.,—is first class.

The story is chiefly a travesty on the hero's theory, which is securely and unassailably lodged in his brains,—that a married couple can better retain the respect and love for each other if they live apart, meeting only now and then; so after their marriage, the groom puts his theories into practice. In the course of the story, quite a few comical episodes happen, but in the end, the hero finds his ideas are all wrong, and that he cannot do without being close to "wifey." Bryant Washburn is the star.—Released through Pathe June 1. Length, 5 reels.

"Destiny"—Dorothy Phillips

"DESTINY" is a production big in every sense of the word: It is not its length nor any other material factor that impresses one with its bigness, but the inherent good qualities of the story, qualities which appeal to the intellect as well as to several of the pleasurable emotions; they succeed in arousing the spectator's interest, winning his good will and also in holding him in agreeable suspense. Such is the influence that is exerted upon the mind, and as the picture contains no illogical, discordant situations of any description, it should satisfy a wide circle of picture-goers.

Frenzied finance is the theme. It is dramatic in the extreme in its development, two strong wills being brought into a violent conflict. The picture opens showing a farmer and his family, consisting of his wife, daughter and two sons. The eldest boy becomes dissatisfied with the farmer life, and sets his plans for going to the city to seek his fortune, though his parents disapprove of such a move.

The spectator is now carried forward by twenty years and is shown the eldest brother, now a successful and very prosperous Wall Street financier, attempting to exercise his iron will over his sister. She loves a young broker, her brother's business rival and a bitter enemy. He forbids her to have any social intercourse with the broker, but she states that, as the same kind of blood flows in her veins as in his, will accept no bossing; so she defies him and marries the man she loves. Furious at her defiance, he now more than ever becomes determined to ruin the object of his hate, and thus break his sister's spirit and bend her will to his. He throws the weight of his wealth in the stock market and by manipulating it comes out victorious. He breaks his brother-in-law, but in the process he also drags down a number of others.

Regret and grief, however, follow in his triumph, as the man he vowed to ruin lies dead, having been killed by the discharge of the gun while trying to prevent a banker, a co-victim of his, from committing suicide. His mental torture keeps on increasing as he is denounced by his very parents; his sister execrates him. To cap the climax, the market breaks against him and the once powerful financier is powerless to escape the fate he brought upon others. He becomes impoverished.

While wandering in the street, forlorn and friendless, indifferent to life itself, he is met by one of the victims of his misused power, and a struggle ensues. As remorse and broken spirits have weakened his physical strength, he is unable to fight back with success; he is thrown through the window supposedly to the pavement below. Right on this scene, however, the picture fades into a subtitle with wording to the effect that, so it would have happened had the brother gone to the city; but he did not go, having thought best to remain at home and help his father cultivate his farm, build good roads, etc., a beautiful scene appearing after each enumeration of the good things he helped his father to accomplish: The effect of this unexpected twist is electric, instantaneous; it completely reverses the flow of the emotions: the result is a highly successful blending of the dramatic and the cheerful. While the dramatic ending itself would have been highly satisfactory, the resort to this novelty makes it doubly so; it adds greatly to the entertaining values as, from a state of high, although agreeable, suspense, the feelings are brought to a state of soothing delight.

The good picture cause entitles this production to a longer run. Released by Jewell, June 1. Length, 7 reels.—P. S. H.

"The White Heather"—Tourneur Productions

THIS picture is based on the famous Drury Lane melodrama of the same name, by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton. As you know, in nearly nine out of ten plays of the melodramatic class, conformance with the laws of logic is almost entirely disregarded, or at least not adhered to with scrupulousness, sensation rather than realism being considered as the factor of cardinal importance; so it is with "The White Heather"—although things could not happen in real life the way they are depicted in it, yet it will entertain a large number of picture goers, because of its sensational situations: The fight between two men in the depths of the sea, for instance, in which the villian cuts his own air-hose, thinking it is that of his antagonist, thus perishing; it is exciting as well as thrilling.

The submarine scenes have been taken by aid of the Williamson device, and they are extremely clear.

"RUSTLING A BRIDE"—PARAMOUNT

Lila Lee Has a Suitable Subject in Western Photoplay

IT has taken quite a few pictures for Paramount to discover where Lila Lee really belongs. She possesses an emphatic personality—indeed, a colorful one, but where her managers made the mistake was in thinking it was elusive or ephemeral enough to carry such will-of-the-wisp pieces as "The Cruise of the Make Believe" and "Such a Little Pirate." In placing the star in this simple Western number, "Rustling a Bride," they have supplied her with her best picture to date, since it offers her a role ideally suited to her personality.

Miss Lee does not soar to the dramatic heights, but she does give a sincere and charming performance of the lonely girl who corresponds with and marries an equally lonely cowboy who has been a total stranger to her. Not a new idea, as you will admit, but one that has been developed for its full humorous value.

The picture takes a melodramatic turn on the eventful wedding day, which is visualized in the scene that marks the rustling of the bride. The rustler she believes to be her correspondent, since the groom, being an "ornery looking cuss," has sent the former's photograph. When events loom up dark for the cowboy, who is about to be hanged, and the girl, who has been stolen, the scenarist pulls the strings and presto, all is well.

The picture is well treated by the director, since there is nothing amiss in detail and action.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 27.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

"Rustling a Bride" is the feature holding the place of honor on the ——— theatre's bill for ——— of ——— week. This is a late Paramount offering and in its story by John Lynch it depicts a thoroughly charming romance between a girl and a cowboy, neither of whom had the pleasure of the other's acquaintance during the courtship, since they lived in neighboring towns and established their friendship through corespondence. While this idea may seem conventional at a mere glance yet the way it has been treated makes it far from such. Indeed, the author has fashioned the tale so that it appears quite unusual so complete are its varied assortment of incidents.

Miss Lee has the role of a lonely girl of the countryside whose lack of companions causes her to carry on a correspondence with a cowboy. This chap, in picking up the school books of the new teacher, had noticed upon the fly-leaf of one of them the inscription, "The prettiest girl in school," with the name of Emily signed to it. So he conceives the scheme of writing to her. But since he regards himself as just an "ornery looking cuss" his friend's photograph is sent along to carry out the impression that he is an Apollo.

The day arrives when Emily has come to marry him and the cowboy is at the station as his hired man. As he places her on the stage he gets a severe case of fright and after telling her where to go runs away. But he doesn't go far because the friend of the photograph fakes evidence to make him out a horse thief, while he kidnaps the girl and takes her to his cabin. Delicate situations confront the two correspondents and things look extremely hopeless before they are straightened out eventually. The incidents are too many and unusual to tell here, but suffice to state that they make a pleasant hour of screen entertainment.

THE STORY

A new school teacher has arrived in Coyote Junction and as the cowboys are grouped around the station they become very solicitous in their attentions. In collecting her books, Nick McCredie discovers on the fly-leaf of one of them the inscription "the prettiest girl in school," and beneath it is signed the name and address of Emily. So the cowboy conceives the idea to write the girl and send along a photograph of Pen Walton, the best looking man in the outfit, though he signs his own name to the letter. As Emily, who lives in a neighboring town, has no companions, she willingly enters into correspondence with Nick. And when she tells her troubles, he promptly invites her to come to the Junction and marry him. In the meantime Nick discovers Walton rustling horses and upon the latter's promise to go straight his friend agrees not to expose him.

So Emily arrives and Nick, ashamed of his homely countenance, tells her he is the hired man sent by Nick to drive her to the ranch. However, he gets girl-shy and puts her on the stage and starts home alone. Walton, who doesn't regard Nick very highly, arranges evidence that makes him out a horse thief and the cowboys go in search of him, while the scalawag whose picture is in Emily's possession, holds up the stage and makes her prisoner. He takes her to a deserted shack but she escapes, turns the stolen horses loose and reaches the ranch just in time to prevent Nick from being lynched by the cowboys. And so they are married.

CATCH LINES

He carried on a correspondence with a girl he didn't know. And being just an "ornery looking cuss" he made out that he was extremely handsome. Was she disillusioned when she met him? See "Rustling a Bride."

See "Rustling a Bride"—a story of hearts and horse thieves enacted by the lovely Lila Lee and a capable cast.

He sent her a photograph of his good looking friend in order to impress her as an Apollo. But when the latter turned out to be a horse thief and a kidnapper to boot, she discovered that a handsome face doesn't always represent character.

He was lonely and so was she, and though they weren't acquainted that fact didn't have any thing to do with their correspondence. When the girl came to marry him she took him at his own face value else he might have danced upon the air at the end of a rope. A lively tale of a quaint romance which is balanced with plenty of thrills. Come and see "Rustling a Bride."

She is "the prettiest girl in school"—that is the inscription written on the fly-leaf of a book. The cowboy who read it started a correspondence with her, although she was a total stranger to him. What came of it all? See Lila Lee in "Rustling a Bride"—it will highly interest you.

PROGRAM READER

A mere glance at the title is enough to insure the reader that a picture out of the ordinary is presented in "Rustling a Bride." "We've all heard of cattle rustlers and have seen them many times on the screen, but rustling a bride seems like something new under the sun for such honorable fellows as the cowboys of the wild and wooly West. The bride in this case and the man she is to marry do not know each other, strange as that may seem, and the fun and the drama are derived from the peculiar situations in which they move throughout the play.

The wedding day arrives and the little bride comes to meet her stranger-husband. Realizing that he is far from being an Apollo, the groom has sent her a photograph of his friend, who is the best loking man among the cowboys. This fellow is a real honest to godness rustler, since he not only steals cattle but a prize assortment of horses as well. And he makes it appear that the hopeful groom is guilty of his crime. And since the girl thinks the rustler is the man she is to marry because of his photograph, she doesn't put up any argument when he manages to take her away to his cabin. At this point the picture unfolds a series of lively incidents which place the bridal couple in extreme danger. To tell them is to give away the story. Miss Lee makes a captivating bride and she is supported by such expert players as Monte Blue, L. J. Shumway, Manuel Ojeda and others. Irvin Willat directed the picture and his effort reflects much credit upon his ability. The story is by John Lynch.

"THE COMING OF THE LAW"—FOX

Unusually Satisfying Western with Tom Mix Starred

VARIETY is the spice of westerns just as much as it is of life—a fact pleasantly realized by those concerned in the production of "The Coming of the Law," Tom Mix's latest starring vehicle. The action, though it contains the customary amounts of hard riding and shooting, is spiced with considerable originality in the way of stunts, while the character that the star interprets has a freshness that is always apparent and interesting as a consequence.

Much of the credit for the success of the production must be awarded Arthur Rosson, the director. Many will remember him in his former association with Allan Dwan, and his work in the present instance has that spontaneity and fresh treatment that is generally to be noted in the older director's works.

Mr. Mix is fearless in the execution of his stunts and altogether presents a thoroughly ingratiating character. His support is headed by Brownie Vernon as heroine and Jack Curtis as heavy. The settings are true to the usual western type, while in many of the shots there is a grand sweep of scenery exceedingly pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released May 11.—Peter Milne.

Because the express didn't stop at Dry Bottom, New Mexico, was no cause in the world to prevent Kent Hollis from alighting there. He bruised himself up a bit, but then he was used to all sorts of hard knocks and a few more from old mother earth didn't make much difference one way or another. As he sat resting on the ties, a band of horsemen approached him and sized him us as a regular tenderfoot. Their leader demanded that he dance and started to pepper the earth about his feet with rifle bullets—but Kent betrayed no nervousness, indeed, he hardly noticed the rapid fire of shots. However, he did volunteer to show his would-be tomentors a few tricks if they would loan him a revolver and a hat. The leader offered his hat and Kent sent it swirling through the air. Before it reached the ground again it was as full of holes as a sieve. All sounds pretty interesting doesn't it? Well, the rest of it is more so. That rest of it you will find in Tom Mix's latest feature, 'The Coming of the Law," which will be shown shortly at the theatre. It is one of the most amusing and exciting pictures in this fine actor's series.

PRESS NOTICE

Tom Mix, interpreter of Western characters, will be seen at the ——— theatre again on ——— of ——— week. His latest picture is "The Coming of the Law," and judging from the praise it has received from reliable critics is one of the best in his highly exciting series of picture productions. From the very opening scene until the final close-up the action mingles thrills and laughs in such alluring proportions that the interest is never once allowed to drop. The story for "The Coming of the Law" was written by Charles Alden Seltzer and produced under the direction of Arthur Rosson, one of the leading directors of this type of motion picture. He has kept the action always spontaneous and the original way he has of doing things makes the story appear in a refreshing light.

Mr. Mix assumes the role of Kent Hollis, a young man from the East. When he arrives in the West the bad element makes the mistake of taking him for a tenderfoot and try out all the old tricks on him. Much to their surprise and chagrin, however, Kent proves wise to every one of the gags and before he is through with them he has shown a trick or two of his own that fairly startles them out of their several skins. Kent's task in the West proves difficult. Among other things he has to fight the cattle rustlers who caused the death of his father, wage war on those who would stop him from publishing the truth in his newspaper and protect a girl from the advances of the chief villain.

Quite a big assignment for one lone man, but suffice to say that Kent acquits himself with great glory before the picture is done. Mr. Mix is supported by a competent cast.

THE STORY

Kent Hollis arrives in Dry Bottom, New Mexico, to settle up lands inherited from his father. He proves himself not so much of a tenderfoot as the bad element of the town suspects and before many minutes have passed has succeeded in establishing himself as one of the powers to be reckoned with. At first it is Kent's intention to settle his business affairs and depart again for the East, but the employees of his late father urge him to remain on and fight Big Bill Dunlavey, the leader of the lawless element and the man largely responsible for the elder Hollis' demise. So Kent remains and takes charge of a paper and his ranch and before long has things humming.

He swiftly incurs the enmity of Big Bill, as he hunts down some of his cattle rustlers and also earns quick favor from Nellie Hazelton, the girl coveted by Big Bill himself. In one of Kent's fights with the rustlers he succeeds in beating them all single-handed. Then one of Big Bill's men—his right-hand man, in fact—is won over to Kent's side by his human treatment of him. Big Bill sees his power slipping fast and takes final measures to stop its slipping during the election. He attempts to stuff the ballot boxes with votes for his candidate for sheriff but Kent's men prove too much for him.

Kent is elected sheriff and then there issues a real fight between the rival factions, the villains finally being trapped in a little cabin, which is cleverly set afire by a trick of Kent's. Big Bill then attempts to kill his victorious adversary but is not quick enough on the draw, and before he has time to turn around he drops dead with a bullet through him. The forces of law and order restored to the town, Kent claims Nellie as his wife.

CATCH LINES

They thought him a tenderfoot, but he turned out to be as calloused as the oldest inhabitant. "The Coming of the Law" is filled with thrills and laughs. Don't miss it.

Tom Mix always does the unusual in his Western pictures—in "The Coming of the Law" there are some fine new stunts, new comedy, new thrills. Don't fail to see it.

How one man established law and order in a town that didn't know what those terms meant.

When Kent Hollis fell off the train at Dry Bottom, the inhabitants didn't know that he heralded the coming of the law—but two minutes later they did. See Tom Mix in "The Coming of the Law," his latest and greatest Western.

SUGGESTIONS

If you've played other Tom Mix features recently you should have no trouble at all in bringing the crowds in for this one. Reports indicate that this star's stuff is going over pretty big no matter what locality his pictures are shown in. It's a known fact that of all the feature stars he was probably the most popular with the soldiers. This means that he is popular with practically all. Those same qualities which made the soldiers like him—his fearlessness, ability to perform the unusual stunt, his clean cut manner—these qualities will appeal to anyone.

All that is really necessary in anouncing "The Coming of the Law" is to lay stress on the stunts and the comedy and to play Tom Mix's name up to the limit. You can't go wrong if you follow this course then. For the rest the picture will advertise itself if you give it a chance by playing it more than a single day.

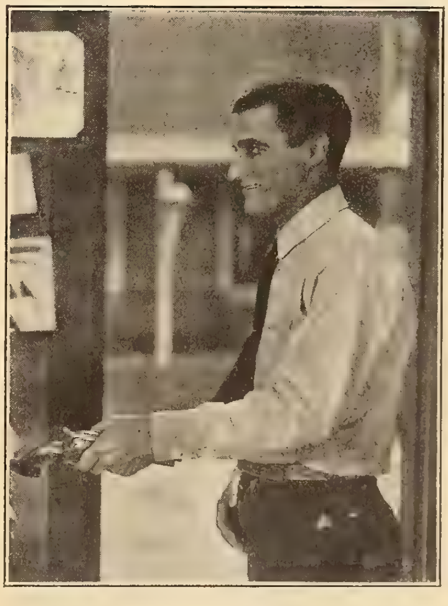
SUGGESTIONS

There is a wealth of advertising value to be found in the title of this picture. It is new and it is different. It carries humorous as well as dramatic possibilities and they should be brought home to the patrons in a way that will convince them. Lay stress upon the fact that rustling a bride is no different than rustling cattle except that she is not branded like the stock. Bring out the situation where the heroine comes to marry the man with whom she has been carrying on a correspondence. She doesn't know him and she has his friend's photograph, since the groom sent it to impress her with his good looks. The friend is considered the Apollo of the cowboys and he is the rustler in the case. Use advertising to bring out the development of the romance which you can glean from the story and catch lines.

Then there is the star. Miss Lee has gained a following of no inconsiderable size. As the producers have furnished her with a most suitable vehicle in "Rustling a Bride," we would not hesitate to call it the best thing she has done. Feature her and bring out that she possesses a sweet and youthful personality in any advertising that you may give the newspapers. The members of the cast might come in for some mention as most patrons are acquainted with them. Shroud the picture with a little mystery. Most everyone likes to be kept in the dark concerning a picture.



The question is who is Tom Mix presenting the gun to?

"DADDY LONG LEGS"—PICKFORD-FIRST NATIONAL

Mary Pickford's First First National Has Much Comedy and Sentiment

THERE is small chance of this picture failing to please. In fact it will probably be the same hit in every locality that it was in New York at the Strand. The comedy, and there are at least two straight reels of it at the start, sent the house into shrieks of delight—and the sentimental romance with which the concluding reels are laden brings smiles and tears. Miss Pickford is permitted a good range of character, first appearing as the inmate of the orphan asylum, twelve year old or thereabouts, and later as the adorable sweetheart. She plays her comedy delightfully and none the less so the romance.

Marshall Neilan directed the picture, and this is a guarantee of original comedy bits. The first reels are fairly loaded with incidental comedy business that always registered before the big audience at the Strand. The romance appealed deeply, too, and for the ending there was a wonderful laugh—a variation of the usual " clinch."

Rest assured then that " Daddy Long Legs " is going to score. The faults that it reveals, a particularly choppy and disconnected continuity, less substance than we would like to see even in a Mary Pickford picture, and some few flashes in which the star and a little boy overdo the effects of hard cider, are seemingly forgotten by an audience bound to enjoy itself.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

Mary Pickford, without doubt the greatest favorite of the motion picture public, will be seen at the ——— theatre during the week of ——— in her latest picture, " Daddy Long Legs," an adaptation of the popular play by Jean Webster. Incidentally, this is Miss Pickford's first picture to be released through the First National Exhibitors Circuit and, judging from advance reports, it is indeed a worthy production to mark the beginning of this new affiliation. The picture was adapted for the screen by Agnes Johnston and produced under the direction of Marshall Neilan, the same director who presided over some of her best Artcraft pictures.

Throughout the length of the picture the spectator is treated to excellent comedy and that same sort of wholesome sentiment that was constantly visible in the original play. Miss Pickford is at her best when in these two moods, the humorous and the sentimental. As the little orphan of the miserably run asylum she creates a delightful character. The comedy of the opening reels is rich in the extreme. Judy's troubles with the severe Mrs. Lippett are responsible for not the least portion of humor while they also serve the added groundwork for the pathos.

However the statement that the picture was directed by Mr. Neilan really gives ample proof that it is filled with all the comedy possible. Certainly all of Miss Pickford's admirers will be pleased to welcome her back to the screen in such a genuinely fine production as " Daddy Long Legs."

THE STORY

Judy Abbott is regarded as the worst of all the orphans in the asylum by the severe Mrs. Lippett who runs the place. On the contrary, however, Judy is about the best. She is a very human little thing and fights for the rights of the kiddies around her, kiddies who have never had a chance. Her pet aversion is a certain Wednesday when all the inhuman trustees make the place a visit and feel gratified about doing so much for the orphans. They are all inhuman but one, that is Miss Pritchard and it is this kind lady, who, when Judy keeps on growing up interests the wealthy Jarvis Pendleton in her with the result that she is sent to college. Pendleton prefers to be known to her as plain John Smith and refuses to meet her.

Later, however, Judy is introduced to him as Mr. Pendleton and then he falls in love. Little does Judy know that the tall serious man is none other than Daddy Long Legs, her nick name for her benefactor. Judy has another suitor, Jimmie McBride, a college freshman with few brains. And when Judy refuses Pendleton's offer of marriage, he believes that it is because Jimmie comes first in her heart. In reality it is because Judy feels unequal to him socially.

So she sits herself down and writes a letter to her Daddy Long Legs telling him the whole sad story and then when she hears no answer she takes matters into her own hands and goes to the house of the mysterious John Smith. And there, of course, she discovers that Pendleton, John Smith and Daddy Long Legs are one and the same and naturally there is a happy ending.

CATCH LINES

Mary Pickford in a play of genuine comedy and homely sentiment—don't miss her latest and best, " Daddy Long Legs."

She had never known a mother or a father—she was an orphan named after a name on a tombstone and a name in a telephone book. She thought that happiness and a real home were never to be hers—but she found them both in " Daddy Long Legs."

A picture of comedy and of sentiment, done in Mary Pickford's best style and produced under the masterful direction of Marshall Neilan.

Her Daddy Long Legs turned out to be her Romeo—see " Daddy Long Legs," Mary Pickford's first First National production.

A play of laughter and of pathos—adapted from the famous stage success by Jean Webster.

PROGRAM READER

Mary Pickford in " Daddy Long Legs." That announcement will be received with joy by the many admirers of Miss Pickford who have waited long for her return to the screen. The fact that this return is made under the First National banner and in such a thoroughly wholesome attraction as this adaptation of Jean Webster's famous play lends added force to the announcement. " Daddy Long Legs " scored with great success on the speaking stage in practically every city of any size throughout the country. It seemed, long before the rights to the celluloid were purchased, that it was just the right sort of thing for Miss Pickford. And such has turned out to be the case. Adapted by Agnes Johnston and produced under the direction of Marshall Neilan, " Daddy Long Legs " comes to the screen a veritable mine of delightful comedy and wistful, wholesome sentiment. The picture bears the production of a real artist—Mr. Neilan. No matter what phase of the story he deals with he proves himself a master of his craft and the whole picture reflects great credit on his name as well as on that of the star. We are not going to tell the story here—that remains for the picture itself to do—and that it will accomplish during all the week of ———

SUGGESTIONS

In addition to the name of Mary Pickford you have two other great assets in advertising this production to your public. Marshall Neilan, the director, and the fact that the picture is an adaptation of a famous play, " Daddy Long Legs." Mr. Neilan's name means a lot. His work on many of the same star's Artcraft pictures gave him a fine reputation with the fans. He has gotten a lot of publicity from " The Unpardonable Sin " and he has for a long time been a favorite subject with the fan magazines. The play was exceedingly successful in all the big cities and a line reading " From Jean Webster's play " should always be carried.

Naturally you will not neglect the star. It might be wise to make a point of the fact that " Daddy Long Legs " is her first First National production. People who follow the business at all will be interested to know this.

In advertising the content of the picture lay special stress on the two main elements, comedy and sentiment. That is in all your word and picture arguments build up around these two elements. They appeal to the vast majority of the motion picture public—to any public at all for that matter. Play them up in your copy for all they're worth.

Marshall Neilan, again Mary Pickford's director on " Daddy Long Legs "

"THE NEW MOON"—SELECT

Russian Soviet Meet a Courageous Enemy in Norma Talmadge

NORMA TALMADGE is keeping astride the times if one may consider the dramatic pattern of her new picture, " The New Moon." The author has discovered in the papers a note concerning the latest decree issued by the Russian Reds which is that of proclaiming all women under the age of thirty-two as the property of the State. And he has fashioned an extravagant melodrama around it.

Accepted as pictorial fare and it seems as if one must take it with a grain of salt, since the author sacrifices truth at times to stretch a few dramatic points. Had he developed it for its sombre note the story would have gained in realism, yet in doing so he would have violated good taste.

The picture does not measure up to the star's fine average of late. It falters in characterization and does not give her that emotional latitude of expression, nor are there any deft touches discernible. On the contrary it is crudely developed and the action suffers from a lot of faulty incidents. One of these weird bits, conspicuous for its ridiculousness, shows the hero about to be shot, but who escapes because a drunken man drives right in front of the executioners and offers them the contents of the bottle.

A tragic touch is realized when a group of women are executed. It takes nerve to put on such a scene even if it is true as the papers tell us. But as long as the hero comes out unscathed and violates realism as a result it would have been more logical had the women been treated the same.

Miss Talmadge puts the Reds to rout, but her dramatic moments are few and far between. Still she shines with her customary brillancy. Pedro de Cordoba is sincere as the hero, but the best performance among the players is contributed by Charles Gerrard as a particularly vicious Red. The atmosphere is fairly appropriate.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

Norma Talmadge, the emotional star, comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of——— week in her newest picture entitled " The New Moon." It presents a story of Russia at the present time and particularly of its women who are held to be the property of the State. H. H. Van Loan, the author of the tale, has kept abreast of the times in dealing with such a slice of life. The significant feature of his work is found in the originality of the theme and while it is fiction as far as the characters are concerned it is fact in regard to its plot.

The whole world has its eyes on Russia and the tragic events that are being enacted there. And the author has translated the most tragic incident of all to form the basis of his story. The women are depicted as being ground mercilessly under the heels of a group of Utopian dreamers. They are looked upon as mere breeders who must give themselves up to common law husbands. Such is the vital story of " The New Moon."

Sonia Sazonoff, sometimes known as Princess Pavlovna, is only one of many. But while the majority meekly submit to the horrible decree which takes away the honor and all the ideals they possess, this girl becomes a peasant to fight the battles of her less fortunate sisters. The man to whom she is betrothed is powerless to aid her. The vicious Kameneff, who ordered the decree, plots to make Sonia his property. How she evades him and brings sorrow down upon his head when he learns that his own sister has been shot in attempting to escape the dreadful ukase, is the concluding scene of a full quota of powerfully dramatic events.

Miss Talmadge, who plays the pseudo-peasant, has a sure command over her emotional faculties. She makes the character vital and vivid. Splendid support is rendered by Pedro de Cordoba, Charles Gerard, Stuart Holmes, Marc McDermott, Ethel Kaye, Harry Southern, and Marguerite Clayton. The picture was adapted by Chester Withey and produced under his direction.

THE STORY

In a certain Russian city a ball is being given at the home of Princess Marie Pavlovna, and as she is eagerly awaiting her betrothed, Prince Michail Koloyar, the palace is surrounded by the Red guard who make short shrift of the gay function. When they have finished their evil work the place is a mass of ruins though they have not succeeded in capturing the lovers. A decree has gone forth throughout the province that every woman between the ages of 23 and 32 must register within three days to become the property of the State or suffer the severest penalty. And Marie, to escape a life worse than death, decides to become a peasant under the name of Sonia Sazonoff. She conducts a grocery shop in a neighboring village, and is happy until discovered by Kamenoff, the vicious ruler, who ordered the decree.

The Prince in the meantime has allied himself with the anarchists to allay suspicion. But his identity is established eventually and he is ordered to be shot. Luckily he escapes his executioners. As for Sonia, she steadfastly refuses to register despite the urging of Kamenoff, who wants her in his possession. A time comes when she is caught in aiding women to escape to the border and she finds herself in Kameneff's power. After the poor unfortunates are executed the Prince enters upon the scene and effects a timely rescue. With Kameneff a suicide, they easily escape and make their way to a happy country.

PROGRAM READER

Do you know what is taking place behind the borders of mysterious Russia at the present time? Do you know that the whole world is watching the turn of events in that land of the North? Do you know that since the revolution that chaos and disorder are the guiding factors in the lives of the people and that strange things are happening which loom up direful to us in our settled orderliness and civilization? When you come to the ——— theatre in the near future to see Norma Talmadge in "The New Moon" you are going to see a glimpse of Russia as it is today. And you will see a picture that will rouse you to the highest pitch. It carries in its story the degradation of women, since the decree has gone forth that they must be nationalized, or, in simpler language, become the property of the State. Marriage is held superfluous there for any woman between the ages of 23 and 32. She must live on a common ground with any man who suggests it, regardless of whether she is married at the time or not On this vital theme rests the "New Moon." The management considers it one of the most powerful pictures that has ever played the ——— theatre. It is strong in action, suspense, and romance and wonderfully acted by the emotional star, Norma Talmadge. Don't fail to see a great actress in a great story.

"THE MAN WHO TURNED WHITE"—ROBERTSON-COLE

H. B. Warner Returns to the Screen in a Colorful Melodrama

IN consenting to grace the screen again H. B. Warner has wisely chosen his material (granting of course that he had this privilege), since in turning to the Orient for his new offering, he is in line to regain his former popularity. It was in just such a picture as "The Man Who Turned White" that brought him into the spotlight of public favor if one remembers his "Beggar of Cawnpore" of a few seasons ago. No actor on the screen can do this Oriental thing quite as well as Mr. Warner, since he seemingly knows the character of the "child of the desert." And he knows his English or French army officer as well.

The pattern of the story is cut from an ancient fabric and has been used as a photoplay foundation since the time of the nickelodion. However, the French or British officer who renounces his race and name to assume an Oriental disguise never fails to make an interesting dramatic figure. He is placed in enough involved situations of an adventurous character to set him off conspicuously. And the backgrounds attend to the rest. The hot sands, the bizarre bazaars, are there beckoning you to the East.

After a romantic spell is cast over the pseudo-Arab he assumes his Occidental character. Which leads him up to the time when he must protect her in a rousing battle scene. A well made picture rich in action, adventure and color is "The Man Who Turned White." The film was reviewed at length on page 3265 of last week's issue.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

H. B. Warner will be the star at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his first Robertson-Cole picture, entitled "The Man Who Turned White." Special interest is attached to this picture since it marks the star's return to the screen after an absence of several seasons. Lately he has been appearing upon the stage in a most successful farce comedy, "Sleeping Partners," and the fact that he has been lured back to the silent drama in an adventurous and picturesque story of the East is proof positive that his good luck still pursues him. The role that he has here is ideally suited for him since it brings into play his well known romantic expression. Suffice to state that he makes the most of his opportunities.

"The Man Who Turned White" is from the pen of F. McGrew Willis and the scenarioization has been attended to by George Elwood Jenks. The production end of it has been taken care of by Parke Frame under the supervision of Jesse D. Hampton. Mr. Warner is supported by a brilliant supporting cast that includes such competent players as Barbara Castleton, Wedgewood Nowell, Carmen Phillips, Jay Dwiggins, Eugenie Forde and Walter Perry.

The story treats of an army officer who is stationed with his regiment among the Bedouins. He is courtmartialed over an affair of honor and the disgrace affects him so deeply that he renounces his race and name and becomes the chieftain of a band of marauding Arabs. But a white girl, who is captured, penetrates his disguise and so strong is her appeal that he gladly becomes a white man again. How he effects her escape, how she is rescued from a vicious Arab, how the two Europeans endeavor to save themselves when everything seems lost are events which form one of the most exciting photoplays ever seen on the ——— screen.

THE STORY

Capt. Rand, whose regiment was stationed in a territory adjacent to the Sahara, was courtmartialed for conduct unbecoming a gentleman and an officer. He had assumed Capt. Beverly's guilt in a certain liaison with the colonel's wife out of gratitude for being rescued in battle by his brother officer. The dishonor brought him such a sense of shame and hatred for his race that he became an Arab. As Ali Zaman, he led a band of robbers against his regiment and those people who belonged to the white race. However, his chivalrous regard for women asserted itself when Ethel Lambert was taken prisoner, and she appealed to him so emphatically that he permitted her to escape. The girl had also penetrated his disguise and this fact led him to realize that the white race was superior after all.

So Rand became a white man again. When he happened to stroll into a bazaar in the city he was astonished to find Ethel there as the victim of Arabian insults. In defending her he aroused the jealousy of Fanine, a dancing girl. So she conspired with Joudar, an Arab chieftain, to capture him for herself, while her plotter schemed to get Ethel. The plan was frustrated through Rand's bravery in giving battle to the bandits. As the dishonored captain and the girl were outnumbered, they would have been captured had it not been for Beverly's men who came to the rescue. The captain, who had been Rand's bitter enemy since the courtmartial, was struck down by an Arabian bullet, and before he expired he cleared the good name of his brother officer. With every shadow removed from his character, Rand and Ethel rode away to begin a life-long romance.

PROGRAM READER

Our patrons will doubtless be pleased to know that H. B. Warner has returned to the screen and will make his appearance at the ——— theatre in the near future. Many of you only know him by his stage reputation, while the picture-goers of a season or two ago will remember him as a particularly gifted actor in screen pantomime. His pictures of the past were principally laid in the Orient and in the character of a Hndu or an Arab he established his popularity. Now he appears again as an Arab who in reality is a Frenchman. As the leader of a marauding band he brings into play a faithful suggestion of the role. In his flowing robes he is the Arab to the life and not until he has captured a girl of his own people, who brings him back to a realization of the superiority of his race, he consent to become a white man again. Many more incidents can be related aside from the theme suggested above but in doing so we would be giving a most unusual and exciting story. It is a highly picturesque entertainment and one well calculated to interest the spectator throughout. Mr. Warner is assisted by Barbara Castleton, Wedgewood Nowell, Carmen Phillips and others.

CATCH LINES

H. B. Warner, lately the star of that highly successful play, "Sleeping Partners," returns to the screen in a picture full of color, adventure, and romance, entitled "The Man Who Turned White." Come and make his acquaintance again on ——— of ——— week.

He was dismissed from his regiment over an affair of honor. Being innocent, he lost his faith in the white race and became an Arab. But a girl happened along who restored him his self-respect and honor, and he became a white man again for she needed his protection.

The marauding Arabs had captured her, but the leader permitted her to go when she found out that he was write. Her influence brought him a realization that his own race was superior, and when he had rescued her from the tribes, they gave up the Orient.

A picture of the Orient where the sands are hot and mysterious—a picture of Arab tribemen and a French army officer who became their chieftain—a picture of a girl from the Occident who touched off the spark of love in this leader and made him a white man again.

A story of Arabia and with the aroma of the East. It brings back H. B. Warner to the screen.

SUGGESTIONS

That H. B. Warner is known as one of the best romantic actors on either screen or stage is understood by every exhibitor. That he be billed as such is beside the point, only that it should be stated that his latest picture gives him opportunities to appear at his romantic best. Bring out that the star has consented to grace the screen again after several seasons spent upon the stage and remind the audience that he has not lost his screen technique during his absence. His former pictures were principally based upon stories of an Oriental character and so highly colorful were they that Mr. Warner became one of the screen's most popular figures. Your crowd should remember his "Beggar of Cawnpore." Well, "The Man Who Turned White" is cut from the same excellent cloth. Emphasize this fact. Bring out that he assumes the character of an inscrutable Arab with equal facility of that of a European.

"THE MAYOR OF FILBERT"—TRIANGLE

Plea for Prohibition Is Offered in Fast and Furious Melodrama

WILLIAM CHRISTY CABANNE has no fear of the involved story judging from his efforts with "The Mayor of Filbert." In this argument for prohibition and clean politics which Triangle has given him, he has succeeded in providing enough action for twenty-five reels. In fact it resembles a serial, so kaleidoscopic are its many and varied scenes. And there are plots and counterplots and a large quota of characters thrown in for good measure.

The theme, as far as its prohibition angle is concerned, seems a trifle belated to appear now, inasmuch as the country becomes a Sahara on the first of July. So as propaganda it is questionable whether it can be made forceful. The other idea is based upon clean politics versus the well-known vicious brand is always perpetual propaganda if you will. And it has served for more than one good screen contribution.

But the elements that are introduced in " The Mayor of Filbert " could suffice for a half dozen photoplays. To tell them would be to become entangled in the deepest web. However, a little light must be thrown on the subject, and under its vivid glare one sees Jack Richardson in the dual role of His Honor, the vicious Mayor, and his brother, an impostor. And Jack, the disciple of wickedness, is eliminated by Jack, the apostle of virtue.

Crude and rough is the story and fast and furious is the action. Through it all the star, J. Barney Sherry, Belle Bennett and Ben Alexander manage to shine.—Length, 7 reels.—Released May 25.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

"The Mayor of Filbert," a Triangle picture starring Jack Richardson, will be the main attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. As written by Charles Francis Stocking and adapted by Daniel Carson Goodman, this picture relates the story of a vicious mayor of a Middle Western city who is controlled by evil forces and who is so strongly intrenched in office that the reformers and good citizens have no way of eliminating him except through election.

Fortunately, he meets with an accident and suffers with aphasia and turns up in a neighboring town, and a tramp who meets the reformers is so much like the absent mayor in physical resemblance that he is impressed into service on the side of the good forces. The machine does not penetrate his disguise until a few days before election and then it is too late. And so it is defeated.

The events which carry the pseudo mayor in power are highly complicated and contains a full quota of dramatic moments. How he nearly becomes lost to the reformers through the beckoning purse-strings of the machine, how he is brought back to a realization of things when a young woman influences him in the right direction, how he cleans up the ringleaders single-handed in the saloon controlled by the real mayor, how the aphasia victim turns up to reclaim his office and finds out that the election has gone to the reformers, and how the impostor tells the happy populace that he is now the real mayor and glad to be free from the cloud that has been hovering over him, are situations that make "The Mayor of Filbert" one of the strongest pictures that has ever appeared at the ——— theatre.

THE STORY

The election in Filbert, Ohio, is only three weeks off and the Civic Reform Society is determined that Johann Schmidt, a disciple of German kultur, and the present mayor of the city, shall not return to office. As he is the leader of a crooked ring and the owner of several saloons, the Prohibition party is also enlisted in the campaign of defeating him. Certain members of the allied forces call him into conference one evening and he suffers a heart attack. As he appears to be dead the reformers find no way of disposing of the body until a man enters who resembles him in every particular. And so they enlist him as an impostor of the mayor. The supposedly dead man is placed in a vault and escapes to become a victim of aphasia in a neighboring town.

Events are turning out handsomely for the reformers until the impostor realizes that more money can be obtained from the vicious element. To keep him on the right side they cleverly arrange an introduction for him with Molly Vaughan and the love that springs up in his heart is sufficient to hold him in line. She has been betrayed by Schmidt, who also is the father of her sister's illegitimate child whom she is bringing up. The little boy happens into Schmidt's saloon one day and is the object of derision until the imposter appears and cleans out the place. He is badly shaken up, however, which fact leads to his real identity. But he pulls himself together in order to rescue Molly and the boy. The real mayor recovers in the meantime and returns to exercise vengeance upon the impostor. But one of his henchmen mistakes the two men and shoots Schmidt instead. When they are brought together the fact is established that they are twins—Schmidt keeping to his German name, while his brother Americanized his to Smith. So the impostor wins the election and a charming wife in Molly.

PROGRAM READER

A story of a vicious political machine and the black eye it has given the Middle Western city it represents is depicted in "The Mayor of Filbert," a Triangle feature shortly to be seen at the ——— theatre. Written by Charles Francis Stocking, scenarioized by Daniel Carson Goodman, and produced under the direction of William Christy Cabanne, this picture promises to be one of the most powerful that the management has had the pleasure of presenting for some time. There is a big lesson taught in this story since it shows how corrupt politics can become when controlled by evil forces. It undoubtedly surpasses in dramatic strength, moral force, and involved action any recent picture that has come from Triangle. It brings out clearly the vicious influence of municipal leaders when they are controlled by equally vicious liquor forces. And before right emerges triumphant the spectator is in for a most suspensive hour.

The mayor is too powerful to be impeached and the reformers are depending upon the ensuing election to eliminate him. Fortunately he becomes a victim of aphasia and takes himself from the community and he is succeeded by his twin brother, who is honorable in every respect. The machine does not penetrate his identity until nearly election day and then it is too late to work any harm. How these highly dramatic events are evolved can only be expressed in the picture. Suffice to say that our patrons are in for a big entertainment.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a picture that carries a theme based upon prohibition. There is no mincing of matters anywhere visible. The saloon is shown to be a vicious den of vice and the powers that control it stop at nothing to make it a power for evil in the community. Since prohibition is nearly here anyway the picture may have lost some of its strength of argument, still its lesson is forceful and the impression that it leaves behind is so emphatic that it would be advisable to concentrate upon the theme and make it the big lead in your exploitation. No doubt the story hits several cities and those which have voted to eliminate liquor will send the inhabitants to see the picture. Bring out the argument that is contained here.

As for the story itself, it contains a big assortment of dramatic situations which can be found in the story, catch lines and press notice. Use some of these for their value if they are found to be necessary in your advertising scheme. But the best plan is to lay stress upon the theme, that it is an argument for prohibition. This plan will interest the feminine patrons. If you are a prohibitionist yourself, you will undoubtedly pound home the curse of drink. Otherwise it would be wise to use plenty of discretion. It

"VIRTUOUS SINNERS"—PIONEER

Story of the Slums Marred by Poor Photography

THE " virtuous " brand of titles which have adorned a few pictures of late has been further augmented by Pioneer's latest product, " Virtuous Sinners." And because there is something in a name as far as screen exploitation is concerned, the picture will undoubtedly meet with public approval.

But while the title is decidedly daring, the story is considerably tame, and whoever concocted it has resurrected the idea that served in the days of the ten, twent' and thirt' melodramas. It presents the figure of a lovely outcast who is rescued from the street and given shelter in the Mission and who shows her gratitude by remaining there and helping the poor unfortunates toward a plane of spiritual exaltation. When they are well on the road to redemption she turns her attention toward the salvation of the biggest sinner of all—a gentleman burglar who has been lured into the Mission by her voice and personality.

Human frailty is well emphasized before good is brought out of evil. The redeemed sinner must fall from grace to keep the sentiment flowing to the end. It finishes according to Hoyle. The picture does not offer a great deal beyond its characterization and atmosphere. These attributes will probably compensate for bad photography and lighting. As it is fairly true to life, it will probably invite patronage. Wanda Hawley, as the girl; Norman Kerry, as the chief sinner, and Harry Holden, as the Mission worker, furnish good performances. Emmett J. Flynn directed.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Dawn Emerson, the girl	Wanda Hawley
Eli Barker, mission worker	Harry Holden
Stool Pigeon	David Kirby
McGregor	Bert Woodruff

Directed by Emmett J. Flynn.

PRESS NOTICE

A photoplay which takes the spectator to the slums of a big city, where derelicts of humanity are rescued through the charity of a mission and the proffered sacrifices of its workers, will be presented on the ——— screen on ——— of ———week, under the title of " Virtuous Sinners." It tells the story of a downtrodden girl who is rescued from the streets by a mission worker and who, by a spirit of kindliness and benevolence, is brought to salvation. Through her personality and voice she is instrumental in carrying on the good work of the mission. The place is full of redeemed sinners with one exception—a stool pigeon, and he, through a dastardly act, in the progress of the story, is responsible for the closing up of the Rescue. This is brought about when a sinner who has been redeemed through his love for the girl commits one more burglary in order to provide funds for one of the needy.

How he goes to prison with a smile in the knowledge that his sweetheart will be waiting for him when he has served his term is expressed with fine humanity. The entire action of the story is rich in realistic detail from the time that the girl shows her gratitude for her rescuers by consenting to do uplift work, to the eventful hour when the burglar comes into her life and finds redemption. It is a human interest play and absorbing in every one of its five reels.

An excellent cast has been assembled for the picture and in the leading roles are found the personalities of Wanda Hawley and Norman Kerry. Both render fine performances. Others who lend assistance are Harry Holden, David Kirby and Bert Woodruff. Emmett J. Flynn directed.

CATCH LINES

Can a man be virtuous and still be a sinner? This question is answered in a vital picture entitled " Virtuous Sinners."

In which a gentleman burglar who travels in high society meets a girl of the slums.

When he entered the mission he resolved to live straight, but the girl he loved needed money to help a sick friend, so he committed one more crime. Was he justified in breaking the law? See " Virtuous Sinners."

The mission was filled with the dregs of humanity and not until a beautiful girl came to lighten their burden did the drab place become a princely palace.

" Virtuous Sinners "—a picture of heart throbs and sorrowful humanity.

He was a sinner and in passing the mission he heard a girl's beautiful voice. It lured him in and he chose the straight and narrow path until— See " Virtuous Sinners "—a human play realistically told.

He was a desperate criminal but he became an apostle of virtue through love and self-sacrifice. " Virtuous Sinners " presents human people, because to sin is to be human.

THE STORY

Dawn Emerson, one of the city's outcasts, is rescued from the streets and brought to the mission by McGregor, who assists Eli Barker in managing it. The two men are so solicious in caring for her that she consents to stay and help them in leading the poor unfortunates toward prosperity and salvation. One night as she is leading the congregation in singing, Hamilton Jones, a gentleman burglar, chances by and becomes so interested in the marvelous voice that he drops into the mission to discover its owner. And as he has plenty of ready money the converts are provided with their nightly drinks of coffee. The adventure is a turning point in his life, since he realizes that love has come into his life in the charming personality of Dawn. The romance that has developed between the young people arouses the enmity of the black sheep of the mission, and he abides his time in order to discredit Jones at the proper time.

His opportunity arrives when McGregor, who has been badly injured in an automobile accident, is in need of an operation to save his life, and Jones is the only man who can provide the necessary funds. As the reformed burglar has no ready cash available he starts out to ply his old profession, followed of course, by the stool pigeon. And the latter sees to it that he is captured after burglarizing a certain house. McGregor dies and Jones is sentenced to prison. When he has served part of his term he is paroled in the care of Dawn, and together they leave the mission to plan a future of happiness in their own little home.

PROGRAM READER

The management will present Pioneer Film Corporation's human interest drama, " Virtuous Sinners," as its main attraction on ——— of ——— week. The absorbing story told in this picture is one of universal appeal for it carries the spectator from the homes of the rich to the hovels of the poor. It unfolds the romance of a girl rescued from the streets and who becomes the angel of the mission, and a man, respected by society, but who burglarized in the very homes where he was a guest. Not until he happened to pass the Rescue and heard a beautiful voice did he resolve to follow the righteous path. He became the mission's most earnest worker through the love of the singer. But a time came when the man who had brought her to salvation was in desperate need of money since he had to have medical care. So the reformed burglar committed one crime in order to provide the necessary funds. The black sheep of the mission, jealous of the infatuation, brought about his capture by the police and so the burglar's romance was nipped in the bud as he went away to serve his prison sentence.

In relating the outline of the story, the management has not given an inkling of its rich assortment of details. Indeed, it teems with incident and local color and is made absorbing and picturesque as a result. Pioneer has assembled an excellent cast to interpret the story and the pleasing personalities of Wanda Hawley and Norman Kerry are found in the leading roles. Others who render fine support are Harry Holden, David Kirby and Bert Woodruff. The picture was produced under the direction of Emmett Flynn.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a picture which should make good newspaper copy since it presents a story of the slums and how effective a mission is in rescuing the flotsam and jetsam of humanity. Most every paper carries a human interest page with special writers engaged to write of the highways and byways of life, especially where they concern the poor and downtrodden. "COME OUT OF THE KITCHEN"—PARAMOUNT

Beranger Continuity Good; Acting High Class

THERE are photoplays which are photoplays and photoplays which are Sweet Photoplays. "Come Out of the Kitchen," a screen adaptation of the play of that name, is a splendid example of a Sweet Photoplay. In its original version it possessed enough red corpuscles to carry Ruth Chatterton and her successors, not forgetting the sponsors, along the road that leads to success and good dividends.

While it was a sugary recipe that was cooked up by the author and, therefore, sentimental, still it was seasoned with plenty of paprika so that it became palatable. But entered on the screen bill of fare the sparkle seems to have left it and it resembles nothing so much as soothing syrup. Which is another way of stating that sentimental dialogue that is dependent upon a single line of action and simple characterization cannot be translated into picture-drama with ordinary success, notwithstanding capable adaptation, direction and interpretation.

The piece drags interminably because it has no foundation to start with. The action discloses a series of exits and entrances through which the characters walk. They meander from the kitchen to the library and up to the attic and out to the back porch and back to the kitchen again. The concluding scene shows the hero inviting the proud family masquerading as servants to come out of the room of pots and pans and stay in the library, where they really belong.

Don't gather from this that the production is ordinary. On the contrary, the piece is well constructed as regards continuity, which is by Clara S. Baranger; the subtitles are quite effervescent with humor; the settings and locations are delightful, and the enactment of the characters is high class. Indeed, Miss Clark is a worthy pantomimic successor to Miss Chatterton. The picture will undoubtedly please feminine patrons and their brothers who have been fed with too many slices of red drama.—Length, 5 reels.—Released May 11.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

If you were to have the opportunity of seeing one of the world's foremost motion picture stars in one of the greatest stories ever written for the stage, wouldn't you jump at the chance? Well, it is coming your way and soon, too. The star? Marguerite Clark! The story? "Come Out of the Kitchen!" This is the play in which Ruth Chatterton was carried to fame almost overnight and which has delighted millions in story form and upon the stage. You really cannot afford to miss it when it is shown at the ——— theatre next ———.

It's hard enough to get girls into the kitchen these days when servants are a luxury, but it's twice as hard to get them out sometimes, especially if they are like Claudia and have a special reason for staying in the kitchen. But perhaps you would have wanted to stay in the kitchen had you been in Claudia's place. Be sure that you see how she gets out. Marguerite Clark explains how in "Come Out of the Kitchen."

Who ever heard of a girl and a beautiful one at that, too—who wanted to stay in the kitchen all the time, instead of being the real society lady that she was? Girls don't do such things today, perhaps, but there isn't a girl in the United States who wouldn't be glad of the opportunity of going into the kitchen as Claudia did? And right here we want to say that it will make any girl's heart beat double time if she were to have the opportunity of coming out of the kitchen as Claudia did, especially just now that roses and brides are in full bloom. We can't say any more without giving away the story, but Marguerite Clark tells how it happened in her newest and best picture. Miss Clark is well supported by a picked company, Eugene O'Brien being her leading man.

THE STORY

Claudia Daingerfield belongs to an aristocratic but impoverished Virginia family whose father becomes ill and it is imperative that he go to New York to be treated by a specialist. Assisted by her sister and two brothers, she manages to procure the funds necessary for the journey, but there is no money left to maintain her father and mother in the city. Randolph Weeks, who loves Claudia vainly, informs her that Burton Crane, a wealthy Northerner, desires to lease the Daingerfield home for a season of shooting for $3,000, the only condition being that the negro servants be replaced by white servitors. Claudia agrees to this, but when she learns that the white servants refuse to go to the country, she arranges with her sisters and brothers to assume the roles of servants.

Crane arrives with Solon Tucker, his lawyer, Mrs. Faulkner, a sister of the latter, and her daughter Cora, who is urged by her mother to "catch" Crane for a husband, she being unaware that her daughter is engaged to another man. Claudia is introduced to Crane as his cook and he instantly falls in love with her. This odd situation provokes numerous complications, and Claudia falls desperately in love with Crane. Claudia, whose knowledge of cuisine is quite limited, smuggles an old negro mammy into the house to do the cooking, and Crane suspects that she is concealing a sweetheart. At a dinner given by Crane to some friends, Claudia learns that her parents are coming home and she forgets to serve the various courses. Crane finds her in the kitchen and when he avows his love for her, she confesses the truth, whereupon he leads her out of the kitchen and takes her to his palatial home.

CATCH LINES

A comedy builded on new lines. Don't fail to see "Come Out of the Kitchen."

He fell in love with his cook—but she turned out to be as good as the first lady of the land after all—don't fail to see "Come Out of the Kitchen."

Marguerite Clark supported by Eugene O'Brien in a picturization of the play that made Ruth Chatterton famous.

PROGRAM READER

Any of our patrons who follow things theatrical remember the popular play, "Come Out of the Kitchen," in which Ruth Chatterton was starred. It was one of the great successes only a few seasons ago and played to big receipts in all the larger cities. That it is in pictures now is a great tribute to the energy and farsight of its producers—the Famous Players-Lasky corporation. After securing the rights of the play they awarded it to Clara Beranger to whip into scenario shape and then cast Marguerite Clark in the principal role. Under the direction of John Robertson, the delightful comedy and delicious sentiment of the original has been well brought out on the screen with the result that the picture stands as one of the best that Miss Clark has ever done. Eugene O'Brien, now a star in his own right, appears as Miss Clark's leading man.

SUGGESTIONS

In advertising "Come Out of the Kitchen" to your public consider these points:

That the play was an unusual success, playing a long season in New York and several other cities.

That Marguerite Clark is seen in the stellar role.

That Eugene O'Brien now a star in his own right, heads her supporting cast.

That the story presented offers you a number of opportunities for clever advertising owing to the locale of its central action.

That the title of the play besides being well known has a special appeal to women.

"MAN WHO TURNED WHITE"

The story offers some fine arguments for advertising.

The old theme of East versus West can be utilized again. It has never been known to fail. Bring out the aroma of the East, the lure of the Orient in your spreads and don't neglect the value of the title. There is a mysterious flavor about it that is going to arouse a whole lot of curiosity. How did he turn white? Why did he turn white? These questions played up will interest the passer-by. But the best plan in our opinion is to bring out the star's name and that he has returned to the screen. The feature will be released by Robertson-Cole under their Superior brand of pictures. Which means that this is the leader of a lot of good ones to come.

"THE LAW OF MEN"—PARAMOUNT

Enid Bennett in Ordinary Melodrama of Love and Law

THAT ancient situation of a young man convicted for murder and saved in the electric climax of a jury scene by a last minute confession of the guilty person has been utilized as the framework of this conventional melodrama, "The Law of Men," which presents Enid Bennett. Before the big moment arrives when twelve fat headed men and true pronounce him "Guilty," the star is given an opportunity to develop a romance as it is found in the Bohemian quarter of New York.

She is a sculptress who is desired by a certain philanderer, and when he offers her the familiar insult, the hero makes the foolish threat to kill him. Which, of course, leads to the young man's indictment when the profligate is murdered. His lawyer puts up a wonderful argument in his defense, which is reasonable since he is the guilty man. He well knows that suspicion will never point toward him if his client is set free.

The case goes against him, however, and the girl, sure of her lover's innocence, makes him promise to assume his guilt on the day of sentence. His confession and suicide in the courtroom explains the electric climax.

The subject never sinks into the dead level of mediocrity despite its time-worn theme. Director Niblo has seen to that. The dramatic lights are carefully emphasized, so that the suspense is always dominant. Miss Bennett is emotionally appealing, and Niles Welch fills the requirements of his role. Donald MacDonald makes a suave villain, while Andrew Robson overacted as the lawyer.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 27.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

"The Law of Men," the newest Paramount picture to feature Enid Bennett will come to the ——— screen on ——— of ——— week. It presents a story of a love affair in Greenwich Village (New York's Bohemia), and before it emerges to a fitting conclusion a novel criminal case is introduced that holds the spectator in a tight embrace. A young fellow, learning of the insults that are offered his sweetheart, threatens to kill the would-be seducer. When the man is mysteriously murdered the youth is convicted on circumstantial evidence because of his foolish threat. Sentence is to be pronounced the next day, but it is never given because it happened on the previous night that his sweetheart had made the defendant's lawyer promise to confess. There is a situation for you. The convicted man's lawyer guilty of his client's crime. How the girl in the case let nothing stop her to prove her fiance's innocence, how she caught the lawyer in the act of killing himself and wrung a confession from him, how she made him promise to clear the innocent boy next day and save him from the chair, are incidents that are dramatically told. It is an absorbing picture all the way and it presents one of the most startling climaxes ever revealed upon the screen.

Miss Bennett, usually identified with comedy parts, gives a performance marked by deep feeling in the character of the heroine. Her work is distinguished enough in this picture to warrant her being placed in dramatic roles in the future. The assisting players are Niles Welch, Andrew Robson, Dorcas Mathews and Donald MacDonald. The picture was produced under the direction of Fred Niblo from a story by John Lynch.

THE STORY

Laura Dayne, an orphan, has managed to make quite a reputation for herself as a sculptress in the Greenwich Village district of New York. She lives with a small coterie of artists and her only point of contact with the outside world is realized in the friendship of her guardian, Benton Wade, a well-known criminal lawyer. His attitude is cold and repellant toward everyone except Laura, and his affection for her is explained in the fact that her mother was the only woman he ever loved. At the mother's death he urged the girl to take charge of his home and when she refused the lonely man became enamored with a society butterfly and eventually married her. Mildred, as she is known, lives only for her own vain pleasure and it transpires that she is carrying on a liaison with Jamison Keene, an architect and a despoiler of women. When he meets Laura he immediately transfers his affections. As he knows how to be chivalrous he disarms any suspicion she may have of his intentions, and, naturally the girl accompanies him to a roadhouse.

After a desperate struggle, Laura escapes and informs Denis Connors, her fiance, of Keene's conduct. As the young man makes a foolish threat to kill him he is promptly arrested when the latter is murdered. His conviction follows and sentence is to be pronounced the next day. But Connors is released for his lawyer confesses to the crime, but avoids legal punishment by committing suicide. The attorney would have killed himself the previous night had Laura not surprised him in the attempt. She made him confess the crime and promise to assume his guilt at the appointed time. Thus the two lovers find happiness.

CATCH LINES

Enid Bennett in a story of Greenwich Village—New York's own Latin quarter.

She was intrigued by a gay Bohemian and when her fiance discovered the fact he threatened to kill the would-be seducer. And when he was charged with murder because of the threat, the lawyer who defended him was found to be the guilty man. A unique situation isn't it? See "The Law of Men," Enid Bennett's latest picture.

The lawyer put up a wonderful argument for his client in attempting to prove him innocent. He well knew that if the jury decided in his favor he would not have to stand trial for the crime of which he was guilty. But the jury decided against the defendant and the lawyer, conscious stricken over an innocent man, committed suicide.

Enid Bennett, the Ince-Paramount star, in a gripping story of love and intrigue. See "The Law of Men." It comes to the ——— theatre next ———.

Did you ever hear of a criminal case in which a lawyer defends a man for a murder of which he himself was guilty? We doubt it. That's why you should be interested in "The Law of Men." The picture carries this situation for its climax.

PROGRAM READER

Enid Bennett in "The Law of Men" will come to the ——— theatre at an early date. Miss Bennett has been chiefly associated with comedy characterizations and she has proven such a star in the Paramount constellation in light, frolicsome pieces that her appearance here in a dramatic part will occasion some surprise. Miss Bennett is going to win many new admirers through the earnestness and emotional fervor of her performance. And "The Law of Men" brings out emphatically that she is as capable in drama as in comedy. This isn't her first emotional role, though it is her heaviest one to date.

"The Law of Men" is from a story by John Lynch, and offers the star an opportunity to save her beloved from the electric chair through her faith and devotion. Everything seems black, indeed, for him even though he is innocent. How his sweetheart brings him out into the sunlight and makes the real murderer confess is a situation that carries its full dramatic value and one that should be seen to be appreciated.

The picture is beautifully mounted and the management feels its patrons will be entertained in every particular. Miss Bennett is supported by a strong cast headed by Niles Welch.

SUGGESTIONS

The big point to play up in the exploitation of this picture is the theme. Man's law may be defined in this instance as something that violates the concepts of Christianity and Blackstone. In other words, the man takes his life to protect one he has wronged. The theme is suggested, too, in the threat of the hero to kill

"THE VEILED ADVENTURE"—SELECT

A Reasonably Good Comedy with Constance Talmadge

AS far as spontaneity of action and briskness of comedy go "The Veiled Adventure" can hardly compare with previous features in which Constance Talmadge has appeared. That her every effort, however, should call for unqualified praise is not to be expected and when "The Veiled Adventure" is judged on its own merits it can well be designated as a good comedy. Written by Julia Crawford Ivers, it affords the star the role of a young woman who sets out to reform a prudish man. Before she is through with him he's running around in all sorts of circles and ready to commit any atrocity if she so wishes.

Miss Talmadge is a delight to look upon and enters into the spirit of her character with that enthusiasm that is always associated with her. Harrison Ford is again her leading man and essays the role of the prude with his accustomed sincerity and sense of comedy. The production, under the direction of Walter Edwards, has all the earmarks of good taste and refinement of the other Constance Talmadge pictures.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

PROGRAM READER

Geraldine Barker never denied she had a temper and when she discovered a grey veil in her fiance's pocket it started doing things. Nothing unusual about a grey veil at all, but when you never wear grey and can plainly see that this particular veil has been worn considerably—well then! What would you do? Geraldine Barker never did anything conventional and she didn't make an exception and stoop to the conventional in this case. What she did do is cleverly set down in "The Veiled Adventure," a delightfully human photoplay from the pen of Julia Crawford Ivers. And the star? Oh, yes. None other than Constance Talmadge—she whose enthusiasm and dash have endeared her to thousands of photoplay patrons throughout the country. If you miss her in "The Veiled Adventure," you will miss a fine comedy, by no means the least of her many contributed to the Select program. Harrison Ford is again her leading man—lucky fellow!

PRESS NOTICE

Constance Talmadge, the brilliant young comedienne of Select pictures, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest feature, entitled "The Veiled Adventure." Those who have followed Miss Talmadge's other appearances know full well what type of subject to expect when her name is announced. The light, breezy, spicy comedies in which she has been appearing have elevated her to a position in stardom that is doubtless the envy of many. "The Veiled Adventure" is of the same type as her previous comedies but presents a totally different plot. It was written specially for the star by Julia Crawford Ivers, one of the cleverest authors in the business and awards Miss Talmadge the role of a society girl, Geraldine Barker.

Geraldine is engaged, but engaged to a man she cares nothing about. When she discovers a grey veil in his pocket—a veil which she never saw before in her life—she decides that he wasn't such a good catch after all. Then she meets a Westerner, Richard Annesly, a young man who is something of a prude. He has set himself down as unable to tolerate even a white lie, as being cold toward a woman who would go through her husband's pockets and irrevocably opposed to anything approaching an elopement. Of course Geraldine doesn't hold these ideas at all and before she gets through with Richard he doesn't hold them either—but that's the comedy.

Miss Talmadge plays with her usual enthusiasm and Harrison Ford is again seen to advantage as her leading man.

THE STORY

Geraldine Barker is engaged to Reginald Crocker, not because she loves him, but because he was considered a desirable catch. One day while motoring with him she discovers a grey veil in his pocket—a grey veil which never belonged to her. Gossip and her own intuition inform her that there is another woman in the case and it doesn't take Geraldine long to discover that this woman is Mlle. Hortense, who operates a beauty establishment. Just to see whether Reginald ever comes in the shop, she rents it for a week. But Hortense and Reginald seize this opportunity to go motoring together and Geraldine's first purpose is never realized. She does, however, meet Richard Annesly from the West, and thereon hangs the tale.

Richard is a guest of her brother's and has once made it clear that he would never tolerate a lie or a theft from a woman. Moreover, he would never, never elope. Now while Geraldine might have admired these traits in a man as opposed to the more loose morals of Reginald, she sets about to make him eat his words and through a runabout series of tricks accomplishes her purpose. When it is done Richard has even lied for her, has taken the blame for a theft she committed and has asked her to elope with him.

Geraldine has taught Richard his lesson, but through it all she has been learning a lesson herself, i. e., that she doesn't love Reginald and that she does love Richard. So nothing remains but for her to break her engagement with the society man, confess her plot to the Westerner and accept his proposal of marriage. And everything is happy all around.

CATCH LINES

It was the veil in her fiance's pocket that started things. It was a grey veil and she never wore grey and moreover, that veil had been worn. Geraldine Barker didn't have an unusual temper but when she got peeved things began to move. They moved in a thoroughly delightful and humorous way in "The Veiled Adventure," Constance Talmadge's latest feature—don't miss it.

Constance Talmadge in another brisk, fascinating, spicy, wholly delightful comedy—it was made to amuse you, don't miss it.

In which a grey veil breaks an engagement and starts a real romance—one of the best comedies of the season and Constance Talmadge as the star.

SUGGESTIONS

Constance Talmadge is certainly a star that your public knows and appreciates, providing you have run any of her recent Select pictures. All box-office reports indicate that practically every one of her features have pleased. They are of a type that manage to get on very intimate terms with an audience. "The Veiled Adventure" follows right along with the rest of her pictures, presenting a high-class, polite comedy. All you need to do is to go strong on her name and make mention of the fact that the picture is another in the comedy series. Refer back to some of her best hits at your house, drawing a parallel between them and this one as regards type, etc.

The veil idea seems to be the predominating one in regard to advertising this story. Veils might be used as favors for women holding special numbers, a dance might open the feature and any special hangings for your theatre could be made of the slight material of veils. Harrison Ford is a good bet. He has played in so many of Miss Talmadge's pictures that some people are beginning to regard the two as a team.

"THE LAW OF MEN"

the man who is later put out of the way by the suicide. Here is a unique idea and it should be played up emphatically. Think of it. A young fellow is placed on trial for murder on circumstantial evidence because he threatened to kill his enemy. His lawyer is the guilty man, and he endeavors to save himself by clearing the boy, knowing that he will never be tried if the latter goes free. But the case goes against him, and the boy's sweetheart wrings a confession from him and he kills himself in a crowded courtroom just as his client is about to be sentenced.

Here is an idea that should be worked to the limit. Build your advertising around it. Present it in a forceful way and make it brief and to the point. You can drive it home better. Invite lawyers to a private showing and get their viewpoint and whether they agree or not, their endorsement will invite patronage. Star, director and supporting players are well known. Use their names. Miss Bennett appears as a dramatic actress here and gives a good account of herself. Mention this fact.

"CASTLES IN THE AIR"—METRO

May Allison in a Pleasing Sentimental Picture

"CASTLES IN THE AIR," an adaptation of a Saturday Evening Post story by Kate Jordan, is another picture relying heavily on its sentimental interest for success. May Allison, the star, is seen as an usher in a New York theatre, who builds castles in the air and dreams that some day she will be wooed and won by a true gentleman of romance. When an English lord comes along, invites her to supper and forces himself upon her, she reforms him—and then finds his wife for him. Afterwards she realizes what a good fellow the theatre manager has been all the time and accepts him.

Miss Allison has been seen in some fine comedies heretofore, and "Castles in the Air" is somewhat of a departure for her. Personally we think her forte lies in the comedy direction, although the least that can be said about this picture is that it pleases after a modest fashion.

Ben Wilson is seen as the star's leading man and gives a good performance. The production furnished the picture by George D. Baker is thoroughly realistic and includes some well done theatre scenes and a good night rainstorm.—Length, 5 reels.—Released May 12.—Peter Milne.

Castles in the Air! We all build them some time or another and everyone builds them according to his own style—the architecture is never the same. Fortuna Donnelly was only an usher in the Halcyon theatre where a musical comedy was playing. When she wasn't showing members of New York society to their seats she was building her castles in the air. Regrettably her castles were founded on pretty poor stuff. "A Bar Maid's Romance" was her favorite piece of fiction and she thought that maybe some gallant would come and whisk her off to wealth and luxury. She thought of this so much that she quite overlooked a sincere love that was offered her by the manager of the theatre—but the one day her gallant came. But Fortuna discovered something about life that wasn't so airy. What she discovered is prettily depicted in the Metro picture, "Castles in the Air," which will shortly be shown at this theatre. In it May Allison is starred. The picture is a Saturday Evening Post adaptation by Kate Jordon and was produced under the direction of George D. Baker.

PRESS NOTICE

May Allison, the Metro favorite will be seen again at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest picture entitled "Castles in the Air." "Castles in the Air" is an adaptation from Kate Jordon's recent story in the Saturday Evening Post and is a sentimental little story regarding an usher in one of New York's big theatres. Her name is Fortuna and when she isn't showing people to their seats she spends her time reading such elegant literature as "The Bar Maid's Romance" and wondering why no gallant ever comes for her and makes her his bride. So busy is she building vain castles in the air that she quite overlooks the sincere love offered her by Eddie Lintner, the manager of the theatre. And then one day the gallant appears in the person of the Honorable Owen Pauncefort.

He is attracted by Fortuna and invites her to his house for a supper party. She accepts and the consequence—? Those are only to be seen in the concluding reels of the picture. Suffice it to say here that "Castles in the Air" takes no conventional turns. The Honorable Owen turns out to be quite a good fellow after all—he only needed a little softening influence in his life to make a real man of him again—and this Fortuna furnished. But her romance takes in Eddie and not the gentleman of title.

Miss Allison is thoroughly charming in the stellar role and receives excellent support from Ben Wilson as Eddie Lintner and Walter I. Percival as the lord. The picture was produced under the direction of George D. Baker, Metro's director-in-chief.

THE STORY

Fortuna is a young lady who occupies a hall bedroom and, in the daytime, reads such thrilling works of literature as "A Bar Maid's Romance." Nights and matinee day afternoons she is usher at the Halcyon theatre wearing a cute little Dutch costume in keeping with the show, "Anne of Amsterdam." It is Fortuna's dream that some day a gallant will come and claim her even as the bar maid was claimed, and such seems to be the case at last when the Honorable Owen Pauncefort attends the theatre and is attracted by her. Despite the warning of the manager, Eddie Lintner, who loves her, Fortuna accepts Owen's invitation to a midnight supper at his house. Eddie follows and remains without in the pouring rain until he is forced to go to his home seriously ill.

Inside after the repast Owen attempts to embrace the girl, but she resists him. His better nature seems to assert itself and he apologizes. Then he tells her that he is married and that he is married and that he has hunted a long time for his wife who left him after a quarrel. He shows Fortuna her picture. On another night Fortuna recognizes a beautiful woman as Owen's wife and hastily summons him to the theatre. A reconciliation is effected and Fortuna is very happy over it.

Then she learns of Eddie's illness and only then does she realize what he means to her. She hastens to his bedside and there expresses her love for him. And this proves just the proper medicine for Eddie. He gets well in no time and then there is a wedding.

CATCH LINES

We all build castles in the air—they are all different. Fortuna Donnelly's were rather crude but they were wonderful to her—see them in "Castles in the Air."

Castles in the Air are made of nothing until they come tumbling down about your ears—then they hurt. Fortuna Donnelly's fell pretty hard but they taught her a lesson—see "Castles in the Air."

One of the prettiest stories ever told—an adaptation from Kate Jordon's Saturday Evening Post story—and May Allison in the star part.

A romance that began in a theatre aisle.

She was told that gentlemen of title didn't pick brides from the theatre aisles but she disregarded this truth and accepted an invitation to dinner with the Honorable Owen Pauncefort! See "Castles in the Air."

Romance never happened outside of books, she thought, but she forgot to look right under her nose—see "Castles in the Air."

SUGGESTIONS

Catch lines built on the title of the feature will go well as advertising arguments for this feature. Illustrations for newspaper advertising or for special lobby decoration will also suffice. This title has a strong touch of romance in it and will attract owing to this and to the fact that it is a common evpression. Make all use of it, then. Build your arguments and pictures around it and play it up as the dominating thing in your advertising outside the name of the star.

Miss Allison has done some good comedies for Metro of late and "Castles in the Air" should be welcomed by those of your patrons who have seen her last two or three pictures. Mention some of them in order to freshen their memories; go strong on her name and the elaboration of the title.

"VIRTUOUS SINNERS"

an article based on the plot or this story. And have it illustrated with electros of the featured players and scenes if space will permit. Certainly such a plan would make interesting reading because pathos and sympathy are easily assimilated by the human family. If you carry a good advertising contract with your paper you should have no trouble in gaining an ear on the idea suggested. Another plan which might work to advantage is found in the title. It sure enough is a winner and given good display is sure to attract .attention.

The producer offers a splendid scheme to advertise the title which is to take the definition of the two words, Virtue and Sinner, and underneath them ask this question: "Can a man or woman answer to both of these descriptions at one and the same time?" The dictionary will supply you with the definition. Your artist can show his talent in what the title implies and he can gain his idea from the catch lines. They have been written for the purpose of paper and lobby spreads. Lastly feature the stars. Your crowd will recognize Miss Hawley as the leading woman of some of the biggest players on the screen, while Mr. Kerry has appeared as Constance Talmadge's leading man.

"THIN ICE"—VITAGRAPH

Corinne Griffith Splendid in Sustaining Melodrama

SHANNON FIFE provided Corinne Griffith's latest picture, entitled "Thin Ice." It is a melodramatic number dealing with a girl-wife who is compromised by foul means by a bucket-shop operator and whose efforts to extricate herself and her brother from this man's toils lead to a series of sustaining incidents that make the picture powerful indeed. The climax, in particular, is well worked out, containing, as it does, one surprise after another, the while maintaining the suspense at a high pitch.

Miss Griffith is appealing in the featured role. Again does she wear some perfectly exquisite gowns, always making a stunning appearance. Henry G. Sell leads the supporting cast with a likable characterization of the hero, while Jack McLean as the weakling brother and L. Rogers Lytton as the heavy are good.

There are times that "Thin Ice" gives evidence of having been hacked rather mercilessly by the editor. In two or three places the action is rough and changes of time and locale are bridged in a clumsy manner. But on the whole "Thin Ice" is a good melodrama, intricate, cleverly evolved and well developed.—Length, 5 reels.—Released May 26.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Alice Winton	CORINNE GRIFFITH
George Winton	Charles Kent
Ned Winton	Jack McLean
Benjamin Graves	L. Rogers Lytton
Paul Rooks	Walter Horton
Rose La Vere	Eulalie Jensen
Robert Burton	Henry G. Sell
Jeffrey Miller	Walter Miller
Jocelyn Miller	Alice Terry

Scenario by G. Marion Burton.
Directed by Tom Mills.

SUGGESTIONS

In presenting Corinne Griffith pictures you can not dwell with too great stress on the beauty of the star. Without doubt she is one of the prettiest, if not the prettiest girl in pictures today. Superlatives may be used justifiably then. For the benefit of your feminine patrons you should mention the wonderful array of gowns worn by the star. They are unusually stunning and will attract. An effective lobby display could be arranged by selecting those stills in which she appears in these gowns for exhibition. Advertisements should carry a pose of her one of them.

The story can be advertised in arguments following along the lines laid down in the catch lines. You should be able to work up a good deal of interest by relating different episodes of the picture in advertisements, stopping at a dramatic moment. The supporting cast from Henry G. Sell (recently seen opposite Pearl White in a Pathe serial), down throughout the rest, contains names of players for a long time popular with the public. To overlook the value of these names before an audience of picture followers would be poor business.

PRESS NOTICE

Corinne Griffith, the beautiful young Vitagraph star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on —— of ——— week in her latest feature picture entitled "Thin Ice." This was written expressly for her by Shannon Fife, an author whose works have long been appearing on the screen and with great success. Mr. Fife has prepared a vehicle of the utmost dramatic suspense for Miss Griffith, dealing as it does with certain phases of criminology. The heroine, Alice Winton, though perfectly innocent of any wrongdoing, becomes entangled in a fateful web laid by two swindlers and bucket-shop promoters. When, however, nothing becomes of this tangle, Alice feels perfectly safe in marrying Robert Burton. Burton, however, is a man whose views on criminology are quite old fashioned. Once a crook, always a crook, is his creed.

So when the bucket shop men get in trouble they call upon Alice to help them out of their hole, threatening her brother with a jail sentence unless she complies with their wishes. It can be seen from this brief outline of events leading up to the climax, that the denouement of "Thin Ice" is exceedingly powerful. Miss Griffith appears to good advantage in all her emotional scenes and is surrounded by a cast of exceptional merit, including Henry G. Sell, L. Rogers Lytton, Jack McLean, Walter Miller, Alice Terry, Eulalie Jensen and Charles Kent.

The picture was produced under the direction of Tom Mills.

PROGRAM READER

Corinne Griffith, the beautiful Vitagraph favorite, will shortly be seen at this theatre in her latest production entitled "Thin Ice." This is an absorbing story of society life and the birds of prey who endeavor to subsist off the less wary members of the upper class. Miss Griffith is seen to splendid advantage both as to acting and as to general appearance—for she wears some unusually stunning gowns. "Thin Ice" was written by Shannon Fife, one of the leading authors of the screen. Mr. Fife, by the way, was only recently discharged from the army and he brings with him to the sceren a vast fund of new material of which "Thin Ice" is the first sample. If succeeding efforts of his measure up to this one there can be little doubt as to his reestablishment in the picture field. Among Miss Griffith's supporting cast are Henry G. Sell, Walter Miller, Charles Kent, Jack McLean and L. Rogers Lytton. The picture was produced under the direction of Tom Mills.

THE STORY

Alice Winton is the devoted daughter of a man in constant ill health. Her worries are multiplied by her brother whose losses at the races cause him to alter his employer's books. The employer, Graves, is a promoter of bad stocks and when Alice comes to him to plead for her brother he forces her to sign a promissory note. The stock in which Mr. Winton is a large share holder is manouvered by Graves so that the old man loses all his money. The shock causes his death. Ned Winton, sent to Arizona by Graves, to be safely out of the way, can not be found by Alice. After a short time she marries Robert Burton, a student of criminology, who holds no sympathy for any who commit crime against established laws..

The Burtons makes their temporary home with Miller, the young district attorney, who holds in his safe evidence sufficient to convict Graves. Graves learns of Alice's new situation and tells her that unless she brings him the evidence he will send her brother to prison. He also shows her forged love notes purporting to be addressed to him from her. In deadly fear Alice agrees. That night, however, Ned is brought to the house by Miller and Burton. The former aims to prove that a criminal will reform if well treated; the latter insists on the contrary. Ned hears Alice descend the stairs and when she touches the safe an alarm goes off. He takes the blame and flees. Alice, believing he will go to Graves, hastens to his house and finds him dead. She believes her brother guilty.

However everything turns out for the best when Rose La Vere, Graves' cast off mistress, enters and confesses the crime and tells the secret of the forged letters.

CATCH LINES

In which the evil forces who guide the political wheel of a Middle Western city are put to rout through a spirit of civic pride and orderliness.

The mayor stood for German kultur and all that the word implied. It was difficult to eliminate him because of his leadership over the vicious element. But he became a victim of aphasia and fortunately for the reformers his twin brother arrived on the scene and gave the town a thorough cleaning up. A corking melodrama and one full of startling situations and climaxes.

"AN AMATEUR WIDOW"—WORLD

World Offers an Exceedingly Pleasant Comedy

HERE is a comedy that will give good satisfaction to all. The author, Joseph Franklin Poland, has evolved a clever plot and developed it by way of some original situations, situations from which a lot of good humor has been derived. Not only does the action itself amuse, but it is bolstered up with a fine assortment of subtitles, humorous in themselves and exactly in keeping with the character of the story.

Zenna Keefe, a star new to World pictures, but who has been seen in various other releases, is featured. She gives a thoroughly likable characterization of the heroine who runs away from a score or more of sad relations and into a score or more of humorous complications. Hugh Dillman is seen as her leading man and plays the part realistically.

Oscar Apfel, in his direction of the picture, has achieved a number of fine comedy touches. The scenes centering about the rural fire department are exceptionally well handled considering that they have been done so many times before. And the comedy he derives from the old relations of the heroine is of the best. All in all it's an entertainment that will thoroughly please.—Length, 5 reels.—Released May 26.—Peter Milne.

PROGRAM READER

Rhoda Canby was in a serious predicament. She had no peace of mind owing to the presence of a score or more of old relatives in her household wh were patintly waiting for her to inherit her fortune. They finally encroached on her nerves to such an extent that she packed up and left—for—for Booneville, Va., because that was the first town that came to her mind. When she arrived there she thought it would be better to don a wedding ring and pose as a widow. And she chose a name—Irving Mason, Mrs. Irving Mason. And then she discovered that the relatives of Mr. Mason, himself supposedly deceased, lived in Booneville. Here were more! And then Irving Mason returned! Comedy galore, much of it, in "An Amateur Widow," the latest World Film comedy which will be shown at the theatre shortly. It was written by Joseph Franklin Poland, a prolific author, it stars Zena Keefe, an actress new to World Pictures and was produced under the direction of Oscar Apfel.

PRESS NOTICE

Zena Keefe, a star new to World pictures, makes her appearance at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her first release of that company's entitled "An Amateur Widow." Miss Keefe is an actress of considerable ability and not a little charm and the stellar role of this picture fits her remarkably well. The subject is a comedy and was written by that prolific author, Joseph Franklin Poland. It deals with a young lady who had too many relations. Uncles and aunts and cousins she numbered by the dozens. She finally contrived to rid herself of them by escaping to a little southern town and posing as a widow.

But what was her surprise to find that the name she had chosen belonged to one of the young men of the town who had been reported a suicide. Then she had his relations to bother with—and then the young man returned. The consequences of such a situation can not be well brought out in cold type. Suffice it to say that Mr. Poland has developed his story with a fine eye to its humorous possibilities and all the comedy of the various situations has been well realized on the screen under the guiding directorial hand of Oscar Apfel.

Miss Keefe is supported by Hugh Dillman in the opposite role. Mr. Dillman is a newcomer to the screen but exceedingly well and favorably known on the speaking stage. Others who appear are: Jack Drumier,, William Black, Pauline Dempsey, Mary B. Davis and Eugenia Woodward.

THE STORY

Rhoda Canby, who inherits a fortune on becoming of age, is pestered by a large collection of old maid aunts, old maid uncles and the like. They give her no peace whatsoever about the house and finally she decides to take matters into her own hands and depart for other parts. Previously she had entered upon something of a flirtation with Irving Mason, a good-for-nothing, who had given her a false name. On the very same night that Rhoda and old Aunt Chole (black and not a relation) depart for a little town in Virginia, Mason filled up with liquor, decides to end his life and makes his way to the pier. As he teeters on the edge a couple of longshoremen see him and shanghai him aboard a tramp steamer. It proves alter all the best thing for Irving for before the steamer again makes port he has rounded into a real man.

In the meantime Rhoda, believing the safety lies in wedding rings, has secured one and when she is asked to give a name at the Virginia town she happens to look at the paper she holds in her hand and sees an account of Irving Mason's supposed suicide. "Mrs. Irving Mason," she says sweetly! Whereupon she is gathered unto the bosom of the little town for Mason's relatives, who operate a store there, insist on caring for his widow! But this time Rhoda enjoys her relations. She puts the store on a paying basis and warms the hearts of Mason's two old uncles.

When he returns on the night of a fire in the store and rescues her there is a complication that might have been severe if Mason had not loved the girl all the time. And so the young man marries his widow!

SUGGESTIONS

The title and the various comedy angles you can derive from it are the main things to play up as regards this picture. "An Amateur Widow" should get people talking and if you play on it with catch lines that make it even more mystifying and funny you should have the people coming. "He fell in love with his widow," the first catch line printed elsewhere on this page, is not a bad one to follow the title. It suggests comedy and at the same time veils the real character of the plot. Use the relation stuff too. It's an idea that will have a popular appeal.

Zena Keefe is not a well known star but she has been seen in many pictures in roles of varying importance. It would be a good idea to bring out the fact that Oscar Apfel put the picture on as he has been responsible for some of the best World pictures released in the past.

How would you like Mr. Filmgoer to be down in your luck and wander into a strange town and made its mayor simply because you resembled him in face and form, but not in character? How would you like to be torn with conflict whether to follow the upright standard or the evil ones, since either choice spelled a princely sum? "ALL WRONG"—PATHE

Bryant Washburn Stars in a Picture of Platonic Love

THE author of Bryant Washburn's new photoplay, "All Wrong," has bit on the germ of a good idea albeit one that takes a lot of nourishment to thrive. To build a fast moving comedy around the theme of platonic love and to keep it zippy all the way is a difficult achievement. That everyone concerned in the production has done wonders to make it entertaining is proven in the manner that it scores.

While it is not up to the star's previous pieces under the Pathe banner still it isn't far enough behind to warrant anyone calling it inferior. The only flaw is found in the frothy character of the idea which is not substantial enough to spread itself through five reels. There seems to be too much concentration on it in the middle of the story so that the characterization sinks right out of sight. But the thing picks up and finishes with a breezy flourish.

Mr. Washburn has his own theory of how love can endure. And he practises this Unending Courtship even after his marriage. What is it? Simply the idea that a man should see his wife as little as possible, or rather that the couple should live apart and follow the plan of the courtship days. In the end he is brought to terms through the old process of jealousy.

The star is moving all the time in the picture and keeps up his comedy expression. He is ably assisted by competent players.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

"All Wrong," a Pathe comedy featuring Bryant Washburn, will be the main attraction on the bill of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This was written expressly for the star by Mildred Considine and produced under the direction of William Worthington and Raymond West. It affords the popular comedian the role of Warren Kent, a salesman, who is all the time coming to the fore with an "original" idea. Warren is in love with Betty and he wants to marry yet at the same time he has no desire to sever his relations of the happy courtship with her. So he conceives the idea of the "Unending Courtship." Betty and he are married but continue to live apart. He calls on her as he did in the olden days.

Such a state of affairs, however, can not last long and the complications that arise from the Unending Courtship idea are funny in the extreme and manifold in number. Mr. Washburn, as skilled a comedian as any on the screen today, handles all his material with a fine appreciation of its humorous possibilities and as a result derives the most from his role. He receives support of a similar high order for Mildred Davis, Charles Bennett, Helen Dunbar, Fred Montague and Marguerite Livingston.

Jack Cunningham, a feature writer of note, adapted Miss Considine's story to the screen, while it was produced under the direction of William Worthington and Raymond West. It is one of the best comedies in which Mr. Washburn has appeared from every standpoint and should not be missed by any of his many admirers.

PROGRAM READER

The Unending Courtship was the clever trick that Warren Kent evolved. And you naturally ask, "What may an unending courtship be?" Well, it's this way. Warren had seen much of marital unhappiness and decided that the trouble was that the perfect state of the courtship should be continued on through married life, then there would be no serious quarrels and everything would be happy all around. As a result he proceeded to take unto himself a wife, Betty by name, and install her in a separate apartment and pay her regular calls as he used to do before they were man and wife! The thing is was the Unending Courtship idea a success? You know the answer all right but you don't know the manner in which it is arrived at. That is shown in "All Wrong," one of the brightest comedies ever released and with Bryant Washburn as the star. It was written for him by Mildred Considine and produced under the direction of William Worthington and Raymond West. It's healthy to laugh so be healthy.

THE STORY

Warren Kent, a salesman, possesses a large bump of originality and the latest of his conceptions he calls the Unending Courtship. No conventional marriage will do for him. He marries Betty, the girl of his heart and, on their honeymoon, takes separate rooms. And then from his to hers he courts her just as he did before they were married. Warren succeeds in persuading Betty that this is a fine idea but when they return to the city other people think that Warren is rather balmy. And they have good reason to think so for again does Warren insist on separate quarters for himself and his wife. The idea amazes Betty's parents and displeases Warren's boss who promptly fires him after he has failed on a large order.

He goes to Betty's room searching for consolation and instead finds a baby's sock in her work basket. Believing himself about to become a father, he is overenjoyed, dashes out, lands the large order and is reinstated by his employer, who hears the story of the coming heir. Later, however, Warren learns that the sock was for the wash woman's baby. All the toys he bought are wasted and he is obliged to bluff the whole office force in order to hold his job.

A salesman off the road makes his headquarters in Warren's apartment and he, quite innocently enough, brings sense to Warren's feeble mind. While Warren is out Betty goes to his rooms to surprise him—and he goes to hers. He finds there her chum and Betty, after retiring, discovers that other salesman. Pandemonium reigns supreme for a while, but matters are finally straightened out and Warren decides to end his "courtship" then and there.

SUGGESTIONS

You can get a lot of good comedy into your advertising by developing "The Unending Courtship" idea which we have stressed throughout the other branches of this plan book. Look over the catch lines and the program reader and see if this idea won't fit in your own advertising. Bring out the comedy possibilities of the picture in every conceivable way you can. The title offers you another good point to develop. Pictures of the star in a dismayed attitude, beneath it or over it, will serve to drive home the comedy and accentuate the laughs.

Play up Bryant Washburn—he has been doing some fine comedies lately for Paramount as well as Pathe. Refer to some of his other pictures and then concentrate on advertising the story of this one.

"A BACHELOR'S WIFE—AMERICAN"

Mary Miles Minter Assumes an Irish Role in Her Latest Picture

IRISH character studies are quite appropriate for the ingenues of the screen, the latest member of the younger set to try her skill at playing one of Erin's daughters being Mary Miles Minter. And she plays with enough spirit to invite comparison with any member of her class.

We are glad to note that the author did not make his subject into a costume play as the introductory scenes indicated, but transferred his line of action to America. He placed his characters in a domestic mix-up where they succeeded in turning out a sentimental comedy. Mistaken identity regarding a little son of the rich, two girls from the ould sod, and a baby, forms the crux of the situation.

It is Miss Minter's mission to put things right, and she does it by taking the infant to its father's home and compelling him to take an interest in his family. But before he sees the light, his cousin who bears the same name is placed under a cloud of suspicion as the real husband and father.

The picture while of a light character manages to hold together fairly well. If it occasionally falters in interest this should not detract from its note of appeal. The plot running in a single groove provides the let-down in spontaneity of action, and there is not sufficient contrast in characterization to balance it completely. Yet it manages to serve its brief hour with plenty of satisfaction. Emmett J. Flynn was the master of ceremonies.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PROGRAM READER

When is a bachelor a husband? When he's a married man? Well, usually, but not so with John Stuyvesant, the hero of this tale. John returned from the west to his mother's home in New York to discover her talking about how nice his wife was and how sweet was their baby! Certainly John was mystified. To his knowledge he had never been married and yet Mary—the Mrs. John Stuyvesant in the case—had a marriage license and everything—including of course the baby—to prove that he was. A merry fix indeed for a freedom loving bachelor to find himself in! What was the way out. How could a bachelor possibly divorce his wife? It was rather difficult, to say the least, and the more John thought about it the hotter he grew under the collar and about the ears. He wasn't used to blushing as a rule, but this time—well, things were somewhat different. The outcome of this humorous story is told in Mary Miles Minter's next comedy, "A Bachelor's Wife," which is one of the pictures shortly to be shown at this theatre. It was written for the star by Joseph Franklin Poland, a comedy author of note, and produced under the direction of Emmett Flynn. From every standpoint it is one of the best comedies in which Miss Minter has appeared.

PRESS NOTICE

Mary Miles Minter, the American star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest comedy-drama entitled "A Bachelor's Wife." This is considered one of the best pictures in which she has appeared recently as its complications are manifold and of an exceedingly humorous nature. "A Bachelor's Wife" was written specially for Miss Minter by Joseph Franklin Poland, one of the leading comedy authors of the day and he has evolved an unusually clever and original story around the young star's talents.

Miss Minter carries the role of Mary O'Rourke who comes to America from Ireland to visit her sister. She finds her the mother of a small baby and deserted by her husband, one John Stuyvesant. She takes the infant in her arms and marches to the home of the Stuyvesants and demands justice just the way they do in a melodrama. The trouble is that Mary didn't count her John Stuyvesants correctly. There were two of them and she picked on the wrong one! The complications that follow can best be imagined—or better yet seen at the ——— theatre.

Miss Minter is surrounded by a competent supporting cast including Alan Forrest, Harry Holden, Myrtle Reeves, Lydia Knott, Charles Spere and Margaret Shelby, while the production was in charge of Director Emmett J. Flynn.

THE STORY

Mary O'Rourke comes from Ireland to visit her sister, Norah. Norah is the mother of a young baby and has been deserted by her husband. She learns that the miscreant husband is named John Stuyvesant and, taking the baby, marches into the Stuyvesant home. There she confronts the astonished lady of the house with the statement: "This is your son's baby." The doctor warns Mary that Mrs. Stuyvesant is an invalid and susceptible to shocks and having survived the shock of being presented with a grandson, Mrs. Stuyvesant discovers herself very pleased with the baby and Mary—whom she takes for its mother.

Mary is forced to play the part inasmuch as she is afraid of shocking the venerable lady to death and she remains in the household. Shortly afterwards John Stuyvesant and his cousin, J. Frederick Stuyvesant, return from the west. John is dumbfounded at being confronted with a wife and a son! However, he, too, is forced to keep silent, lest the shock prove too great for his mother. Genevieve always thought that John was going to marry her and demands that he prove his innocence now by doing so.

They arrange for a marriage the next day but Mary discovers it and with J. Frederick seeks to stop it. Mary produces the license and John is astounded to see his cousin's name thereon. J. Frederick admits all and says he was keeping silent until his inheritance would come along. All of which clears matters up considerably and then John discovers that he doesn't really like Genevieve and that he loves Mary, so what could be a sweeter ending?

CATCH LINES

When is a bachelor a husband? When he's a married man? As a rule, yes. But not in the present case. John Stuyvesant finds a wife and baby waiting for him when he arrived home and to his knowledge he had never married—but there was a license to prove it! See "A Bachelor's Wife," one of the sprightliest comedies of the season.

Another Mary Miles Minter comedy. She comes from Ireland to inherit a baby and a husband! See "A Bachelor's Wife."

"THE NEW MOON"

A tragic breath from Russia as life is lived there today. That is "The New Moon." See Norma Talmadge give an emotional rendition of the Russian soul.

"The New Moon" which presents Norma Talmadge was directed by Chester Withey, one of the leading directors of the day.

SUGGESTIONS

Aside from the drawing power of the star's name, you have good advertising value in the plot of this story. It is extremely timely since it relates a form of Red rule in Russia. Most of your patrons know, if they read the papers, that women are being nationalized and that they are to become the property of the State. In their Utopian dream the rulers consider marriage as a blight and that men and women should live in common law relation. Use this theme in your advertising. Your patrons won't recognize it as a familiar picture pattern. It is highly original and still it is true. Bring this point out. Tell them they are in for an exposition of Russian life as it is lived today.. Tell them they will gain an insight into the revolution and what has come from it.

The story has some tragic moments, but don't give them away, as your sensitive patrons may be shocked. Simply dwell on the theme that women are bartered off in Russia like so many cattle. That they are looked upon for the purpose of propagation. As for the star, every story given out about her is eagerly read, because she has a great place in the hearts of the screen public. Use stills of her and the picture. And don't neglect to furnish brief catch lines that suggest the import of the story. Played up properly, it is going to excite a whole lot of attention. Russia is a land of mystery and everyone likes to know what the life is beyond its borders. And especially so since the revolution. The members of the cast are well known to your fan crowd. You might use them to advantage.

"KHAVAH"—ZION FILMS

Too Long and Poorly Titled, But May Find Appeal Before Jews

"KHAVAH" is the first of the Zion Films, presenting adaptations of the works of Sholon Aleichem, advertised as the Jewish Mark Twain. The picture tells a story of the old Russia, a romance in which a Jewish girl and a Christian boy are the principals. They marry despite the word of the girl's parents and, though happy for a time, the wife soon discovers that she is unable to live amicably with her husband's people. It's incompatibility of temperament all around and the romance ends a tragedy when the wife denounces her husband and goes into exile with her father and mother.

Probably "Khavah" will score successfully in houses that cater to Jewish audiences. As a piece of pictorial entertainment, however, it falls short. It is far too long in the first place, while its subtitles are very poorly written. The acting of the cast is keyed at a high emotional pitch throughout and much of the power of the story is lost owing to a lack of shading in the characterizations. Let it be cut, retitled and shown again. Before it is shown to any audience these remedial faults should be eliminated.

The cast is headed by Alice Hastings, who performs the title role with a strong show of feeling.—Length, 7 reels.—Peter Milne.

PROGRAM READER

The old world is still struggling with problems that have been more or less successfully solved by the new. One of these centers about the question of race prejudice. For instance is it possible for Jew and Gentile to marry and to continue to lead a happy existence? It is such a question that "Khavah" takes up. "Khavah" is an adaptation of one of the works of Sholom Aleichem, the renowned Jewish author, and will shortly be shown at this theatre. From the standpoint of dramatic merit, the picture ranks exceedingly high, inasmuch as the story, written by a Jew, has been enacted largely by a cast of Jewish players. As a consequence, these people have been able to grasp the full significance of the author's message, presenting it on the screen vitally and realistically. The large cast is headed by Alice Hastings, formerly leading woman in the stage play, "Turn to the Right," and Alex Tennenholtz. The picture has been carefully produced and gives a wonderful insight into Russian life before it was so radically affected by the war.

PRESS NOTICE

"Khavah," a seven-reel production made by Zion Films from a story of the same name by Sholom Aleichem, the renowned Jewish author, will be the main attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. "Khavah" is laid in the old Russia, in a corner of the Ukraine and tells of the love of Khavah, a Jewess, for Fedka, a Christian. Despite the objections of their parents, objections which are more than mere protests from Khavah's family, they are married. By the predictions of the older folk hold true. The temperaments of the young people vary so that before long their happiness has flown. And it is made all the more difficult for Khavah owing to the fact that she is obliged to live with Fedka's parents and suffer various indignities from them. In the end they separate, Khavah prefering to go with her father, mother and sister into exile than remain with a family with whom she has nothing in common.

The picture has been carefully produced, all the high lights of the original works having been well preserved in the pictured version. The locations are true to life, a fact which all those who have seen Russia, will readily admit. The leading roles are very carefully taken by a cast of selected players. Alice Hastings, who scored success on the legitimate stage in the popular production "Turn to the Right" essays the title role and gives an emotional performance worthy indeed of her fame. Alex Tenneholtz, Giacomo Masuroff and Phil Sanford appear in other important roles, acting with fine regard to type.

SUGGESTIONS

In preparing this plan book the idea has been to offer suggestions as regards advertising to the exhibitor that will have a direct appeal to Jews. All of your newspaper advertisements then should bring out the fact that "Khavah" is based on a story by Sholom Aleichem, the Jewish author. This together with the statement of the fact that it is a story of old Russia, taking place in the Ukraine, and dealing with the incompatability of temperament between a Jewish wife and a Christian husband, should prove of special interest to those Jews who are of strictly orthodox faith. Don't be afraid to play up the fact that the marriage did not turn out successfully. The same idea has been used in plays time and again and was never criticized adversely on this account.

Mention of the names of the leading members of the cast will also mean something to these audiences particularly if you dwell on the fact that Alice Hastings, the featured member, took the leading role in "Turn to the Right." If these suggestions are followed there seems to be small reason why the picture should not score successfully before Jewish audiences.

THE STORY

Khavah, daughter of Tobias, a Jew, loves Fedka, the son of a Christian elder in a little Russian village. Tobias is looked upon as the sage of the village and is a student of the Talmud. When he learns that his daughter desires to stray from the religion of her forefathers, he determines to save her from herself and arranges for her to marry the son of a Jewish merchant. But Khavah knows her own mind and refuses to accede to her father's wishes and runs off with Fedka. Tobias is apprised of this after the ceremony is performed and reaches the church in time to see Khavah carried off by the merry wedding guests. Upon his return home Tobias informs the family that Khavah has married a Christian and that therefore she is lost to them forever.
